A Court-Martial is expected to assemble at Sheer next week, to inquire into the conduct of Lieut. C. T. late commanding the Alban in the Mediterranean.

Various speculations are afloat as to the extent of th crease of the navy, and who will be appointed to comma It is most probable, however, that eight sail of the line be commissioned, and the recruiting additional seamen be employed in frigates and smaller vessels. If they a be formed into a squadron, and kept at home ready for exigency, a Vice and a Rear-Admiral, it is said, will their flags; and in the club-houses, Sir P. Malcolm a to be fixed on for the former. If they should be disp to different stations, and the only squadron be an e rimental one, for the trial of the qualities of certain in the autumn, or first three months of next winter, S Maitland will be employed for that special service.

Hon. Capt Bouverie will, it is supposed, get the command of the Vanguard; the Hon. Capt. Rous will certainly command the Pique; and rumour sends Capt. T. B. Sullivan, in the Sting, as Commodore in the South Seas. The other officers spoken of to command ships, are Capts. Elliot, Barrie, Hon. Sir A. Maitland, J. Coghlio, Sir R. C. Hamilton, M. F. F. Berkeley, and H. W. Bruce. Vice-Admiral Coghill, M. F. F. Berkeley, and H. W. Bruce. Vice-Adm. Sir C. Rowley is pushing hard for the Mediterranean command; but probably the talked-of Baronetcy to the gallant Admiral is to put his pretensions aside for some other officer.—Hampshire Telegraph. [The above being mere club-house report, may be taken for as much as it is worth. And to the names enumerated we have heard those of Sir C. Cole and the Hon. P. Irby. The intention of appointing Sir Pulteney Malcolm to the command of the squadron of observation is very generally supposed to exist, and as we have before said, no selection could do more credit to the First Lord of the Admiralty, or be more gratifying to the service at large, than this intelligent and gallant officer. The number of line-of-battle ships to be commissioned are ten, as we stated last week.—Ed.]

Capt. the Hon. M. F. Berkeley, it is expected, will succeed Capt. the Hon. H. Byng, in the command of Portsmouth Ordinary in April next.

Mr. D. Quintom, late Master of H.M.S Wolf, is appointed Supervisor of the Pearl Fishery and Surveyor of the West Coast of the Island of Ceylon.

Royal Marines, Woolwich Division.—A survey was held on Wednesday last in the Hospital, upon 2nd Lieut. Backhouse, at which the following officers attended:—Capt. Sir S. Warren, C.B., K.C.H., R.N.; Col. M'Cleverty, Com. R.M. and C.B.; Sir W. Beatie, Physician to Greenwich Hospital, Surgeon Dunn, Woolwich Dockyard, and Surgeon H. Parkin, R.M., who have reported Lieut. Backhouse unfit for service, and it is expected he will be placed on the reserved half-pay.

The Numa transport, Lieut. How, Agent, will soon proceed from Deptford to the Mediterranean.

The Parmelia transport, Lieut. Davison, Agent, and Prince Regent, Lieut. Scrymgeoe, Agent, are ordered to Deptford to fit for further service.

New Naval Instructions.—It is understood that, from the ensuing month, the Masters are to have charge of the Warrant Officers' stores, as was formerly the case, but at a much less proportion to allowance—40*l.* a-year for a fifth-rate, and 10*l.* increase above.

Upwards of 120 anchors have been picked up at Lowestoff, and many more are expected to be found.

H.M.'s ships Ætna and Sulphur, with their tenders, the Starling and Raven, called at Madeira on the 7th Jan., and sailed the following day for the coast of Africa on surveying service.

H.M.'s ships Nimrod, Snake, and Racehorse, arrived at Bermuda 22nd Jan. from England, Jamaica, and Grenada.

The Rodney, Tyne, and Childers, with a French 20-gun brig and two Spanish brigantines, were at Barcelona on the 9th inst. The Rodney had recently returned from Rosas, the Tyne from Tarragona, and the Childers from a cruise, having been sent out in quest of a Sardinian vessel, expected to land arms on the coast for the Carlists, but had not met with her. The Orestes, on her passage from Malta to Gibraltar, had called in at Barcelona. The Clio and Jaseur were at Gibraltar. Gen. Dodgin and about 200 Anglo-Spanish troops had arrived at Barcelona from Portugal.

East India Intelligence.

Delhi.—Execution of Shumsoodeen Khan.—On Wednesday, Oct. 12th, at 11 o'clock, Shumsoodeen Khan was conveyed from the cantonments to his original quarters at the Cashmere Gate. This arrangement was judicious as it precluded any necessity for parade or delay on the following morning, when the execution was to take place. When Mr. Metcalf informed him his fate was decided upon, he never uttered one single expression of astonishment or regret, but with a calm and collected countenance simply asked, "Do you, sir, think me guilty?" To this interrogative one answer only could be given. Three days previous to his execution he expressed a wish to see Mogul Beg. This request was acceded to, and on that individual's arrival the following morning, he transacted business and entered into some pecuniary arrangements respecting his own wife (Mogul Beg's daughter), and after enjoining Mogul Beg to perform the last offices after his death, this individual departed. The site upon which the gallows was erected was on the outside of the Cashmere Gate. This strong position was most judiciously chosen by Brigadier Fast for the troops, consisting of the 1st L. C., 20th, 39th, and 69th N.I., and the Delhi Light Field Battery of four 9-pounder guns and two 24-pounder howitzers. Every necessary arrangement being thus perfected, and a force present sufficient to quell any adverse party, the Nawab was escorted from his quarters to the fatal ground in a palkee at 8 o'clock. Upon his arrival at the scaffold, he hastily glanced at the fatal preparations, without, however, displaying emotion, his lips continually moving in inward prayer. On stepping out of the Palkee he instantly walked with a firm and somewhat haughty step to the foot of the gallows, which he directly ascended, and as his eye glanced round the assembled multitude; the late residence of Mr. Frazer on the neighbouring height attracted his notice, then, and then only, was he observed hastily to withdraw his eyes, and an inword shudder agitated his frame. The only words he uttered while on the ground were addressed to the Maitre, who was doing the duty of the executioner, "Ym are not a Maitre?" to which no answer was given.

The necessary arrangements were no sooner ended than the signal was given, and he was launched into eternity. Never did we see a culprit die apparently easier, so that not even a pair of loose slippers worn were shaken from his feet. A quarter of an hour after the drop fell, the body fortuitously swung with its face to the west, this his attendants, who were waiting with a Charpoy, and who were weeping bitterly, with their usual superstition considered an auspicious omen, and it certainly in a great degree assuaged their grief. After hanging for one hour the remains were delivered to his late dependents, and interred outside the Lahore gate, beside one of Mogul Beg's brothers.

On the 30th Sept. the trial connected with the late duel at Poona, came on before the Supreme Court, on which occasion Dr. John P. Malcolmson, Major Foster Halker, Lieut. James Macdonnell, and Dr. James Don, were arraigned for the murder of Captain Alexander Urquhart, on 18th July last, at Poona. After the witnesses had been heard for the prosecution, no defence being made, Mr. Justice Awdry proceeded to sum up the evidence, when the foreman of the jury informed his lordship that their minds were already made up, and a verdict of Not Guilty was pronounced in favour of each gentleman successively. Mr. Justice Awdry said he felt it his duty to remark that, as regarded one of the gentlemen, Dr. Don, not a particle of evidence had been adduced against him. It was quite clear he had gone to his garden according to his daily custom, and that his presence on the spot where the deceased lay was purely accidental. Against the other gentlemen there was some slight evidence of a circumstantial nature, but the jury had, by their verdict of acquittal, declared it not to affect any one of them. The trial excited great interest, and the Court was crowded during the day with military gentlemen.

Maharajah Runjeet Sing of Lahore, who has been indisposed, is entirely recovered.

The Presidency station at Madras has passed resolutions approving of Mr. Carnie's plan for a retiring fund, with only one dissentient voice. The Madras Army have also consented to adopt a very important modification of the rules of their Military Fund, having resolved "That the Fund be hereafter open to widows or orphans, under the rule that governs admission of Cadets to the Army, and that all existing marriages (hitherto excluded under the old) be recognised and admitted under the new rule, by paying up all arrears of subscription, &c., according to the existing rates, from the date of marriage, with interest at 8 per cent., accumulated half-yearly." East Indian wives and their children are consequently now on the same footing as Europeans.

The Lord Bishop of Calcutta took his departure by the Hattrass pilot ship, on a tour of visitation, on 15th Sept., and Mr. Allan Jackson has been appointed surgeon to his lordship during the same.

The Bombay Courier states that official information has been received from the Court of Directors, that they have no intention of doing away with the Indian Navy.

Madras.—The Com.-in-Chief being about to proceed on a tour to the southward and west, will be accompanied by the following officers:—his own Military Secretary and Aide-de-Camp, Dep. Asst. Adj. Gen., Assist. Quart. Mast. Gen., and Dep. Inspector Gen. of his Majesty's Hospitals; and Assist. Surg. W. B. Thompson, of Horse Artillery, is appointed to afford medical aid to head-quarters, escort, and public followers. —Fort St. George Gazette, Sept. 30th.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT-COLONEL WILLIAM MEIN, C. B.

Ensign 74th foot, by purchase, 20th Sept. 1797; from which he exchanged into the 43rd, 18th Jan. 1798; he was promoted Lieut. 26th Nov. 1799, and immediately after appointed to the light inf. comp. in the 1st batt., and in June, 1800, embarked in the expedition against Ferrol, of which his reg. formed a part; he was present as senior Lieut. of his comp. in the action before that place, 20th Aug. following; and, on the fall of the officer who commanded his company, he commanded it to the close of the action. During the remaining part of this year and commencement of 1801 he served with his reg. in Spain and Portugal, and then returned with it to England. Early in 1803, the 52nd was formed into a light infantry corps, and in 1804 this officer was promoted to a company; in May, 1806, it embarked for Sicily, and returned in Jan. 1808; in April following he again embarked with the 52nd, which proceeded to the north of Europe in the expedition under Sir J. Moore, intended to co-operate with Sweden, but which force returned to England, and sailed for Portugal without landing either in the north or at home. It joined the army after the battle of Vimiera; and this officer served with it in the march through Spain, and at the battle of Corunna; in May, 1809, he again embarked with his reg. for the Peninsula, and the 52nd formed part of the light brigade under Maj.-Gen. R. Crawfurd; he served with his company in the campaigns from 1809 to 6th Feb. 1812, when he received the brevet of Major, and was in the following battles, actions, and sieges,—Busaco, Fuentes d'Onor, Coa, La Lourida, Pombal, Redenho, Cazalanovo, (where he received a severe wound from a musket ball, but continued at the head of his company,) Tose de Oronse, Subugal, Fuentes, Guinaldo, siege of Ciudad Rodrigo, storming of Fort St. Francisco (where he received a severe wound by a musket ball through the left thigh, being one of the first that entered this fort at the head of the storming party). Immediately after the latter affair, the brevet of Major was conferred upon him, at the recommendation of the Duke of Wellington. From this date he constantly discharged the duty of a Field Officer with his corps; and in the campaigns of 1812 and 1813 was present at the siege of Badajos, storming and capture of the same on the night of 6th April, 1812, when (though not recovered from his last wound) he received another severe wound by a musket shot through the right thigh; Castrajon, Guerraine, Salamanca, Simminos, St. Melian, near Vittoria, Vittoria, Pyrenees, and Bidasson, when the French army attempted to relieve and raise the siege of St. Sebastian. About this period he succeeded to the command of his reg., and which he held on 7th Oct. 1813, in the battle fought upon the heights near Beira. Major M. was on this day the first person, at the head of his corps that entered a strong fort in possession of the enemy. Being in front he leaped the ditch and ascended the face of the redoubt, and on reaching the top, and leaping into it, a French soldier, at a few yards distance, presented his musket, and was upon the point of firing at him, when his presence of mind most probably saved his life; instantly stooping down, he took up a stone, and aimed so well at the head of the soldier, that he put him to the rout, and being now well supported by some of his men, completely drove the enemy from their strong hold. While at the head of his reg. and on the eve of carrying the last fortified position which the enemy held at this point in Spain, and upon the boundary in France, he received a severe and dangerous wound in the head, which, however, for a short time only compelled him to resign the command of his corps. In the despatches of the Duke of Wellington, announcing this victory, Lieut.-Col. M. was particularly mentioned by name, as having, at the head of his corps, distinguished himself, at the recommendation of the Duke, the brevet of Lieut.-Col. was conferred upon him; and on 11th Nov. following he succeeded to a Majority in his reg. He commanded it in the battle of the Nive; on the second day of the action he received another severe wound by a musket shot through the neck, while in command of the piquets of his brigade, and upon which occasion, although only in command of six companies, he defended a position which he took up, and maintained against a strong division of the French army. In consequence of the number and severity of the wounds which he had received, and his health having suffered so much from the last six campaigns, in which he had been constantly present with his corps, a medical board, in the ensuing year, strongly recommended his return to England. Lieut.-Col. M. was nominated in 1815 a Companion of the Bath, and received a medal for the battle of the Nive. From the severity of his wounds, he was not enabled to join the 2nd batt. 52nd, to which he now belonged, from his late promotion, until the latter end of 1815; and in May following he was placed upon half-pay, in consequence of the reduction of his batt. He at this time received from his brother officers a valuable piece of plate, with the following inscription:—"This piece of plate is presented to Lieut.-Col. W. Mein, C.B., by the officers of the 2nd batt. 52nd reg. upon its reduction, as a memorial of their gratitude and esteem for his many virtues as a soldier, as a man, and as a friend to all of them since they have had the happiness of being under his command; and they assure him that their remembrance of his kindness to them will be as lasting as their present separation is afflicting, 1816." Lt.-Col. Mein was restored to the full pay of his corps in March, 1817, and served with it in France as part of the army of occupation. In July, 1818, he was compelled to retire upon half-pay, in consequence of his wounds. Lieut.-Colonel Mein died on the 18th ult. at Marsk House, Dumfriesshire, in which county he was a Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace.

MISGOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

SIR,—Will the eyes of the Company and the Board of Controul never be open to the consequences of misgovernment in India! You have most ably described the misrule of Lord William Bentinck'! He went to India a known needy man. His purchased estate produced nothing, and his prior residence in India had not enlightened his understanding. If Marquis Wellesley elevated Great Britain in the eyes of the Native Chiefs, his Lordship most effectually lowered if. It is sometimes said Marines are unpopular on board a ship, and parishes complain of the expense of a police; but would his Lordship undertake to govern in the East or West Indies without a military force? Was his Lordship as strenuous for cutting down civil incomes, Residencies, &c. as in reducing the hard-earned result of a long military career? for how few officers make fortunes!! In his Lordship's reform and reduction of expense, how does he reconcile charging the fee for another Surgeon's attendance during the illness of his own? If his Lordship is as consistent as a member of Parliament, I congratulate his constituents. The folly of officers not considering the prejudices or customs of a country is as great as if we were to expect the green or hot-house plant to flourish exposed to our winter, or the tastes, habits, and customs of the most uncivilised Africans to harmonise with the refinements of the Tuileries, or St. James's. We are now told that the new Commander-in-Chief, Sir Henry Fane, held his first levee, but did not condescend to notice the Company's officers, excepting by a bow! but this well-known Peninsular Martinet can pocket the Company's pay, and provide also for his son. So much for military hauteur! Why do the Company's officers attend the levees, to be treated with such disrespect? How different from the Duke of York, the soldier's friend, who ever listened to the junior Ensign's complaint as readily as to the first General's. This was the whole secret of the devotion of Napoleon's army. The neglected Indian Army owe you a debt of gratitude for the kind and handsome manner in which you have advocated their cause. Why do not all the old experienced officers of the Company's Service retire? It is true, his Majesty might send two or three more of his decorated Generals, who know nothing of the Native troops; but let us mark the result. Had a mutiny, like that of the Nore, occurred in the East Indies, how different would it have ended; and, as it was, the Admiralty punished the offence, but redressed the grievance. AN OBSERVER.

[We eschew politics, and have therefore omitted some of our correspondent's remarks which do not bear on the question of military grievance.—ED.]

To serve the widow,—orphan,—bairn,— Soldier or Tar.

Then, my good fellow, Mr. Editor, pray send this letter round the world, in your columns, that the attention of my brother sailors far and near may be drawn to, and their opinion given on, my plan of a "RESERVED HALF-PAY LIST" for the Navy (similar to that in the Marines), which I humbly submitted to public discussion and to the consideration of the Admiralty, in No. 94 of your Gazette, published on the 25th Oct. 1834.

For the information of your readers who do not file your Gazette, it is necessary I should briefly state the plan, viz. —"That, from the several Half-Pay Lists, there should be selected, to form a RESERVED Half-Pay List, all the inert and incompetent to fill their situations from a want of professional skill, of whom, it is supposed, there are 500 Lieutenants, who have not been for these last twenty years employed as such in the Navy, or even at sea in any capacity, since the date of their commission, and averaging forty-five years of age; the reputed worthless characters, the settled emigrant, the Jacks of all trades, the permanent quill-driving Jacks of office, all gaolers (dubbed among the turnkey fraternity 'KNIGHTS of the HANDCUFFS!!'), those who have left their ships to avoid a Court-Martial on disgraceful charges, those who have been discharged from the Coast Guard for fraudulent or unworthy practices, those who have taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act under dishonest circumstances,* all Police Superintendents, lawyers, clergymen, open air preachers, &c., leaving an Active List for the experienced, the zealous, the talented, the meritorious, the skilful, and the honourable;" for, as I observed in my former letter, "Is the hardship not insupportable to that Captain, Commander, or Lieutenant, who is a credit to his profession, who has for perhaps thirty, forty, or fifty years, in war and peace, in distant seas and pestiferous climes, faithfully served his King and country with all his heart, with all his soul, and with all his strength, and then to find in his retirement officers of objectionable characters, qualifications, or circumstances, above his head on the Navy List, the FIRST to receive the increased reward of half-pay?"

"These gentlemen in England who sit in jail at ease, Waiting to be white-wash'd, and pay the jailor's fees."

and ces autres Messieurs là, who will turn an honest penny to gain sitter ony hoo, who will never tread a quarter-deck plank again, still retain their names on the list of active commissioned officers, increasing their half-pay in the Services of dissipation—private derogatory emolument of a foreign Prince or State—dishonest insolvency, emigration, or voluntary inactivity. I was of opinion that the King in Council under this arrangement would recommend at least 37 Captains, 60 Commanders, and 675 Lieutenants, 845,† "to accept of the CHELSEA HONOURS" with their present half-pay for salaries, and their widows' "pensions reserved them."

In your able commentary upon my letter you were pleased to observe that I had considerably underrated the number disqualified to remain on the Active List; and now, I believe, I may justly take 1100 who will fairly come under the various heads of disqualifications; so that a sum of 6,000*l.* will be required to carry my plan into execution; and should the Admiralty grant the prayer of the Naval Lieutenants' petition to give the first 300 on their List 7*s.* per diem, the small amount of 10,000*l.* per annum will be the only extra charge to the naval estimates. This sum would decrease annually, as the widows (of those officers who marry on the Reserved Half-Pay Lists) would not be entitled to pensions. Had this proposal been considered neither JUST NOR FAIR for the Individuals selected for the Reserved Half-Pay Lists, nor beneficial to the Service at large, it would have met with deserved and decided opposition or reasonable discussion in your columns, but not ONE dissentient raised his voice against nor ONE controvertist disputed the policy or the equity of this grand desideratum, which would immediately remove one of the greatest hardships so long and patiently suffered in the British Navy, and be the FIRST effectual broadside at the foundation of her wrongs, viz. an enormous overgrown mass of sea-officers, in the eyes of the economists, which do not appear of land-officers, in the Army List, under the rank of Majors.

To a RETIRED LIST, for the veteran in service and honour, we must at last resort, as the limited and partial promotions to the CHELSEA few cannot benefit those who have no interest to advance them, nor bodily nor mental faculty to brave the storm and sea, or to command with energy and discernment; but to obtain that soon solicited, and I believe frequently promised since the peace, we must first establish a Reserved Half-Pay List, to give an increased half-pay to the veteran and the active. The promotion of these Lieutenants indiscriminately to the rank of Commanders as they come on the 7*s.* List is most prejudicial to the honour and credit of the Naval Service; for the greatest defaulters in honour or worthiness, or the most worthless of society, may be raised to the nominal rank of a Captain in the Navy, at the time he was forgotten or not recognised as belonging to our honourable profession; of this the Admiralty are conscious, as their Lordships do not always promote to the 8*s.* 6*d.* List of Commanders that officer who arrives at the top of the 7*s.* Commanders'. Chaucer—

"My merry songs an' friendly cracks,
I hope they dinna weary;
An' happy yarns, and funnie jokes
Will mak the Tar's heart cheery."

The private information which I receive from a never-failing source of truth and confidence assures me that a cordial and anxious wish exists at the Admiralty to bring forward some dignified and effectual plan to benefit the Navy, were it not the apprehension of Ministers to incur the displeasure of the economists in Parliament, which counteracts all their Lordships' good intentions, and destroys every hope of ameliorating our HARD condition, compared with the poor one of the Army, or of redressing even ONE of our many wrongs. Their Lordships, however, have it in their power to propose in Parliament the abolition of the Naval Academy and the Royal Dock-Yard Architectural School at Portsmouth, and apply the thousands saved in their useless maintenance to the education of our sea-youths in that truly British Royal Naval School, a "man-of-war," which marches on the azure main; and instead of our young aspirants being discharged when their ships are paid off, to obliterate all the knowledge they have acquired in their profession, and to be supported in inactivity for months by perhaps an ill-spared expense to their friends, they should be (as I have suggested before) temporarily employed on board the Excellent in the continuance of their nautical acquirements, until ships were commissioned to put again in practice seamanship in gales and seas, sea-gunnery in lee lurches and weather rolls, and navigation where there are no buoys or beacons, mile-stones or finger-posts, and wham the brick and mortar Schools are far out of sight and long out of mind. Were this systematic course of education in study, practice, and experience, continued uninterrupted by our young naval officers, their Lordships who promoted that system so honourable to themselves, judicious in policy, advantageous to the youths in time and prospects, and to their parents in purse, their Lordships who also established a "RESERVED HALF-PAY LIST," injuring NOT the unqualified or objectionable, but materially benefiting the select and meritorious of the Navy, would prove the best trumps the Admiralty ever turned up for the officers of the British fleet.

My good fellow, Mr. Editor, I must beg you will permit your printer's devil to finger a few more types to convey to Philotheorus the expression of the pleasure which I felt by the compliment he paid to the chequered productions of my pen. The QUI PRO QUO which he made in your columns reflecting on the honour of the naval officer's word was "blotted out for ever" by the amende honorable of an honourable man. Were the gallantry of Philotheorus to present a rose to adorn beauty's breast, it would divest the rose of its every thorn.

COAST GUARD SERVICE (LETTER IV.)

SIR,—It would almost appear that when the Lords of the Admiralty appointed Naval Lieutenants to the Coast Guard, they had certain misgivings as to whether the appointment was of sufficient respectability for an officer of that rank, for they were careful to designate him "Chief Officer or Sitter," instead of "Lieutenant of a Station," which certainly would be the more appropriate appellation were they desirous to recognise him in that capacity; but my opinion is, their Lordships wished the Naval part of the character to be dropped altogether, and the appointments considered exclusively Civil.

If, Sir, this inference be correct, in which, indeed, I am borne out by many other circumstances—one, that of Lieut. Dombrain, the Inspector General of Ireland, resigning his commission because there were Captains and Commanders serving under him who took an exception to being under the command of an inferior officer, thus establishing the situation as purely civil—how then, is it that Naval Lieutenants have been called upon of late years to wear their naval uniforms? One would imagine that, in virtue of their place, as at present constituted, (that of an Inferior officer of Customs,) they were only entitled to the uniform of the Civilian Chief Officer.

The service must be either essentially Civil or essentially Naval. If not Civil, but Naval, as it is now called, I ask by what authority are Naval Lieutenants (wearing their uniforms) put into the ranks at the head of six or seven men to form a guard of honour to receive Captain Bowles or Commander Samuel Sparshott?!! This seems something like sinking the rank with a vengeance, when an officer bearing that of a Captain in the Army is, at the whim or caprice of a superior, made to do a non-commissioned officer's duty, and which duty every regulation of the Army and Navy points out as extremely irregular, and highly derogatory not only to the officer himself, but to the service at large. With reference to Mr. Dombrain, what Military respect could he claim from a profession to which he now holds no rank? In virtue of his place as a superior officer of Customs, he is entitled to none, and to pay it him is to make the service the strangest anomaly in the world, and the Lieutenants in the Coast Guard the merest puppets imaginable. Captain Bowles must be perfectly aware that he could not legally direct the Captain of Marines of his ship (did he command one) to take the Serjeant's guard, to which only would he be entitled, and salute him every time he went in and out of the ship; such an order would be considered oppressive, and an appeal would lie against it to the Commander-in-Chief or the Admiralty. I say, Capt. Bowles might just as well direct his First and Second Lieutenant to be his sidesmen and to attend at the gangway ropes in hand whenever he went over the side, as order the Lieutenants in the Coast Guard into the places of Serjeants and Corporals; the one would not be one whit more humiliating than the other, and, I am sure, not be more severely felt. But, to show how little protection a Lieutenant has in the Coast Guard, I must relate an incident connected with the soldiering. A valiant Commander in the Navy, a young one in rank, though somewhat staid in years, whose district was not one hundred miles from Portsmouth, conceiving he had just as much right to be received by a guard of honour as Captain Bowles or Commander Sparshott, usually made it a practice to send to the stations in his district, naming the days he should visit them, and directing the crews to be under arms to receive him. He generally came at the appointed time swelling with military pride and consequence, was saluted by the unfortunate devils of Lieutenants in the same manner that Capt. Bowles would be; but this he considered as nothing more than his right and the homage due to his EXALTED rank. However, there happened to be one Lieutenant in this district, an old and highly meritorious officer, whose party was stationed in a fort where there was a detachment of soldiers. This officer could not reconcile to himself the belief that he was to be put into a Serjeant's position; he might, too, have feared the ridicule of the military lookers-on; so, when he turned out his party to present arms, he himself assumed the position he would have done on board a ship-of-war, and received his superior officer with all the respect due to him. For this act of apparent contumacy, however, this Serjeant-Lieutenant was complained of, and the Comptroller-General actually directed that he should apologise, and go into the ranks in future, or march off to a far and distant station at his own expense!!!

"Man, proud man!
Armed with a little brief authority, plays such Fantastic tricks before high heaven, as makes the Angels weep."

There could be no objection to the Chief Boatman thus receiving the Comptroller-General and the other superior officers of the service, including, of course, his immediate Commandant, the Lieutenant of the station to which he was attached, with military honours; but it ought not to be exacted of Lieutenants of the Navy so to receive their superiors. Such homage by Naval officers is not paid to, nor expected by, Majesty itself. The King (God bless his sailor heart, and long may it beat within his royal breast!) knows very well that when he held the post of Lord High Admiral he never dreamt of his Naval Lieutenants saluting him in the manner I have described.

I think I have already shown enough, although more I will hereafter show, to point out the necessity of reorganising this service, and that, too, forthwith. The Navy confidently looks to measures of ample justice from my Lord Minto, and all must surely allow that it is high time justice was done to the Lieutenant "Sitter" of the Coast Guard, and that he was rescued from his degraded position. ## YORICK ON NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.

"Some books are lies from end to end,
And some great lies were never penn'd;
Even ministers, they have been kenn'd
In holy rapture,
A rousing whid, at times, to vend,
And nail't wi' scripture.
But this that I am gaun to tell
Is just as true's the deil's in h—ll
Or Dublin city."—BURNS.

SIR,—Herewith I send you some letters from officers at Malta, by which you will perceive how grossly the public has been abused, by the prejudiced (and I still think fabricated) accounts put forth in the newspapers, relating to the trial between Vernon and Barham. You will admit, that what I had told you was correct; for assuredly if the Vernon did behave in the manner that all concurrent testimony contained in the official documents reports, in the month of March last, there could be no reason (except being out of trim) why she should not do so again. It is impossible, Sir, to make a ship perform what she is not capable of doing; you cannot get speed out of a vessel that possesses not the necessary qualities, or conformation to obtain it. But when it is proved in one instance, they must be partial judges indeed who permit themselves to forget this, and argue on the merits of a less favourable case, produced, of course, by some deviation either in the trim or management of the ship.

You accuse me of severity in remarking upon the conduct of the School, but are you aware, Sir, that all these fabricated statements emanate from that body? This being the case, I think you will admit that I have let them down easy. I know not one of them personally, and my sole reason for reprobating the active manœuvres of these gentlemen (who, so long as they pursue their present conduct, deserve little courtesy), is, that they are either so wilful, or so infatuated, that they cannot be brought to acknowledge what is apparent to all the world beyond their circle, namely the immense superiority of the present over the old mode of ship-building, one prominent feature of which is the abandonment of increased length, and the adoption of increased breadth. This they may not, or will not, or, as Byron says, perhaps "like most very clever people, cannot," understand; but if so, they must submit to one of two things, either that a vast deal of expensive instruction has been unprofitably wasted upon them, or that they are too bigoted to accede to palpable improvement, and therefore their opinions unworthy of notice.

It may be said, the whole class do not indulge in these opinions, and that many of them concede the full benefit of Capt. Symonds' system. I believe there are now many converts. But, Sir, they have committed and placed themselves in direct opposition to that principle, and they still continue to advocate their favourite system length. You are perhaps aware that their opinions are represented by a certain number of the body, who were supposed to be the greatest adepts at writing, and these were formed into a board of construction, not of ships, their legitimate calling, but of pamphlets, puffs, and paragraphs; and many of such have been launched by the council of five originally, since dwindled to three, and now boasting but two members. These seem determined not to conform, lest, should they confess the faith, they might share the fate of the Jew who Jack converted; for in the last January number of the United Service Journal they launched a paper, entitled "Observations on Naval Architecture," dignified with the editorial we*, recapitulating the same interminable argument, in nearly the same words that has appeared in many publications within these last half dozen years, ad nauseam—and would you believe it?—still instancing increased length and decreased breadth, as one of the most palpable improvements on modern ship-building. But I will leave this strain, requesting those who need convincing to read the article in question, and judge for themselves.

In my last, I made known two plans, which I had designed, one to prevent a ship rolling beyond the streak of impunity; the other, a new patent pliable bottom, regulated by certain self-acting machinery, so as to expand and contract to suit the occasion, and thus enable the skilful mariner not only to apply what he considered the best shaped mould to the resistance of the waves, when calm or agitated, but to make all kinds of experiments, with a view of ascertaining the most advantageous conformation of a ship's frame under water for general purposes. It might be supposed that the members of the School of Architecture would have left me for one week quiet in the enjoyment of this invention; but no, Sir, I have heard that, with their usual inveteracy, they have asserted that my suggestion is neither original nor novel, and they are now composing a pamphlet to prove that it is a plagiary, being known to the ancients, and used by them. I have even heard that my improved suggestion for leather bottoms, conceived before I had published my idea, had arrived at the Admiralty from Plymouth dockyard. Now this I call really too bad. However, Sir, you shall judge whether they can make out a case upon the authorities they quote. They say, that when the Delphic Oracle was consulted as to the best means of defending the Grecian city from the host of Darius, the response was, not with wooden but leather walls; and in support of this assertion, contrary to all historical authority they cite a fable, which I contend is of modern date, composed not on the relative quality of leather over other materials, but to show how men are wedded to their own interests, regardless even of public safety. The rhymn upon which they ground their authority (you will doubtless collect it) runs thus,—

"A grave skilful mason gave in his opinion,
That nothing but stone could secure the dominion.
A carpenter said, 'tho that were well spoke,
'Twas better by far to defend it with oak.
A currier, much wiser than both these together,
Said, 'Try what you please, there is nothing like leather.'

Now, although I admit that the currier was the most sensible man of the three, and had probably conceived the leathering ships bottoms (for how else could leather keep out their foes), I maintain that he divulged himself no further, and moreover, that the fable is of modern origin, and to be found in every spelling-book; and how is it that these gentlemen have never until now hit upon the meaning they say is implied therein. Again, they affirm that leather bottoms were not only in use amongst the ancient Britons (which to a certain extent I will admit), but that they were applied by Archimedes. And they instance another quotation from a song, namely,— pretending that these cobblers were employed sewing on the garboard streak of a Syracusan galley, because, they say, cobblers never work in company or in a row, but individually in stalls, at their legitimate trade. Now, any man versed in history must know, that the song quoted first appeared at one of the metropolitan theatres about the year 1747, whereas the celebrated philosopher Archimedes was put to death by the soldiers of that unhanged Roman consul Marcellus (who, instead of being immortalised as a conqueror and a cuckold, deserved to have been kicked to death by spiders for permitting such an atrocious act, compared to which the shooting or hanging of a legion of French Marshals or Neapolitan Admirals are as nothing), and this happened a brace of centuries before the birth of Christ, or exactly 2048 years ago. My paper is drawing to a finish: I must therefore postpone what I have further to say until my next, when I intend to enter into the question of the conformation of skulls, in order to arrive at the true position of the organ or bump of ship-building. In the meantime I present the members of the School with the following quotation from Bacon for study, before they proceed further in this affair.

"If a man perform that which hath not been attempted before, or attempted and given over, or hath been achieved but not with so good circumstances, he shall purchase more honour, than by effecting a matter of greater difficulty or virtue, wherein he is but a follower."

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1836.

If we measure the glory of men by the means they take to acquire it, the popularity hunters of the day will indeed fall into utter insignificance; and the very idol "Economy," at whose shrine they have liberally sacrificed the interests of their benefactors, who fought the battles of the country, appears ashamed to own her pharisaic votaries. Could it be credited that, under the present aspect of affairs in the political horizon, men are found to demur at the proposed increase of the Naval force of this country? and arrogantly asserting, that "no power on earth can conquer the present Naval force of Britain." If by "Naval force" they mean ships we have ships enough all the world knows; but do these men conceive the Naval force of England to consist in ships alone? They ought to know that without men ships are of no avail, not even as "Demonstrators;" and that without Officers both men and ships are equally futile. There must be the head to direct as well as the arm to execute, with an arena for both: without these it is vain to hope that England will maintain her supremacy of the seas,—and well do they know it; or, should the fever of popularity have effaced the fact from memory, they have but to consult the pages of the Naval history of Great Britain during the past war, where many cases are on record, in which very small British vessels of war (Speedy brig and the Spanish frigate to wit) successfully attacked, and gallantly captured very large ships of the enemy, mostly "armed en flute." Had they all been fully equipped with their proper complements of men, the same results would not have always followed. It is not an overgrown bulk of a ship, or a formidable tier of cannon, that is to frighten a seaman, but should there prove a preponderance of personal numbers the affair becomes different. Yet, forsooth, they must yelp forth the cry of economy, and can only be soothed by the assurance, that each augmentation be but for the protection of trade. Simpletons! who ever heard of ships of the line being fitted as escorts to traders? yet some six or eight vessels of this class are in progress, and economists believe such to be their destination. What is the fact? Setting aside the position of England and Russia, with regard to the Turkish question, America, backed no doubt by the politics of Russia, does not hesitate to declare war, which virtually she has done, in shutting her ports, &c. against France; she has thrown down the gauntlet, and France is in a state of domestic difficulty, which, in the hope of giving a turn to men's minds of a more favourable description, may induce her readily to catch at. And should hostilities ensue, the next thing to be looked for is the blockade of the American ports, which necessarily must interfere with British commerce; blockades broke will lead to captures of British ships; and hence a war between the old rivals for military renown be renewed. In fine, let but a gun announce the rupture of tranquillity between any two powers, and then predict who can where ceases the echo. It is in vain to talk about the interests of France opposing such a result,—England and France are rivals for ascendancy, and the financial interests of nations are not to be compared to those of individual traders, nor is France a trading nation properly speaking. And though she may prize British gold, the nation entertains a mortal hate towards British natives; and where it is the mercantile policy of one Frenchman to maintain peace with England, it is the anxious wish of hundreds again to enter into collision with her, in the hope of retaliation in the endeavours to humble her supremacy; although, in regard to Great Britain, they have experienced that "conquests do not always pay costs." In another war they will show themselves rivals of note, even on our own element; profiting by the peace, their Navy has been in constant practice in the presence of the British squadron. True it is, that during peace our Legislators have very properly directed their consideration to the encouragement of seamen. It might not have been amiss had a similar feeling been extended to the Officers. In the ardour to accomplish the former, however, it is to be feared whether, instead of improving the service, one extreme has not been substituted for another in some instances. Among others, the non-payment of wages, or portions thereof, but at long intervals, is now altered to payments at short intervals, of sums, the amount of which, most Commanding Officers would say, is much more than adequate to the wants of seamen, as the surplus is conducive to the subversion of discipline by the means afforded for smuggling spirits on board, and the consequent uncontrolled recourse to the intoxicating stimulant. And now-a-days, any severity which may be resorted to as checks upon this, the worst species of insubordination, is exaggerated into tyranny and oppression, and the Officers liberally consigned to execration as revellers in torture, with "motions in Parliament for returns of the numbers of men who have died under the lash," combined with pathetic appeals to the mobocracy on the inhumanity of discipline, taking care to keep the fact out of view, that without it riot and mutiny must ensue, and multiply examples at the yard-arm.

But let us ask the economy fanciers, what benefits have accrued from withholding promotion from those whose war services entitled them to it, in order to bestow it unsparingly on others, whose sole merit is that of gilding the Navy with the glitter of nobility? Hallooed on during war like a favoured pack, they are spurned into the back ground so soon as the game is secured, to be, like spaniels, whistled back again at pleasure. For twenty years of hostility they bore the brunt of battle, and for twenty subsequent years have they been vilified and stigmatised as a dead weight on the country. The harvest reaped, the chaff is allotted to the labourer, and the grain distributed amongst monopolists.

The recent decease of a marine at Woolwich, shortly after receiving corporal punishment, the effect of which a contemporary seems to consi the cause of his death, notwithstanding the opin of the medical men, so strongly expressed to contrary, induces us to say a few words upon unhappy necessity for exercising a punishment much at variance with the feelings of the comm nity, and which never fails to call forth com seration; more particularly when some of t public journalists, by false and exaggerated sta ments of the cruelty of Officers in the Army a Navy, and the severity they delight to ex cise, irritate the minds of those who, (incapable judging of the value and necessity of strict dis pline and prompt punishment over the class of m composing a large portion of the military,) thus induced to take up opinions, which th would not indulge in were they not instigated the lowest portion of the press. A regiment, void of discipline, becomes a scourge instead o protection to the party requiring its suppo Suppose a case of a riot; a Military force march into a town, and billeted upon the inhabitan that the soldiers, not having the fear of punishm for breach of discipline in view, indulge in eve sort of excess, and, in a state of intoxication, co mit all manner of outrages upon the defencel inhabitants,—would they not loudly cry out punishment upon the commander of such a corp Yet with the materiel supplied him, how is it p sible that, without adopting strict and necessa discipline, and the certainty of speedy punishm following crime, he could be answerable for a moment that such a scene would not occur.

The only remedy for Corporal Punishment the Army or Navy, is to make those services far desirable that, instead of the outcasts of ciety being driven to enter them as a last resou men of good character should be desirous of se ing therein; and then the individuals, who persis in bad conduct, should be forthwith dismissed w ignominy. To effect this, the soldier's pay m be increased; the advantages of faithful and h nourable service should be made worth the p formance of each, and none admitted of known b character. This system has been silently worki in the Navy for many years, and the consequen is, that we seldom hear of Corporal Punishme or the necessity for it, in that Service. It is n fair to contrast the conduct of Captains in co mand of crews, which they carefully select duri the period of fitting out, rejecting nine men out ten that offer, and carefully excluding every o who cannot produce a certificate of good characte it is not fair, we say, to contrast the discipli adopted by Officers now in command of ships, wi the severity of punishment, absolutely necessa to keep in subjection the persons composing t crews of our men of war thirty years ago. W believe real thorough bred seamen to be as order respectful, and even as sober a class as any existi certainly so when in performance of their duty board: consequently, the means adopted to insu good discipline over them need be by no mea strict, and hence the Army, now composed of wo materiel, suffers from the comparison; it bec necessary to use a rigid surveillance over the co duct of such as still enlist in that service.

It should be the policy of Government to a tract the best of our seamen into the King's se vice by making the pay of those, rated as Pet Officers, equal to that of Second Mates a Boatswains in Merchant ships. This, with t prospect held out by the Bill of last Session, wi thout greatly increasing the expense, insure n supply of the flower of our seamen in future rs; and such policy would possess this materiel vantage, that it would even now induce many piring young men who, not having capital to rchase shares in Merchant vessels, have little or prospect of commanding them, to take a turn, if t to remain in the King's Service, and tend to move effectually the prejudice which is fast sob-ling in the minds of Merchant seamen against e Royal Navy. The same policy should also be opted in selecting recruits; but as this would ing about the necessity of increasing the pay of e whole Army (which need only be done as re-rds Petty Officers in the Navy), we have not ace at present to go into further detail on that rt of the subject, but shall return to it at an rly opportunity.

The subject of our FISHERIES, to which we tely called attention, is one of such vital impor-nce to these Kingdoms, as being the principal urce whence our Navy are to be manned in ne of need, that we are led again to recur it. It is with the view of making the avocation a Fisherman worth following, we maintain at every means should be taken to preserve the reed of Fish in the British Channel, as well as every other part of our dominions where they e made an article of commerce; whereas, in EWFOUNDLAND, the present system followed there catching fish only along the shores, where sickly h alone frequent, as it is generally asserted by old hermen, has been the means of rendering that nce valuable nursery for seamen a mere dead tter, as the persons now employed in this Fishery e landsmen, who never go more than three or four iles from the shore, in small boats, to catch the h, and return the first capful of wind; and even e men who go on the sealing voyages for two onths in the year, are in no shape seamen, as very day's example shows to those who live in Newfoundland. Whilst we unhappily pursue this tal system, instead of the good old fashion of shing on the banks, where wholesome, firm, large sh are alone caught, our wary rivals, the FRENCH, nd, every succeeding Spring, from ten to fifteen housand Fishermen to the part of this Colony which as been so impolitically ceded to them; and, as ey catch their fish in deeper water than our Fish-rmen, they sell much better, we are told, in foreign arkets, as being of superior quality. To this uestion, then, as well as to our CHANNEL FISH-NTRS, the Honourable and Gallant Member for Brighton has directed the attention of the Legis-ature.

The first thing to be limited is the size of the mesh f the nets now in use; and, next, that of prohibiting he catching of fish of all kinds near the shores, at cer-ain seasons. Tens of thousands of young soles, urbot, &c., are destroyed every year by shrimp ets alone; hence some means should be devised o prevent this and all other similar evils. And, n order to ensure the fulfilment of whatever laws may be enacted for the better protection of the fish on our coasts, we would strenuously advise the appointment of a small Government vessel to attend on each and every branch of our Fisheries, and by these means to prevent the fishing vessels from approaching the shores at improper seasons, as well as from using improper nets; indeed, at no season ought the trawl vessels to come within a certain distance of the land when their trawls are down, as they thus break up the ground on which the various species of fish deposit their spawn at different periods. The Revenue Cruisers should be instructed to aid in the prevention of these abuses, and we are convinced that, even under the existing laws, they could materially assist in effecting this most desirable object.

IN continuation of our last week's observations on the subject of Reform in the Army, we shall proceed to quote a passage on a new system proposed in the London Review with respect to the mode of Recruiting the Cavalry:—

"Instead, therefore, of being merely recruited, as the Line are, by men picked up in the streets, and in whom, from a ridiculous vanity, height is the only qualification insisted upon, the tallest being preferred, although evidently the most difficult to mount—instead of this, we say, men should be selected for the Cavalry who possess the requisite qualities; and this could only be ascertained from a previous service and trial; but make it a step of promotion, as to pay and prospects, and the Line could furnish abundance of such men—men, too, accustomed to horses, and who ride sufficiently well to be very soon made effective dragoons. The officers should pass through the same probation, and be similarly transferred from the Line into the Cavalry."

For many reasons, we can hardly think this feasible. To effect it, our whole system of recruiting for the Army must be changed. The constant call on the Infantry to furnish men for the Cavalry would be highly detrimental to its efficiency; it would destroy the esprit de corps of such Regiments upon which the demand was made for their best men; the selections would be, for the most part, considered invidious, and it would create an animosity between the two branches difficult to allay. Independently of which, it would increase the very evil already, with much reason, complained of in the Review, by opening a new and wide field for favouritism and patronage.

The instance with respect to the Artillery is not, in our opinion, quite applicable here. It is too limited, with regard to numbers, for a comparison; besides, we may venture to say, the general rule is, in selecting Officers for the Horse Brigade, to give the preference to those who have been previously attached to it.

The income which the Colonel of a Regiment derives from his sinecure post is certainly, in some cases, a very considerable one, and we should wish to see the system altered in this respect, so as to admit of a more equal distribution amongst the General Officers of the Army. The fact that some Generals have 2,833*l.* per annum, while others of the same rank are only in the receipt of 200*l.*, and in some instances much less, is too palpable to be passed unnoticed. Moreover, we dislike the mercantile and perquisite-like fashion in which the allowances for clothing, and for those "fictitious" men under the denomination of Warrant men, and non-effectives, &c., are made:—

"To make a General Officer clothe a regiment which he never sees, nor has any other connexion with than clothing it, is a clumsy device to put from 600*l.* to 1200*l.* in his pocket. No mode of giving him the money could be so objectionable; for on the present system he appears in the estimate to be allowed 2*l.* 6*s.* for clothing each private, and only expends 1*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*, putting into his pocket, therefore, 14*s.* 6*d.*, which the private looks to as his right, and which is more than half the amount which he can possibly save in the year, namely, 1*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.*, out of his 1*s.* per diem, after all the deductions made for articles supplied to him by the King's regulations, and ordered to be taken by him, and for which payment is stopped out of his pay. The present period, as may be remarked, is favourable for the abolition of this objectionable practice. For, were it considered necessary, in depriving the Colonels of this perquisite, to give them compensation, the reduced establishment of regiments would reduce the amount of such compensation to a much less sum than it would have formerly been."

The evidence of the General Officer who, from feelings of attachment and good-will towards his corps, preferred the present mode, with all its risks, to a stipulated annuity, is good, and contrasts well with the conduct of some Colonels, who, for a trifling pecuniary advantage, have allowed themselves to be transferred to other Regiments, from those which they or their ancestors raised on their estates, and in which they themselves were elevated, or commanded in the field.

We shall not stop to notice our contemporary's illiberal comparison between the heavy and light Dragoons, which is in keeping with his observations respecting the provision for the "sons of the wealthy and influential." His reflections on the Household Brigade of Cavalry are also, in some instances, rather too severe; for they did right good service at Waterloo, and their conduct in cases of riot and disturbances at home, has been not only useful, but uniformly commended for forbearance and temper; but his objections to certain privileges which they, in common with the Foot Guards, enjoy in preference to the regular Regiments, are reasonable enough:—he would reduce the Life Guards in toto:—we are not quite so ultra in our views; although we should certainly recommend a partial reduction in this Force, and propose that the other Regiments of the Army, both Horse and Foot, should occasionally take their turn of the duties of the Court and of the Metropolis.

After stating that the Life Guards and Blues have each eight troops and two Majors, being two troops and seven Officers more than other Cavalry corps stationed at home, and that they are, "in fine, fit for nothing more than parade and show." He says—

"These regiments have also privileges conferred upon them as to rank, but not nearly to the extent of those enjoyed by the Foot Guards. A Captain, on being promoted to be a Regimental Major, obtains the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in the Army, thus passing over the whole of the Majors in the Army, and again, on being made Regimental Lieutenant-Colonel, he takes the rank of full Colonel; thus passing over all the Lieutenant-Colonels who are senior to him. The great advantage of obtaining rank early in life have been sufficiently dwelt upon in our observations on the Foot Guards."

There is but trifling cause of complaint, according to our ideas, on the head of allowance of forage to Cavalry Officers; for it must be remembered that the sum of eightpence halfpenny per ration per diem deducted from the pay of each Officer, would, in some places, (in Ireland, for instance,) almost keep a horse; but the fact of a Major of Cavalry being allowed three horses, while a Lieutenant-Colonel commanding a Regiment of Infantry, who is equally obliged to be always properly mounted, is only allowed forage for one horse, is so inconsistent that it would be difficult to find amongst the arrangements of the British Service a case more glaring and ridiculous.

The principle of purchase, the trafficking in exchanges, and difference from half-pay to full (a species of stock-jobbing winked at by the authorities), are proofs of a defective system, and ought to be reformed. The large sum required to fit out an Officer for the Cavalry, the extravagance of the uniforms, finery, and trappings, the amount of subscriptions for the mess fund, band, and other contingencies, and the expensive manner of living in these Regiments, all loudly call for some restrictions and alterations.

"Indeed, in some regiments we understand that, besides the open and known charges, the officers have ablished a fund, into which each on joining is required to ay 400*l.* or 500*l.*, and a smaller sum on attaining each step. The fund is for the purpose of buying the seniors out, nd thereby making promotion. If an officer decline to omply with this arbitrary exaction, which is completely defiance of the orders of the Commander-in-Chief, is sent to Coventry, and thus driven out of the regiment."

At present, our limits will not permit us to make such comments on these last-mentioned points as they severally demand; nor are we enabled, from the same cause, to offer our remarks n the Staff, &c., but they shall have our early onsiderntion.

We have many times advocated the formation f a reserved Naval Half-Pay List, composed of hose Officers who, from old age, incapacity, or ny other cause, are unable to perform active ervice when called upon; and we notice the subct now, to point to a letter in this day's Gatte, from our clever correspondent Tristram, ith whose remarks we very generally agree. ur Commentary on his former letter did not, however (if we recollect right) go the length he asumes; because a List, composed of such materials he suggests, would be designated, and justly esignated, a condemned not a retired List; and rely the Officers who, from age or infirmity may be incapacitated from active service, hould not be confounded with those placed hereon in consequence of convicted ill conduct. he Navy probably possesses its share of objectionable members, and what profession is free from hem? The punishment, or even the slight imposed on these, is altogether a different matter owever from the composition of a retired List. his should be formed in the first place of voluntary members, which would induce all those, ho have in a manner renounced the service and ngaged in other occupations, to accede, and on he residue a survey should be held, and all those eported capable retained. We are of opinion, at this would reduce our ponderous List full ne-third, and enable the Admiralty to give a turn employment to all active Officers, with a fair hance of promotion.

It was an admirable principle of Lord Auckland's Administration of the Navy, to infuse certain portion of young blood into active mployment, because he wisely considered, that hose who had gained their experience last ar would in process of time be worn out, nd hence it became necessary to provide for succession having all the knowledge of their rofession, which could only be acquired by onstant service afloat. We observe, that in aking his appointments Earl Minto adopts the ame system, and we are sure that, taking this to consideration, and throwing prejudice and lf-interest aside, the whole Service will admit, hat the patronage of the First Lords of the Admiralty has been of late, and now is, more impartially distributed than at any antecedent time in ur Naval history.

We fully concur with the opinion of Tristram, especting the evil practice of discharging young entlemen to spend long intervals on shore until hey can provide themselves with ships. A Cadet, once admitted into the service, should be retained herein, until he had served his probation. The "Excellent" affords them ample instruction in the theory and practice of gunnery, at intervals when they cannot obtain employment in sea-going ships; but as that ship cannot afford accommodation to the numbers who would be in this situation, they should be borne on the books of the guard-ships, and attend exercise every day. It is the intention, as we stated in our last, to put the Ordinary on a new system shortly, by placing the Officers employed therein, and the ships they occupy, in commission; when that is effected these ships will afford ample accommodation for Supernumerary Midshipmen.

The subject of the WIDOWS' PENSIONS has unceasingly occupied our thoughts, as our columns will testify, and in our last number only we again renewed our remarks upon the absolute necessity of some better regulations regarding them. The letter signed Tiphys, which appeared in that impression, well merits the attention of those in authority, as his observations are as just as they are unanswerable. We will wait, then, in the confident hope that some new arrangement will be made at an early period, assured as we are that his Majesty's Government have every disposition to benefit the United Service by all the means in their power; and we are sure the Legislature will not be backward in confirming the liberal intentions of Ministers in any measure that goes to reward the meritorious defenders of their country.

☞ Our worthy contemporary, the Hampshire Telegraph, was more unfortunate in his "statement of facts" last week, than in his "reasoning on comparisons" in the preceding one. After instancing the similarity of the civil administration of the Navy in Charles the Second's time and our own, which prepares us for a few extracts from the "Apology" next week, with the changes rung on "our own Attwood," &c. &c. &c., we are informed of what happened when Sir Joseph Yorke was First Lord of the Admiralty! and that Mr. Young is "illustrious!" Now we give Mr. Young every credit for his talents and intentions: we believe him to be a highly respectable, upright, and independent Member of Parliament, well informed upon most subjects, but prejudiced upon the policy of the reciprocity question. Whether he assumes to be classed as an "illustrious" with Rennie, Telford, and Charles Dupin, is another matter, and we think the worthy Member's aspirations are not quite so high. The Telegraph assumes to be a Naval authority, and informs us that the Asia and Ganges, of 2000 tons each, will stow 70 tons of water more than the Vanguard, of nearly 3000 tons. How stands the fact? The Asia is reported to be 2296 tons, and stows 305 tons of water. The Vanguard, of 2590 tons, magazine, ditto, and common tanks, stows 350 tons. The displacement of all the 84-gun ships is about 3600 tons. These are the facts, and we leave it to our readers whether it is creditable for the Hampshire Telegraph to admit into its pages such a statement as appeared last week. Besides, the question is not upon the carpentry of ships, but upon their form. An able letter has appeared in the Portsmouth Herald upon the subject of the comparative expense of building, &c., to which we refer such of our readers as are interested in this question.

Russia and Turkey.—(Extract of a letter from a Correspondent.)—"Much indeed it is to be regretted, that England and France did not arrest the progress of Ibrahim in 1833; the consequence of this political error being that Russia officiously interposed in favour of the Porte against Mehemet Ali, proclaiming to the world that if she took the Sultan under her protection, it was solely out of friendship, a sentiment so deeply impressed upon the mind of the Czar, that he could not think of allowing any other power to offer assistance, and by his advice, or rather at his command, the only channel through which this assistance could reach the Sultan was closed. At the period to which I allude, the number of Russian vessels that appeared in the Bosphorus was inconsiderable, and so wretchedly manned that half the number of British ships could have effectually prevented the ambitious projects of the Russian Cabinet being carried into execution. That the latter anticipates a visit from an English fleet is now a very probable circumstance, and the sooner Government expedites a powerful fleet to the Bosphorus the sooner that important question will be decided, namely, whether we are to permit that usurper, Mehemet Ali, to retain possession of Egypt and Syria, with an understanding on the part of Russia, should the latter be involved in hostilities with England, that the Pacha of Egypt shall not only retain his usurped power, but shall also assume sovereign dignity with the title of Caliph. As a friend to Turkey we can only recognise Mehemet Ali as a subject of the Sultan, and we must insist that all orders given by the latter in our favour be strictly carried into effect, cote qui coute. In a commercial point of view, the advantages England would derive, in assisting Turkey to overthrow the usurper of Egypt and Syria, would be incalculable,—for a more extensive and profitable market does not exist in any part of the world than that of Turkey, if Russian influence were destroyed. There is every reason to believe that the Sultan, out of gratitude for the assistance he would have received by the direct interference in his behalf, enabling him thereby to recover that portion of his dominions forcibly held by Mehemet Ali, that the Sultan, I say, would not only reduce the duties on imports and exports, but would give every facility to the extension of British commerce, which, in his present situation, he can hardly affect without giving umbrage to the Russian Cabinet. The latter have instigated the measures that have been pursued by Mehemet Ali against his lawful sovereign, as Russia sees with chagrin and apprehension that the Sultan Mahmood has introduced a higher degree of civilisation among his subjects, and that he has endeavoured (and in a great measure succeeded) to assimilate his empire with those European kingdoms which can depend upon their own strength for protection. If we allow the Sultan, say the Russian diplomatists, to consolidate his growing institutions, and to infuse into the hearts of his subjects some portion of his own determined energy, the hopes we have, for so long a period entertained of obtaining possession of Turkey will vanish for ever. Every one acquainted with Eastern politics must know that British influence in Persia is considered by the Russian Cabinet as an usurped supremacy, and every attempt is made to crush this power. Take for example the recent case of the late Futeh Ali Schah, in which Russia exerted herself to prove to the Persians that Schah Mohamed, who it was known was favourably inclined to England, ought not to assume the reins of government, and the prince's uncles were accordingly brought forward to contest his authority. The most trustworthy ally we can possess to defend our eastern possessions is the Sultan, but it is quite obvious that unless he be furnished with the means of destroying the power of Mehemet Ali, which in a great measure extends to the Tigris and Euphrates, he cannot uphold the immense interests we have at stake in India. Let us hope that the refusal of Mehemet Ali to comply with the terms of the firman granted to Lord Ponsonby will bring this affair to an issue, and that the advice you have so constantly given to English Ministers will, although tardily, be now pursued, that is, to get rid of Russian influence in Turkey, and enable our old friend and ally the Sultan, to snatch from the grasp of Mehemet Ali the territories of Egypt and Syria."

There is a rumour in general circulation, in quarters likely to be well acquainted with the fact, that the Duke of Wellington has declared himself a convert to the necessity of settling the question of Irish tithes in the manner recommended by his Majesty's Government, and that to this sentiment, on the part of his Grace, is to be attributed his recent abstinence from politics.—Globe.

The Queen, we exceedingly regret to say, has been suffering from the effects of a swelling in the face, occasioned by riding to a late hour with the carriage windows open; her Majesty has, however, greatly recovered during the last few days.

Their Majesties and the Court will take their departure for Windsor Castle at 3 o'clock to day, and will continue to reside there during the season, with the exception of occasional visits to St. James's during the spring. His Majesty will come to town on Wednesday next, and on every succeeding Wednesday throughout the season to hold his weekly levee.

Fairfax; also granting the dignity of a Baronet of the United Kingdom unto Colin Mackenzie, Esq., during the term of his natural life; with remainder, at his decease, to his second son, Evan Mackenzie, Esq., and heirs male, and in default of such issue, to his third son C. J. Mackenzie, Esq., and heirs male; also granting the dignity of a Baronet of the United Kingdom to the following Gentlemen, and their respective heirs male viz.—The Rev. J. B. Mill, Robert Wm. The Hon. Capt. Curzon, son of Lord Scarsdale, has succeeded Mr. Hudson as Private Secretary and resident Gentleman Usher to her Majesty, and will enter on the duties of his new office this day at Windsor Castle. Captain C. is cousin to Lord Howe.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, 22nd Feb.—Lord WHARNCLIFFE, on presenting a petition praying that the numerous railways now projected should be required to keep the lines of the turnpike road as much as possible, said he thought it desirable to adopt some means by which Parliament could judge whether the best lines had been adopted?—The Ecclesiastical Courts' Consolidation Bill, after a short conversation, was read a second time, and ordered to be referred to a Select Committee.

TUESDAY, 23rd Feb.—Lord WHARNCLIFFE brought forward his motion for the names of the Magistrates appointed pursuant to the provisions of the Municipal Corporations Act, together with copies of the lists forwarded to Government by the Town Councils.—Lord MELBOURNE had no objection to the production of the lists of Magistrates appointed, but as to the lists forwarded, viewing them in the light of confidential communications, he could not consent to their production. The Earl of WINCHELSEA and the Duke of WELLINGTON supported the motion. The LORD CHANCELLOR justified the course that had been adopted by the Government. After some further discussion, the first part of the motion was then affirmed—the latter part negatived—and their Lordships adjourned till Thursday.

THURSDAY, 25th Feb.—The Marquis of LONSDALE gave notice of his intention to move, that a message be sent to the Commons requesting a copy of the report of the Select Committee on Orange Societies. His object was to repel the base insinuations which had been elsewhere made against him. He treated with scorn the insinuation that he was capable of joining in a plan for changing the succession, and ascribed the whole charge to the malignity of party spirit. Lord WYNFORD intimated his intention of having given such a nature himself.

FRIDAY, 26th Feb.—Lord MELBOURNE stated that the provisions of the Poor-law Bill, with respect to the qualifications of guardians of the poor, would be seriously considered by his Majesty's Ministers.—The Duke of CUMBERLAND stated, those who acted with him had felt it right, after his Majesty's late declaration, to advise that the Orange lodges should be dissolved. For himself he should still maintain the principles on which they were founded.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 22nd Feb.—A petition from Dungarvon complained of an undue return.—A long conversation took place on the subject of the numerous Railway Bills before the House, Mr. P. THOMSON suggesting that there should be a General Committee to report the best course to be pursued for protecting public and private interests. Lord G. LENNOX afterwards moved the second reading of the London and Brighton Railway Bill. Lord Sandon moved that it be deferred for a week. Sir J. GRAHAM was also favourable to postponement, for the sake of inquiry. As 45,000,000*l.* were embarked in these speculations, the subject was worthy the consideration of Government and the cautious proceedings of the House. Sir R. PEEL also concurred in the propriety of postponement. The postponement was carried by 271 to 75.—Mr. D. W. HARVEY inquired whether the Carlow Committee had come to the resolution of proceeding with closed doors. Mr. R. GOLDBURN replied in the affirmative. Mr. O'CONNELL intimated that on Monday he should appeal on the subject.—The Tithes Commutation (England) Bill was, after some conversation, read a second time.

TUESDAY, 23rd Feb.—Mr. TULKE moved the second reading of Mr. Buckingham's Claims' Bill. Mr. LAWSON opposed it, and moved that it be read a second time that day six months. It led to an extended discussion—Mr. V. SMITH and Mr. ROEBUCK opposing it on the ground that Mr. B. having opposed the law, in spite of remonstrances, on his own responsibility, had no right to go to Parliament to be compensated for his losses. After considerable discussion, the Bill was rejected by 81 for it, and 125 against it.—Mr. HUME brought forward his motion for an address to the Crown to remove all Magistrates, &c., who remained members of Orange Lodges, or of any other political lodge, club, or society, bound together by oaths or signs.—Lord J. RUSSELL moved an amendment that an address be presented to his Majesty to adopt such measures as might be deemed advisable for the suppression of all Orange societies, and all other political societies using secret signs and symbols, and having associated branches. Col. PERCEVAL proposed that "Orange societies" should be omitted, and that the motion should apply to political societies generally. Lord STANLEY concurred in the amendment now suggested. Lord J. RUSSELL could not consent to omit the particular words. Sir R. PEEL supported the amendment. The discussion, which lasted to a late hour, terminated in the adoption of the amendment as originally proposed, without a division.

THURSDAY, 25th Feb.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL presented the answer of his Majesty to the address respecting Orange Lodges:—"I willingly accede to the prayer of my faithful Commons, that I will be pleased to take such measures as may seem to me to be advisable for the effectual discouragement of Orange lodges, and generally of all political societies, excluding all persons of a different religious faith, using secret signs and symbols, and acting by means of associated branches. It is my firm determination to discourage all such societies in my dominions; and I rely with confidence on the fidelity of my loyal subjects to support me in this determination."—Lord F. EGERTON presented a petition from paper manufacturers praying that paper duties might be equalised, and the laws thereon revised. The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER stated that the subject was under consideration, and when he brought forward the financial statement he would explain the views of government. Mr. GILLON was decidedly against the duties, as be considered they were a tax on the raw material of knowledge.—Mr. P. THOMSON stated it was not the intention of government to introduce any measure on the subject of timber duties at present.—Mr. WAKLEY gave notice of a motion for the evidence and verdicts of two Coroners' Inquests recently held on Marines, who had died after having been flogged. He asked whether the Member for Barnstaple intended to bring forward his motion to abolish flogging? Major PANCOURT answered that he should bring forward his motion, and should think it was wasting the time of the House if he did not press it to a division.—Mr. LENNARD moved for a return of the number of soldiers who have suffered either corporal punishment or imprisonment, and whether corporal punishment has been inflicted on the same person more than once, specifying how often it has been so inflicted. Mr. C. FERGUSSON and the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER wished that the subject should not be discussed now, as it had been investigated by a commission, and as government expected to have the report of that commission in the course of a week, it should then be printed. The opinion of the House, however, appearing to be decidedly in favour of the motion, it was ultimately agreed to. A return of the punishments inflicted on Marines was also ordered.

FRIDAY, Feb. 26th.—Mr. HENRY MAXWELL stated by direction of the Duke of Cumberland, that his Royal Highness had taken steps for dissolving all the Orange lodges established here and in the colonies.—Mr. MACLEAN called attention to the policy of Ministers with regard to Spain, which he condemned as the worst that could be adopted. He moved for papers, which were laid on the table. Mr. POULTER defended the conduct of government as well as that of Gen. Evans and his men. Mr. O'CONNELL deplored the cruelties committed in Spain on both sides. Sir JOHN ELLEY said, the brave Englishmen now serving in the armies of the Queen of Spain had been libelled. Col. THOMPSON maintained that the English troops in Spain were not inferior to the British Army. Lord MAHON had predicted that the troops raised to serve in the cause of the Queen of Spain would do the country no credit, and the event had confirmed his worst anticipations. Sir R. PEEL disapproved of the policy adopted towards Spain. He questioned the propriety of permitting a corps of British soldiers to enter into the service of a foreign state. Sir J. C. HOBHOUSE maintained that the course which had been pursued was consistent with true policy. Mr. DUNCOMBE approved of the interference with Spain. The debate was adjourned at 12 o'clock.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.—Baron Fain is appointed Intendant-General of the Civil List. M. Fain was principal Cabinet Secretary to the King. M. Gasparin will retain, under M. Mnuiulivet, the office of Under Secretary of State, which he held under M. Thiers. Marshal Gerard is appointed High Chancellor of the Legion of Honour.

The execution of Fieschi, Morey, and Pepin, took place on Friday, 19th inst., at the Barrière St. Jaques. They all died with the utmost coolness and fortitude. Pepin still proclaimed his innocence. Morey was silent, and opened his lips on his way to the scaffold merely to say that his infirmities, not fear, made him shake. As for Fieschi, he was to the last what he had shown himself from the first—undaunted. He actually leaped on the scaffold, and embraced the fatal block, once more declaring that he had told the whole truth, and consolidated Louis Phillippe on his throne by delivering up his accomplices.

SPAIN.—Madrid, 8th Feb.:—"Munoz, the Ex-Body-Guardsman, whose name has acquired a certain degree of notoriety, died yesterday. Christina, as may be well imagined, is plunged in the deepest grief. Munoz had for some time lost his reason, and given unequivocal proofs of insanity. This was occasioned by an attempt to poison him, the immediate consequences of which were prevented by prompt antidotes. But, whether from the effects of the poison or from the dose administered to counteract being too strong, the Queen's favourite became mad, and his alienation resisted all the succours of art. The ultra party, who abhorred Munoz, and dreaded his supposed influence over the mind of the Queen, are loudly accused of having caused his death."—A letter from a "high quarter in Madrid" predicts that the mass of the elections will be "in a Revolutionary sense." The military affairs of the Government do not appear to be more favourable than they have been for some time; the Carlists still creep on towards a point of success, and although repulsed, contrive to gain a little at every move ment.

UNITED STATES.—Intelligence has been received of the acceptance by the Government of the mediation of England in adjusting the dispute with France.

CIRCASSIA.—In November last, a body of the cavalry of this country, 8,000 strong, crossed the Kuban, and advanced as far as Stevlopol, a town eight days' march from their frontiers. After a slight resistance, they rendered themselves masters of the town, and after pillaging it left it to return home, carrying back along with them 300 of the principal inhabitants, and among them several Russian officers of high rank.

Theatres.

KING'S.—This theatre will open on Saturday next with the opera of La Straniera, in which the Countess Colloni Corti will make her debut as Alaida. Winter appears as Arthur, and Cartagenova as Valdeburg. Madlle. St. Romain will make her debut in the ballet of Le Rossignol. Madlle. S. Grisi and Mons. Perrot will appear in a new ballet in a few days. There are many novelties in active preparation.

COVENT GARDEN.—Miss Joanna Baillie's tragedy in five acts, entitled The Separation, was performed for the first time on Thursday evening, and though upon the whole well received, it will not prove an attraction. Experience proves the fact that we have no lady writers of tragedy. The very delicacy and slenderness of the female mind is adverse to any attempts at tragic composition. 'Tis true that, to a certain extent, a Mitford may have succeeded; but tragedy requires even a more masculine grasp, or it will not be overpowered. Ladies, we will admit, write pleasant novels, interesting romances, and pretty poetry, because in them they delineate life as they would draw flowers; they sketch character, colour conversations, and generally throw together some pretty groups of lovers and heroes. They cannot grapple with the passions—they cannot lay bare the human heart, and show the storms of passion that rage around and agitate it to its inmost core. They may indeed be said to describe characters, instead of calling them up and bringing them before our eyes. These remarks are very applicable to the tragedy of The Separation: it is a very shadowy and unequal work. The two first acts are full of mystery without interest, and were so little adapted to stage representation that they nearly proved fatal to the tragedy. The third act in part reminds us slightly of the third act of Othello, and contains the best scene in the play: we allude to the scene in which Margaret discovers that her husband is the murderer of her brother; but this is not well followed up to the denouement. The characters in the tragedy are not of that kind to awaken any particular interest in an audience, although, as far as regards the principal actors engaged, they were ably supported. Miss Faucit has added materially to her fame by her clever performance of the one scene already named. Mr. Kemble's Garcio was an able piece of acting; but the part is a bad one, and difficult to make anything of. The only other character deserving of notice was the Rovani of Mr. G. Bennett.

ADELPHI.—The Lent performances at this theatre commenced last week, and will be continued every Wednesday and Friday until Easter. The first part is called a classic entertainment—"The Gallery of Shakspeare," and is illustrated by descriptive recitations from Mr. Elton. The poetic offering to our immortal bard, commencing with "What's in a name," is we believe from the pen of Elton; it's well written, and was very cleverly delivered by that gentleman. We cannot say much in praise of the tableaux vivants. The subject of the first is "Juliet in the balcony on her return from the masquerade;" it is a copy from Sharpe's celebrated picture—we never saw a picture in a more disgraceful frame. The general tableaux, called "The Riches of Shakspeare," was poor indeed. The second part introduced our old favourite, Mrs. Fitzwilliam, whom we are always glad to see, particularly in a theatre of moderate dimensions, where we can enjoy her rich comic humour to advantage. Her new monopolylogue, is called Widow Wiggins, or Music Mad, in which she sustains six different characters, all in capital style. Her Master Jackey was irresistibly comic, and quite convulsed the audience with laughter. Miss Euphrosyne and Fanchette were also clever performances, and the songs introduced in these characters were given in a very pleasing style. This portion of the entertainment met with a most flattering reception from the audience; indeed it is the main attraction of these entertainments—as for what followed, the least said the better. The house was well filled. On Monday evening a new burletta, entitled The Balance of Comfort, was produced, and, considering all things, met with a tolerable reception. It does not possess the slightest pretension to novelty, either in plot or situation, and the dialogue is made up of commonplace stale jokes, familiar to every ear. The piece is not likely to benefit the treasury of the theatre, but may serve for a stop-gap until another novelty is ready, and the sooner we have it the better. It is also high time that that trashy affair Luke Somerton was withdrawn.

Literary Notices.

The Tin Trumpet, or Heads and Tales. Edited by Jeffetson Saunders, Esq. 2 vols. Whittaker and Co.

ADMITTING, as our Author or Editor does, that his work cannot set up much claim to originality, either in its serious or jocose departments, we must nevertheless give him credit for a very amusing collection of "Sayings and Doings," with whims and trite comments, which are alphabetically arranged under heads. We shall submit a few examples, which may satisfy our readers of the general character of the work.

"Abuse, intemperate, excites our sympathies, not for the abuser, but for the abused, a fact which some of our virulent critics and political writers are very apt to forget. Like ther poisons when administered in too strong a dose, it is hrown off by the intended victim, and often relieves where t was meant to destroy. If the wielder of the weapon be uch an unskilful sportsman as to overcharge his piece, he nust not be surprised if it explode and wound no one but imself. Dirt wantonly cast only acts like fullers' earth, lefiling for the moment, but purifying in the end; so that hose who are the most bespattered come out the most im-naculate.

"Bar—Independance of the.—like a ghost—a thing nuch talked of and seldom seen. If a barrister possess any rofessional or moral independence, it cannot be worth nuch, for a few guineas will generally purchase it. It must e confessed that he is singularly independent of all those cruples which operate upon the consciences of other men. Right and wrong, truth or falsehood, morality or profligacy, re all equally indifferent to him. Dealing in law, not ustice, his brief is his bible, the ten guineas of his retaining ee are his decalogue: his glory, like that of a cookmaid, consists in wearing a silk gown, and his heaven is in a udge's wig. Head, heart, conscience, body, and soul, all re for sale: the forensic bravo stands to be hired by the ighest bidder, ready to attack those whom he has just defended, or defend those whom he has just attacked, according to the orders he may receive from his temporary naster. Looking to the favour of the judge for favour with heir clients, and to the government for professional promo-ion, barristers have too often been the abject lickspittles of he one, and the supple tools of the other. M. de la B——, a French gentleman, seems to have formed a very correct notion of the Independence of the bar. Having invited several friends to dine on a maigre day, his servant brought him word that there was only a single salmon left in the market, which he had not dared to bring away, because it had been bespoken by a barrister.—'Here,' said his master, putting two or three pieces of gold into his hand, 'Go back directly, and buy me the barrister and the salmon too.'

"Ball.—Of the French balls there are few better than the following. A Gascon nobleman had been reproaching his son with ingratitude. 'I owe you nothing,' said the unfilial young man, 'so far from having served me, you have always stood in my way; for if you had never been born, I should at this moment be the next heir to my rich grandfather.'—Captain Baudin, the Commander of a French Expedition of Discovery.—On opening a box of magnetic needles, they were found to be much rusted, which possibly impaired their utility—'What else can you expect?' exclaimed the irritated Captain; 'all the articles provided by government are shabby beyond description. Had they acted as I could have wished, they would have given us silver, instead of steel, needles!' * * * In the examination of a Connaught lad, he was asked his age —'I'm just twenty, your honour? but I would have been twenty-one, only my mother miscarried the year before I was born!' * * * 'Do you snore, Abel Adams?' inquired a Yankee of his friend; 'No, Seth Jefferson, I do never snore.' 'How do you know, Abel?' 'Because t'other day I laid awake the whole night on purpose to see!'"

There are some clever remarks on clubs, and our author traces the course of the alienation and unhappiness of many married couples in the middling classes of society in the following order:—

"Husband.—The club—a taste for French cooks, expensive wines, and sensual luxuries—fastidious epicurism—a dislike of the plain meals which he finds at home, although the only ones adapted to his fortune and his station—confirmed absenteeism and clubbism—hatred of the wife, who reproaches him for his selfish desertion—late hours—estrangement—profligacy—misery!—Wife. Natural resentment of neglect—reproaches—altercations—diminution of conjugal affection—dissipation, as a resource against the dulness of home—expensive habits—embarrassment—total alienation of heart—dangerous connections—infidelity—misery! Of this account current the items may vary, either in quality or sequence, but the alpha and omega will ever be the same. It will begin with club, and end with misery."

We shall give one more anecdote, which appears under the head of "Day and Martin."

"We have heard of a saucy knight of the shoulder-knot, who, on applying to the irascible Colonel B——, while he was at his desk, for the vacant situation of valet, asked permission to state beforehand that he never touched a boot, and inquired who was to do the black work? 'That I do myself,' cried the Colonel, throwing the inkstand in his face; 'and as you never touch a boot, I must make my boot touch you,' with which words he kicked him down stairs."

We think we have selected sufficient to show that the work possesses sufficient of good as well as of oddities, to recommend it to the "wise and waggish," though, as already stated, it has but slender claim to originality, either in design or matter, and is not a little indebted to Joe Miller, whose assistance is acknowledged under the Latin alias of Josephus Mollitor.

The Sportsman's Annual. A. H. Baily and Co.

This is well worthy of being perpetuated as an annual: it is the most spirited that has come under our notice, for a more splendid series of pictures, displaying the various breeds of dogs, was never before published. We have first the Highland deer-hound, from a painting by Landseer, a dog becoming rare in Scotland, but which, as has been admirably said by Kuzzilbash Fraser, "were it only for the grand appearance of the animal, and its noble stature, as well as for ancient recollections, deserves well to be maintained by such as have the power to do so." This is followed by the setter, the fox-hound, the blood-hound, celebrated by the best and oldest of our bards:—

"The red dog is snuffing the breath of the morn,
And the deer is aroused ere the dews are up-drawn!
One spring at his bark, and one bound at his bay, Deep-mouthed and death-telling! The stag is away!"

The courageous and sensible Newfoundland, after A. Cooper, is an admirable engraving; and we shall take a verse in commemoration of its noble nature.

"Thou lovest Man—Man often Woman loves
And leaveth her. HIM thou hast never left!
Her he sees die, when most her love she proves;
And him you save when most of life bereft.
Her heart may struggle till neglect's cold wave
Roll to its core, and all her spirits sink;
But if man gasp above a milder grave,
Thou plungest in, to snatch him from its brink!"

The following anecdote of this valuable dog deserves notice:—

"A gentleman of Suffolk being on an excursion with his friend, and having a Newfoundland dog of the party, he soon became the subject of conversation; when the master, after a warm eulogium upon his perfections, assured his companion that he would, upon receiving the order, return, and fetch any article he should leave behind, from any distance. To confirm this assertion, a marked shilling was put under a large square stone by the side of the road, being first shown to the dog. The gentlemen then rode for three miles, when the dog received his signal from the master to return for the shilling he had seen put under the stone. The dog turned back, the gentlemen rode on, and reached home, but their surprise and disappointment, the hitherto faithful messenger did not return during the day. It afterwards appeared that he had gone to the place where the shilling was deposited, but the stone being too large for his strength to remove, he had stayed howling at the place, till two horsemen, riding by, and attracted by his seeming distress, stopped to look at him, when one of them alighting, removed the stone, and seeing the shilling, put it into his pocket, not at the time conceiving it to be the object of the dog's search. The dog followed their horses for twenty miles, remained undisturbed in the room where they supped, followed the chambermaid into the bedchamber, and secreted himself under one of the beds. The possessor of the shilling hung his breeches upon a nail by the bedside; but when the travellers were both asleep, the dog took them in his mouth, and, leaping out of the window, which was left open on account of the sultry heat, reached the house of his master at four o'clock in the morning, with the prize he had made free with, in the pocket of which were found a watch and money, that were returned upon being advertised, when the whole mystery was mutually unravelled, to the admiration of all the parties."

The greyhound, with its sleek beauty and aristocratic delicacy of form, is also from a charming picture by A. Cooper, and is accompanied by lays and legends with an episode of an old courser; then comes the meek and fond spaniel,

"A gentle dog!—as mild as beauty's breath,
To win man's gratitude, or hide his wrath;
Tame as a spirit fading into death,
Or sunshine sleeping on a lion's path;
Affectionate as Desdemona's love,
Whose sweet endurance all its wrongs withstood;
A creature, dwelling on God's earth to prove Bad men should blush to find a dog so good!"

In Denmark, the chief order, now called the "Order of the Elephant," was instituted in memory of a spaniel called Wild Brat, which had shown attachment to a monarch when deserted by his subjects. The motto to the order is—"Wild Brat was faithful."

The water spaniel, herrier, beagle, pointer, and tarrier, from paintings by the same eminent artist, equally deserve the highest commendation; they are most characteristic illustrations of the generous animal,

"The first to welcome, foremost to defend;"

Memoirs of the Life of Sir Humphry Davy, Bart. By his Brother, John Davy, M.D. 2 vols. Longman and Co.

Conceiving that the general tone and tendency of Dr. Paris's Life of Sir Humphry Davy was to lower his reputation in public estimation, his brother has undertaken the development of his character, trusting that his best vindication from calumny will thus be ensured. No one can read the work without the deepest interest; it is a well-written biography that does honour to the fraternal feelings of Dr. Davy, as well as to his literary and scientific character, and will certainly remove any unfavourable impressions that may have been created by the ungenerous and offensive remarks which disfigure the work of Dr. Paris. We shall briefly refer to a portion, with the view to its simple refutation. Dr. Paris observes—"It has been stated that, shortly after Davy's successful début as a lecturer, his manners underwent a change; and that, to the regret of his friends, he lost much of his native simplicity." He is also charged with rudeness of manner, flippancy, an inordinate admiration of hereditary rank, arrogance, and neglect of friends. We think, however, that the following extracts of letters from Davy best exemplify his real character:—

"To Mr. Poole.—In the bustling activity occasioned in cities by the action and reaction of diversified talents, occupations, and passions, our existence is, as it were, broken into fragments; and with you I have always wished for unbroken intercourse and continuous feeling.....Be not alarmed, my dear friend, as to the effect of worldly society on my mind,—the age of danger has passed away. There are in the intellectual being of all men paramount elements,—certain habits and passions, that cannot change. I am a lover of nature, with an ungratified imagination. I shall continue to search for contested charms, for hidden beauties. My real, my waking existence, is amongst the objects of scientific research. Common amusements are necessary to me only as dreams to interrupt the flow of thoughts too nearly analogous to enlighten and to vivify."

In 1804, he writes to Mr. Clayfield on the death of his early friend, Mr. Gregory Watt.

"His letters to me only three or four months ago were full of spirit, and spoke not of any infirmity of body, but of an increased strength of mind. Why is this, in the order of nature, that there is such a difference in the duration and distinction of her works? If the mere stone decays, it is to produce a soil which is capable of nourishing the moss and the lichen; when the moss and the lichen die and decompose, they produce a mould, which becomes the bud of life to grass and to a more exalted species of vegetables. . . . We know very little; but, in my opinion, we know enough to hope for the immortality, the individual immortality of the better part of man. I have been led into all this speculation, which you may think wild, in reflecting on the fate of Gregory! my feeling has given erring wings to my mind. He was a noble fellow, and would have been a great man. Oh! there was no reason for his dying—he ought not to have died!"

And as still further evidence in refutation of Dr. Paris, whom did Davy remember in his will? and to whom did he bequeath tokens of affection? Out of his own family! they were chiefly his early friends: as Mr. Poole, Dr. Babington, Mr. Pepys, Dr. Frank, Sir B. Brodie &c. In fact, the whole life of Sir Humphry Davy was such as to justify the remark of his attached friend, Mr. Poole, that "the more his whole being is known the more the man will be esteemed and loved, the more the philosopher thanked and venerated." And with this last eulogium we recommend this valuable and interesting biography to the perusal of every friend of a man who possessed the best attributes of nature as well as of science, and was an honour to his country.

Serious Considerations of the Proposed Alteration of the Stamp Duty on Newspapers. By C. M. Westmacott.

In a letter addressed to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Westmacott has put forth some very pertinent objections to the proposed scheme of abolishing the stamp duty, or, in other words, of destroying the respectability of the press of this country, a press which has with truth been termed the fourth estate of the realm. "To its loyalty majesty is chiefly indebted for security; to its integrity the country owes the protection of its liberties; to its respectability the government is indebted for the free exercise of the executive power—destroy it or degrade it, and the other three estates of the realm will crumble into atoms." The writer of the pamphlet depicts in strong terms the objects of the political agents who are urging the measure, and, in the event of government acceding to their wishes, he proposes that there should be introduced into any new law a clause for protecting from fraud and piracy original articles as they may appear in the journals, at least for forty-eight hours, so that the proprietors may derive some exclusive advantage from the exertions of their labour, enterprise, and expense: that any new law should contain a penal infliction for transgression exactly similar to the penalties and authority given to his Majesty's Comissioners of Excise; namely, the power to enter any premises upon information, and seize, not only the unstamped and illegal papers, but also all persons and materials of type, presses, and machines employed therein, which should be in such cases, upon conviction, forfeit to the state. Further, that some provision should be made for licensing the machines or presses wherewith newspapers are printed, or they will, as the case is at present with the illegal press, be plied in defiance of the laws, under every circumstance of secrecy and fraud.

There are various other suggestions well deserving of notice, and none more than that, if the real object of the proposed alteration is to encourage literature, it may be done by the modification, or total abolition of the duty on paper, which would materially benefit all classes of society, and could be productive of no injurious consequences to the country, or to the property of private individuals. Lord Melbourne and his colleagues will, we trust, give this important question the most deliberate attention in all its bearings, more particularly as the change must affect the feelings and opinions of the people, and be seriously injurious to the property of the present proprietors of the stamped press. As of the latter class, we thank Mr. Westmacott for his exertions.

The Parliamentary Guide. By R. B. Mosse, Esq. A. H. Baily and Co.

Mr. Mosse gives us a concise history of the members of both Houses of Parliament, their connections, pursuits, &c.; a synoptical table of their votes on the leading questions and principal divisions, from the division on the Reform Bill to the present period; with other useful information not only to members of the Senate but to the public generally. The little work appears to us to be compiled with great care and ability, and many of the notices of Peers and Members contain copious, interesting, and curious facts. It is an excellent pocket companion.

Stanfield's Coast Scenery. Part VIII. Smith, Elder, and Co.

These views of the Coasts of England, Scotland, Ireland, France, and Germany, are admirable specimens of the exquisite talents of Stanfield. Nothing can be more picturesque than some of the plates of the present number; they are singularly excellent. The work must be particularly popular with our naval friends.

CABINET, CHAIR, AND SOFA WORK

nufactured of the most seasoned materials. In the finish of irs, Sofas, &c., much depends on the quality of the materials 6, and the workmanship. It may not be unworthy of remark t a similar effect may be produced at a saving of nearly one , but which in the wear must eventually prove a serious dis- intment to the purchaser. This applies also to the manu- ture of Cabinet Goods, which, from being made of unseasoned terials and unsound work (that cannot be detected by the casual erver), can never be of that service and durability so essential. L. C. begs to add that he manufactures them on his own pre- es, and has always on hand a large stock of well-seasoned terials, which enables him to produce work at the lowest pos- le rate and of a superior quality.

In cases of burns and scalds, it immediately allays the most violent inflammation.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE

for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

(Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN.

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 25, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success.

"New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From WILLIAM HENTSCH, Esq., House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

STIRLING'S STOMACH PILLS, for

Health and Longevity.—An eminent medical writer has remarked, and experience has proved the fact beyond dispute, that those who are attentive to keeping the Stomach and Bowels in proper order, preserve health, prevent disease, and generally attain robust, cheerful, and healthy Old Age. For that truly desirable purpose, STIRLING'S STOMACH PILLS are particularly adapted, being prepared with the Sulphate of Quinine, and the most choice stomachic and aperient drugs of the Materia Medica. They have in all cases proved superior to every other medicine in the cure of stomach and liver complaints, indigestion, loss of appetite, sensation of fulness, sick head-ache, pain and oppression after meals, habitual costiveness, flatulence, shortness of breath, stomach coughs, spasms, worms, and fits in children and grown persons, and all disorders incident to the stomach and bowels. They are also truly efficacious in the cure of colds, agues, asthmas, rheumatism, gout, jaundice, dropsy, and gravel, and an excellent restorative after any excess or too free indulgence at table, as they gently cleanse the bowels, strengthen the stomach, sweeten the breath, cheer the spirits, brace the nerves, induce a healthy action of the liver, improve digestion, and invigorate the whole system. Females who value good health and personal appearance, should never be without them, as they purify the blood, remove obstructions, pimples, cutaneous eruptions, sallowness, &c., and give the skin a beautiful, clear, healthy, and blooming appearance. Persons of a plethoric habit who are subject to head-ache, fits, giddiness, dimness of sight, or drowsiness, singing noise in the ears, which indicate too great a flow of blood to the head, should be particular to take them frequently. They are so mild and gentle in their action that children and persons of all ages may take them at any time, as they do not contain mercury or any ingredient that requires confinement or restriction of diet. Many healthy aged individuals, some of one hundred years and upwards, make it a rule to take them two or three times a week, by which they remove the causes that produce disease, preserve their health, and keep off the infirmities of age, retaining, in a surprising degree, all the energy, vigour, vivacity, and cheerfulness of their youthful days. They should be kept in every family as a remedy in case of sudden illness, for, by their prompt administration, cholera morbus, cramps, spasms, fevers, apoplexy, and other alarming complaints, which too often prove fatal, may be speedily cured or prevented.—Prepared only by J. W. STIRLING, Chemist, 96, High Street, Whitechapel, in Boxes at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each, and may be had of all the principal Medicine Venders in the kingdom.

An inspection of Mr. Howard's method will immediately convince those at all acquainted with the subject of its superiority.

MERRIMAN, SOLE PATENTEE of the NEW METALLIC FOLDING HINGED BEDSTEADS, forming SHIP SOFAS, SWING COTS, begs leave to announce her removal to 97, LEADENHALL-STREET, opposite Billiter street. CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 124, OXFORD-STREET, near Hollis-street, established in 1830, than through the adoption of any other method whatever; as Domestics, with good characters, are in waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock.

Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for Hiring Servants; but if the Servant possess a good character, it certainly is perfect nonsense to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a Situation.

PORTSMOUTH, March 4.—(From our own Correspondent.)—H.M. sloop Serpent, Com. E. Nepean, arrived at Spithead on Saturday last from Bermuda, and sailed on Monday for Sheerness to be paid off. She had neither news or freight, but 19 emancipated convicts from the island. The Pantaloon returned from New York on Thursday morning. Lieut. Corry having despatches of importance from the British Ambassador, landed at 4 A.M., and immediately proceeded to London. In working the brig into harbour she got aground off Langston harbour, and required considerable exertions to move her off. She is in harbour, and must be docked to ascertain what damage she has sustained. The Quail cutter, Lieut. Bisson, arrived from Falmouth on Wednesday, and has since gone to Woolwich. The Pembroke was undocked on Monday, and is now in the basin. The Vanguard was taken in dock on Wednesday to have her copper cleaned; a large party of shipwrights, caulkers, and carpenters are at work on her, but there are no orders here to commission her or any other ship. The Bellerophon's lower masts are defective, and she has in consequence been hauled alongside the sheer hulk to have them taken out. The Romney was paid off on Tuesday. The Liverpool is still at Spithead waiting orders. Melville has bent sails; the officers and crew have vacated the hulk, and it is fully expected the ship will go to Spithead to-morrow. The weather has been for the last 3 or 4 days very unpropitious, or she would have been ready before. 40 horses for the Auxiliary Legion were embarked in the Flirt brig yesterday. Major Talbot, Capt. Creigh, and Lieut. Gray landed at Portsmouth on Tuesday from the barque Wave, having quitted Geo. Evens's service. The General Evans sloop had arrived safe with recruits from Portsmouth, but was getting under weigh when the Wave left Santander on the 22nd Feb., with about 150 invalid and unserviceable men: the passengers by the Wave give miserable accounts of the British. Lieut. Pyke, on sick leave from the Castor, and Mr. Huland, Mid., on public leave from the Endymion, came to England in the Wave. The Castor was at Santander, Endymion at Ferrol, Russell at Vigo. The James Watt was actively employed between Ferrol and Santander conveying arms, ammunition and Spanish recruits. Ships in port—Britannia, Melville, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Pantaloon.

SHEERNESS, March 4.—(From our own Correspondent.)—A Court of Inquiry has taken place on Lieut. Hill late commanding H.M.S. Alban, respecting the cause of his being superseded from that vessel in the Mediterranean. Sylvia, tender to the Howe, arrived from Milford on Tuesday. Serpent, Com. E. Nepean, arrived from Spithead, and on Thursday proceeded to Chatham to be paid off. The Achilles has been taken out of dock, and given place to the Poictiers. The Express, brig, Lieut.-Com. Croke, is nearly ready for sea, and will go out of the basin in a few days.

PLYMOUTH, March 3.—Pluto, st.-r., Com. J. Duffil went out of dock on Thursday, and stattad for the mouth on Sunday. Phœnix, st.-v., Com. W. Henderson, was docked on Sunday. Speedy, cutter, Lieut. J. Douglas, sailed on Sunday for Portsmouth. Camel lighter dragged from her anchors on Monday, and went ashore, during a heavy squall, near the ballast pond. She was got off without sustaining much damage. Remaining in harbour—Royal Adelaide, Phœnix, st.-v., and Harpy, brig; the latter will go out of the harbour as soon as the weather permits. At the jetties San Josef, Agincourt, and Cornwallis, for docking. In dock—Druid, Wellesley, Fisgard, Phœnix.

On Friday, 24th ult., the officers of the Royal Adelaide gave a splendid dinner on board, on the occasion of taking possession of their new ship and ward-room, having lately been transferred from the San Josef.

A saving of 1,000*l.* per ann. will be made by the new plan of placing the Ordinary in commission; 197 Warrant Officers have been placed on superannuation, and no men made in lieu.

The Astronomer Royal of Greenwich, Mr. Pond, has retired on 600*l.* a year, and his assistant, Mr. Taylor, on 175*l.* per annum.

The victualling establishment, Cape of Good Hope, is entirely reduced, as is also the whole medical establishment at the same place; the Naval Storekeeper, as at Cork, performs Agent Victualler's duties.

The Prince Regent transport, Lieut. Scrymgeur, Agent, has arrived at Deptford to fit for further service.

The Ordinary will be immediately placed in commission, the number of persons employed in it will be 530; the officers and men will be borne for wages and victuals on the books of the depot ship, and sent to do duty where required. The services of the Captains will be available for Courts Martial, surveys, &c., and, on the whole, it is considered an alteration highly beneficial to the naval service, and a saving of 1,000*l.* per ann. effected.

Thos. Raleigh, on landing his arm by a fall from the fore yard, received the sum of 50*l* from the Captain, officers, and ship's company of the Portland, on board which ship he was serving.

In consequence of the arrival of the last of the missing ships, and their being all now accounted for (except two lost), a steamer has been despatched to the Orkneys with orders to Capt. James Ross to suspend his voyage, and return to Woolwich.

H.M. sloop Wasp, 18, Com. Foremon, is shortly expected home from Vera Cruz and Tampico, with a freight of dollars, on merchants' account. Two more ships (whose period had expired), namely the corvette Lerne, 20, and brig Serpent, are also ordered home from the West Indies station, to be paid off.

The Star arrived at Jamaica on the 15th Jan., and was fitting up for the purpose of bringing home invalided soldiers.

Up to the 15th January the ships of war on the West India station were disposed of as follows:—At Port Royal Forte, Conus, Star, and Cruiser. The Gannet had gone to Carthagena; the Scylla to Chagres with mails; the Skipjack, to Belize; the Champion at Nassau; the Snake and the Nimrod to join the Admiral at Bermuda. The Pickle and Pike cruising. The Savage had taken the Renard's mail from England on to Jamaica.

The Portland and Medea were at Athens waiting for the King of Bavaria. The Malabar and Magicienne were at Cadiz when the Hermes left.

Col. Chesney, after encountering every annoyance, has succeeded in launching both his steamers, and was (Dec. 30) about to commence his voyage down the Euphrates.

By letters from H.M.S. Caledonia, dated 20th Jan., it appears that the detachment of Marine Artillery, under Lieut.-Col. Parke, C.B., has been landed and are in occupation of Forts Ricasoli at Malta, where they have daily gun and mortar practice.

STROMNESS, Feb. 15, 1836.—On the arrival of the Forth here, with thirty of the crew of one of the Franklin ships, Capt. Ross rendered every assistance; he hired hospital quarters for them on shore, supplied it with bedding, blankets, and medicines; and put it under the charge of a Naval Surgeon resident in the island. The poor fellows were all ill with scurvy, and most of them frost-bitten; e scene of misery on board the ship on her last arrival, as beyond description,—shockingly miserable.

The signal called the Kugelbaack, situated on the south de of the mouth of the Elbe, at the extreme point of the ainland, in the bailiwick, of Ritzbuttel, being about to be econstructed in the ensuing spring, the following particulars re promulgated on the subject—1st. The demolition of the resent beacon will be commenced at the beginning of pril. 2nd. The observation of the lighthouse at Cuxaven, by the Kugelbaack, will be discontinued during the econstruction of the latter. 3rd. Close to the base of the eacon a temporary structure will be erected about 40 feet bove the ordinary high water mark, with a blark barral at he top, which will remain till the new beacon is finished. Due notice will be given of the completion of the new gnal.

Court-Martial on Captain Leyton, Royal Marines, Portwich.—(Concluded from p. 132.)—The Court met n Munday last at eleven o'clock when Lieut. Hawkins deivered his rejoinder to Capt. Leyton's defence; he exressed his thanks to the Court for their patience, &c., and tated that he should have more fully entered upon the oints embraced in Capt. L.'s defence, if the Court had llowed him a copy thereof, than he otherwise could do rom memory, having heard it read but once! Lieut. H. roceeded to deny the imputation made by Capt. L. of ecriminatory vindictiveness, and endeavoured to impress pon the Court that he was only actuated by a desire of aving Captain L. an opportunity of freeing himself of vee a shadow of having been guilty of conduct unbecoming n officer and a gentleman, but he continued, we think, in n ill-advised strain, to point out to the Court that Capt. L. had not withdrawn himself from the society of Lieut. H. ed his brother officers, but had continued to meet them pon the same terms of friendship after the errors in the mess account had been pointed out to him," upon which ession Capt. L. had stated that it was possible some of is private accounts might inadvertently have been entered nto the mess book, and "if so, he was willing, and offered, o repay the money." Lieut. H. asked, "Was this like an onest man?" and that Capt. L., at the same time, referred he undercharge of the eleven shillings to a brewer's bill, hich, he, Capt. L., requested to be put down to the mess ook (then in Lieut. H.'s possession); this was on the 6th Jan. Lieut. H. now informed the Court (why not on he prosecution, as he was then aware of Capt. L.'s state. ient and request?) if they would allow him, he would rove by comparing the brewer's bill with the mess book, hat the eleven shillings was not undercharged, but had een set down therein. Lieut. H. also observed it had een attempted to prove that one of the officers, a witness, ad been more forward than the others in urging him, Lieut. H., to make the representation to the Commandant, but his Lieut. H. most solemnly and unequivocally denied. Lieut. H. also adverted to the evidence of Private Jackson, who, he contended, had asserted in contradistinction to Private Steele, that only on one or two occasions chops or steaks had been sent for. Lieut. H., in adopting this remark, acted very injudiciously, as it was, on cross-examination, elicited from Jackson that he "could not positively state, or charge his memory." Lieut. H. also denounced the evidence of the porkman heard in the defence, as this tradesman had been ordered to bring his "day-book" with him, by letter of the Judge-Advocate requesting his attendance, which latter this witness declared he had never received; this Lieut. H. considered as most extraordinary. At the same time this witness stated he did not keep a day-book, as his was a ready money business, and that he had always received prompt payment from Capt. L., and that he neither have bills nor receipts. Lieut. H. then commented on the evidence of Private Steele, which he observed, to say the least of it, bore a very strange appearance, "from the offhand manner in which he had given it," and the fact of this man having been servant to Capt. L., he thought it of a suspicious nature. Lieut. H. also felt himself bound to expel every idea of having accused Capt. L. of having done that which in his, Lieut. H.'s, examination he had admitted he would be liable to be charged with, namely, that of having destroyed bills and receipts when he had acted in the capacity of caterer upon occasions, but that he had made it a point to keep the last week's bills, whereas Capt. L. asserts that he had thrown all his into a drawer to which a servant had access, and, strange to add, that that servant had burnt most of them. (This part of Lieut. H.'s statement, it should be recollected, had been proved to be the fact subsequent to the officers having expressed themselves satisfied with the affairs of the mess book.) This was the gist of Lieut. H.'s address, which occupied near an hour, when Capt. L. asked the indulgence of the Court to reply to some parts of Lieut. H.'s rejoinder, which the Court assented to, and adjourned until one o'clock, to afford him time to prepare himself for so doing.

That Lieut. H.'s address was in bad taste, we must be permitted to remark, inasmuch as he lost sight of an opportunity to efface any impression of his being actuated by any malevolent feelings towards Capt. L., or to explain that which we omitted to state in Capt. L.'s defence, which was, that Capt. L. pointed out to the Court that in the charge given by the prosecutor, the word "wilful" had been left out, so that the whole charge, in fact (even if proved), amounted to nothing more than unintentional error, and which the prosecutor admitted any gentleman might be liable to. Lieut. H. never adverted to or commented upon this material point to himself, which was a most advantageous incident had it been properly dealt with, as Lieut. H. might have remarked to the Court that he was not versed in law, and being solely prompted by feelings which ought to animate the breast of every officer, he had not sought by any virulent epithets to maintain a charge of so serious a nature against Capt. L., but to afford him an opportunity of clearing himself from an imputation which every honourable mind must naturally shrink from; but Lieut. H. suffered himself to be carried by his own feelings from Capt. L. accusing him of being actuated by sinister motives, instead of which Lieut. H. ought to have allowed scope to the laceration Capt. L.'s mind had received, for it must be observed, however Lieut. H. might repudiate such a construction upon his conduct; on the other hand, it is always to be lamented by any officer that he should be brought to a Court-Martial upon any charge, much less upon one so materially affecting the character and honour of a man as that upon which Capt. L. has been arraigned, and which Capt. L. felt himself imperiously called upon to have investigated.

The Court having reassembled, the President, previous to Capt. L. commencing his address, read from a paper before him a notification from the Court, to the effect, that as an indulgence had been granted to Capt. L. to reply to some parts of Lieut. H.'s rejoinder to the defence, the Court must extend a similar boon to Lieut. H., therefore the Court recommended Capt. L. to forbear any further comment. Capt. L. bowed in acquiescence to the suggestion of the Court. Capt. Varlo, the Deputy Judge-advocate, wished to say a few words, but was overruled; and the President ordered the Court to be cleared for deliberation. Capt. Leyton, we hear, has been acquitted, but recommended by the Court to be more cautious in his conduct in future.

The Admiralty solicitor, Mr. Jones, has received instructions to prosecute a man at Worcester, for having in his possession fifteen hundred weight of copper bolts, supposed to be stolen from the different dock-yards.

A series of dramatic performances have been got up by the officers of H.M.S. Jupiter (the juniors assuming the female characters), for the purpose of dispelling the ennui attendant on a voyage to India. Lord Auckland and the Miss Edens have expressed themselves sensible of the happy efforts to amuse them, and the gratification they experienced from the attentions of these "sons of Neptune." His Lordship intimated that he should order a wing of the government House to be at the disposal of the naval officers during their stay at Calcutta.—Private Correspondence from the Cape.

It is said that Capt. Berkeley will be appointed to the Hercules demonstration ship at Sheerness.

Our contemporary, the Hampshire Telegraph, grows facetious upon the subject of Venguard and Clarence, which from the text has become the episode. We know not what its sober readers will think of this irruption of the "animal" into its solemn columns. We believe we are not singular in considering the genius of the worthy hebdomadal "too ponderous for a joke," to use the crack phrase of the day; and we can assure him we have gone farther afloat than Drury-lane Theatre to qualify ourselves in naval lore. We were bred to the sea, and bad breed it has been to us and many others.

An alarming account has appeared in a contemporary journal of disasters which had befallen the Flamer st.-v., Lieut.-Com. Pothury, much to the dismay of many families at Woolwich, who have relatives on board, particularly of her having been obliged to put into Weymouth on 3rd Feb. in distress on her voyage eastward. However, letters have been received from her at her station, Barbadoes, stating that the crew are in a most healthy condition, but they expect shortly to be relieved, and will return to England.

The Hermes st.-v., Lieut. Blount, arrived at the dock-yard Woolwich on Thursday afternoun, in consequence of injuries sustained in her paddles.

We are glad to perceive that Mr. Hume has surrendered the bill he had introduced on the subject of light-houses into the hands of government. We hope a comprehensive and satisfactory measure embracing the whole of the question will now be carried. We shall have some observations to make on this subject in our next.

CAVALRY.

3rd Drags.—leave Bellioecollig for Dublie in April.

8th Hussars—will replace the 7th Drag. Gds. in Dublin.

"Horse Guards, 14th Feb., 1835.

"My Lord,—Having, in consequence of your Lordship's letter of the 25th Jan., 1834, relative to the proceedings of the General Court-Martial held at Bangalore on the 9th Sept., 1833, for the trial of Lieut. T. Tilson Magan of the 13th reg. of Lt. Dragoons, who was sentenced to be cashiered, submitted the case of that individual to the King, I have the honour to acquaint your Lordship that under all the circumstances as they appear upon the face of those proceedings, coupled with a memorial since presented by Mr. Magan, petitioning to be restored to the functions of his commission, his Majesty has been pleased to extend his most gracious pardon to Mr. Magan, and to command that he be restored to his rank and station as an officer in the 13th Lt. Drags. I have therefore to desire, that his Majesty's gracious pleasure may be made known to the army under your Lordship's command.

(Signed) "Hill, Gen. Com.-in-Chief."

"General Lord Wm. Bentinck."

INFANTRY.

Coldstream Gds. (2d batt.)—have marched from Windsor to the Tower of London, to relieve 2d batt. Gren. Gds. which takes up its quarters at the Wellington Barracks Bird-Cage Walk.

30th—The Mary freight ship, with 2 officers, 1 Serj., and 30 r. and f., sailed from Cork on the 25th ult., for Bermuda.

46th—Maj.-Gen. Sir P. Carroll has been passing some days with the officers at Belfast. Col. Campbell, C.B., has obtained an extension of leave till 30th April. Capt. Armstrong is gone on leave of absence to attend the Assizes held at Enniskillen. The regt. is in hourly expectation of receiving a route for Enniskillen, to relieve 1st batt. Royals; two cos. have been detached to Downpatrick, and to Newry, to replace 33d, gone to Dublin.

47th—Lieut. Skipwith skipped over 8 Lieutenants in the Gazette, one of whom is a Lieut. of more than twenty one years' standing; so much for the purchase system he ought to be named Skipwell.

74th—It is very singular that the Paymaster's Clerk has served for a period of 29 years, and the Armourer Serjeant that of nearly 22 years, in their respective situations without any interruption.

77th—We recently noticed a communication Major Ramsay took upon himself to address to us. The following appears in our monthly contemporary:—"Capt. Ramsay, we know, is renewing his clandestine machinations in London, by permission of Lieut.-Col. Bradshaw, after his ineffectual application for leave from head-quarters. No doubt he is again plotting to dupe the authorities, even at the risk of a second conviction, more fatal than the first. The publication of the correspondence now before us, his insidious attempt, since the trial, to mislead and inflame a high-minded Field Officer of his corps, and the abject consequences of that attempt, would, if any sense of honour remains, suffice to decide the regimental career of the late prosecutor of Capt. Clerke. Assist.-Surg. Munro has, we perceive, retired from the service; this was inevitable: it remains that the principals, whose position has been arbitrarily inverted, be placed respectively on the footing assigned them, not only by the well-considered verdict of the Court, but by the pledges in Lord Hill's letters of 29th Aug. and 21st Sept.*—otherwise the service may be disposed to look nearer home for evidences of the SCRAPING SYSTEM. The following list of the members of the Court at Glasgow is conclusive as to the unimpeachable justice of its decision:—Maj.-Gen. the Hon. William Stuart, President; Lieut.-Cols. —Sir J. M. Wallace, commanding 5th Drag. Guards; Lord Thomas Cecil, 10th Hussars; Hon. C. Grey, 71st Lt. Inf.—Majors—Fresth, 64th depot; Hutchinson, 76th depot; Wallington, 10th Hussars.—Capts.—Wright, Rl. Art.; Lord A. Lennox, 71st; Westcorn, 5th Drag. Gds.; Giffard, 10th Hussars; Rowley, do.; Wright, 64th regt.; Gardiner, 76th; Donny, 71st Lt. Inf.

31st—have moved from Kilkenny to Fermoy.

32nd—1½ cos. moved to Carlow, 1 co. to Kilkenny, 1 co. to Carrick on Suir, 1 cos. to Goresbridge and Callen, 1 co. to Castlecomer, and 1 to Maryborough, to arrive between 2nd and 8th inst; 1½ comp., with head-quarters, to arrive at Kilkenny on 9th, and the comp. at Tullamore, do arrive at Kilkenny on the 5th.

Corfu, Jan 29.

88th—The grenadier company of the Connaught Rangers gave an invitation to the grenadier company of the Royal Highlanders to dine with them on Christmas-Day, which was sanctioned by their commanding officers, Col. O'Malley, C.B., 88th, and Lieut.-Col. Middleton, 42nd. Accordingly a table was laid in the barrack-room of the company, elegantly arranged for upwards of 130 persons, and at the hour appointed for dinner (two o'clock), the band of the Connaught Rangers was in attendance, and the grenadier company soon fell in, at an equal distance from each other, so as to allow one of their guests to fill the alternate spaces between each. The 42nd Grenadiers were then marched into the room, the band playing "The British Grenadiers," and when marching round the table, they filled up the intervals between each Connaught Ranger. Immediately after their commanding officers, accompanied by a great number of officers of the two regiments, visited the room, received by the band playing the "Highland Laddie;" and when they came to the centre, Col. O'Malley addressed the two companies to the following effect:—"42nd, I am proud to see you here, chequered as you are with the grenadier company of the Connaught Rangers. I have known the 42nd for a number of years; when a very young soldier, I fought with them on the plains of Egypt, where it is well known they distinguished themselves. Fifteen years afterwards I had the honour of meeting them on the ever memorable field of Waterloo, when in the personal command of the 2nd batt. 44th regt., then reduced to a skeleton, which caused me to be more closely attached to the 42nd, and where we fought as one regiment. The achievements of the 42nd on that memorable day are too well known for me to recount. I am proud to say that I have known the 42nd longer than any other officer in the garrison, and am happy to see them thus united with the Connaught Rangers. As for you, Rangers, I can say nothing. You have gained honours, but as I had no hand in leading you to gain them honours, I therefore hope you will conduct yourselves as you have always done, and hope you will part with your friends in the same good humour as you have met, and I drink all your good healths, wishing that we may soon have a glorious and successful war." This speech had a most animating effect, after which the band played "Auld Lang Syne." The officers then retired, the band playing the national air and regimental quick step of the Connaught Rangers, "Patrick's Day," accompanied by the loud and animated cheers of the grenadiers. Serj.-Maj. Persse, of the Connaught Rogers, being an old grenadier, took the chair, when the companies sat down to an excellent dinner. Many very appropriate toasts were given from the chair, all of which were drank with due decorum, amongst which was the Duke of Wellington, which was received with enthusiastic applause and nine times nine, with the recollection that he had been the leader of both corps in many a glorious field of action, and had led them on victorious while under his command. The Irish bagpiper then struck up "Erin go Bragh." In the evening several of the soldiers' wives of both companies were brought into the room, upon which dancing commenced, and the Scotch reel and Irish jig were kept up with great hilarity, the music being the Scotch and Irish bagpipe alternately, till 8 o'clock, when all retired to their respective quarters in as good friendship as when they met. New Year's Day being a festival kept by the 42nd regt., a suitable return was given by the grenadier company of that corps to the grenadier company of the 88th, when on this occasion every thing was carried on with equal fellowship as on the former.

91st—1 comp. moved from Newbridge to Tullamore, and 2 comps. to Mullingar on the 2nd. The comp. at Maryborough arrived at Mullingar on the 4th.

94th—1 co. moved from Limerick for Cappergwhite on the 1st, to arrive on the 2nd.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—We last week stated a gunner at Woolwich was under trial by Court Martial for reporting himself ill against the opinion of a medical officer. Other symptoms have appeared in this man's case, which caused the Court to be dissolved without any decision, and he is sent to the hospital. On the 26th ult., three brigades of the field batteries went out to Chislehurst Common, about six miles from Woolwich, for practice, under the command of Col. Cleveland (Horse Brigade), in the course of which two gunners received serious injury: the priming number, whilst serving the vent, slightly raised his thumb, and by so doing it is supposed a fragment of the cartridge of the former round must have ignited, by which means the gun exploded, and blew the hammer out of the right hand of the loading number, by which his hand and arm were so shattered as to require amputation, and the priming number lost his thumb. A Court of Inquiry has taken place on the subject.—Capt. Jackson's company from Bermuda (having been relieved by Capt. Woodf), also detachments from Barbadoes, arrived off the Arsenal on Tuesday evening last in the Hope transport, and were landed on Wednesday at 3 o'clock.

The appointment of Assist.-Adj.-Gen. of the northern district, Manchester, is vacant, by the removal of Colq Shaw Kennedy to the office of Insp.-Gen. of the constabulary force in Ireland, under the provisions of the bill now in progress through parliament.

Part of the cavalry side of Chichester barracks is to be pulled down, and the materials appropriated to the repairs of the infantry side.

Maj.-Gen. Lord F. Somerset held a Levee at the Horse Guards on Tuesday, which was very numerously attended.

Some uneasiness is felt in the military circles at the prospect of a sudden change in the strength and constitution of the army establishment. We have reason to apprehend that the intended change will comprise the reduction of two companies in regiments of infantry, and the complete break up of the depot system, which certainly has been expensive, and the reserve companies will be ordered to join head-quarters on foreign service. It is understood that veteran companies for garrison duty will be formed out of the effective pensioners now being called in for duty."—Limerick Chronicle. [We insert this paragraph solely with the view of giving to every particle of it a decided contradiction. It is a pity that our worthy contemporary can be induced to circulate such vague and unfounded rumours. The Army Estimates are completed, (we this day publish an abstract of them from one of the first impressions,) and we know positively that no such alterations in the establishment as those stated above are projected. It is possible that Lord Howick may hereafter propose removing British corps from the West Indies, and substituting black corps; but that is a measure requiring great deliberation. With regard to forming veteran companies out of the pensioners, no such intention ever existed; neither have the pensioners been called in for duty. The case stands thus:—Many communications having been received at the Horse Guards, representing that the relatives of deceased pensioners were improperly receiving the pensions, it was judged advisable to have a survey of all claimants, and to ascertain by a close examination the individuals really entitled to the pensions. From this survey has arisen the report so industriously circulated by some of our contemporaries that veteran companies were to be formed for garrison duty; and upon this, and other equally vague rumours, the above report in the Limerick Chronicle has been concocted.—ED.]

The following are the garrison appointments which have become vacant during the last year, and are abolished:—Lieut.-Governor of Carlisle, Governor of Cork, Lieut.-Governor of Dumbarton, Governor of Duncannon Fort, Governor of Gibraltar, Deputy-Governor of Fort George, Governor of Ross Castle, Governor of Upnor Castle, and Lieut.-Governor of Pendennis.

A requisition is in course of signature in Bethnal-green, for a meeting to petition parliament for the abolition of flogging in the army.

ARSENAL STORES.—A short time since, forty hands were "taken on" at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, to assist making carriages, &c. to replace those which were in store but have been sent out to Spain for the Queen's service. Such a number of hands, by the Board's order, were to be employed, as would complete the intended work in three months. Old hands are in much request, as the new ones engaged were found incompetent.

We are glad to find our excellent monthly contemporary following up the subject of the singular military anomaly on which we have several times commented. We extract the following:—"Amongst the miracles of the day, we have witnessed none more edifying than the sudden elevation of a gentleman named Bethune from the humble grade of Captain on the retired list of the Madras Establishment, to a MAJOR-GENERAL IN ASIA, thereby superseding every officer under the rank of General of the King's and Company's forces throughout that wide continent! The case of this miraculous supersaltation, to say nothing of a profusion of other honours with which we have nothing to do, is wrapt in impenetrable mystery; for no one with whom we have spoken, and our military circle is pretty extensive, has ever heard the name of the officer in question coupled with any professional act or operation claiming so transcendent a reward. We have not the slightest intention to offer gratuitous offence, or to detract from any claims or merit which may be the private property of this officer; we simply state the King's and Company's services have no evidence whereby to appreciate the expediency of the measure by which they are made to suffer. Having ourselves failed in eliciting any satisfactory elucidation of the matter, we leave it, perforce, in the 'palpable obscure' wherein it was hatched."

COURT-MARTIALS.

Lieut. John Shurmer Carter, 2nd N.I.

This officer was placed in arrest by order of Major Dowker, for having on 13th July, 1835, been drunk on duty when regimental officer of the day, and in having, at the same time, pertinaciously persisted in remaining in front of the regimental mess house, after he had received repeated and distinct orders, both direct, and through Capt. Edward Lyons, 2nd N.I., to go to his quarters, so persisting until such time as he was actually taken away by the said Capt. Lyons, and Capt. Alexander Hay Jeffries, of the same regiment. The Court having maturely weighed the evidence in support of the prosecution, and what the Prisoner has urged in his defence, finds the Prisoner, Lieut. John Shurmer Carter, guilty of both charges, and do therefore sentence him, the said Lieut. John S. Carter, 2nd N.I., to be suspended from rank and pay for the period of six calendar months.

(Signed) J. Hackett,
Lieut.-Col. and President.

Confirmed, R. W. O'Callaghan,

Assist Surg. T. Hunter, Hill's 2d Foot.

At a General Court-Mertial holden at Puonah, on the 20th Aug., 1835, Assist.-Surg. T. Hunter, of H.M.'s 2nd or Queen's Royal Regiment, was arraigned on the following charges:—

Charge.—1st. For conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, in having been in a state of intoxication on the 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th July, 1835, he being on the above-mentioned days on sick report.

2nd. For disobedience of regimental orders, and violation of the rules of the service, in absenting himself from his quarters on the 8th and 9th of July, while he was in the sick report.

Upon which charges the Court came to the following decision:—

Finding and Sentence.—The Court having maturely weighed all that has been adduced in support of the prosecution, together with the prisoner's having pleaded guilty to the latter part of the 1st charge; namely, having been in a state of intoxication on the 10th and 11th July, 1835, while on the sick report, and to the whole of the 2nd charge; and also taking into consideration what the prisoner Assist.-Surg. T. Hunter has brought forward on his own behalf, are of opinion that he is Guilty of the 1st charge.—Guilty of the 2nd charge.

The Court having found the prisoner guilty of the charges preferred against him in breach of the articles of war, do sentence him, the said Assist.-Surg. T. Hunter, H.M.'s 2nd or Queen's Royal Regt., to be dismissed his Majesty's service. Disapproved, (Signed) H. Fane, Gen., Com.-in-Chief.

Calcutta, 2nd Sept., 1835.

Remarks by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief cannot approve the proceedings of this Court-martial.

He deems that the prisoner's objection to the partiality of the President of the Court ought to have been attended to, and especially when the President declined to deny the expressions alleged to have been previously used by him, with reference to the prisoner; expressions which, if justly charged, undoubtedly gave to the prisoner a fair ground to plead his fear of the existence of prejudice on the part of the President.

There is also a great irregularity in having permitted the proceedings of the Court to go forward on the second day when Capt. Cooke, one of the members of the Court, was "absent without any reason being assigned." The Court ought to have been adjourned until Capt. Cooke's absence had been perfectly accounted for, and the cause of his absence, and the reasons for proceeding without his being present ought to have appeared on the face of the minutes. Under these circumstances, his Excellency orders the dissolution of the Court-martial, and that Assist.-Surgeon T. Hunter be restored to his duty, and that he receive a caution from the commanding officer of his regiment to beware of his future conduct.

His Excellency feels it necessary further to remark, that he considers it to have been a very indiscreet proceeding (considering the nature of the charge) to have nominated the Lieut.-Colonel of the regiment to which the prisoner belonged, to be the President of the Court-martial which was to try him.

Captain Humffreys and Lieut. Prescott, 8th Madras Cavalry, who were dismissed, have been restored to the service.

THE RECENT NAVAL KNIGHTHOODS.

Sir,—Pray, my good Sir, look after the naval heroes who received the honour of knighthood on Tuesday week, at his Majesty's levee. Out of seven there were only three that had seen any service during the late war, viz. Captains Bremmer, Brande, and Badcock; these are made of the old stuff. The others were Peyton, who lost his arm as a Midshipman, for which he has a pension of three hundred a year, but has seen little service, the Hon. Capt. Maude was at the battle of Navarino, and had two of his men wounded, of him I can say nothing; Hart was in India twice, and latterly Capt. to Sir John Gore, and has never commanded a ship in action; Bigland was Aide-de-Camp to Sir George Cockburn at Flushing as a Lieutenant, and there is nothing to show for his cross; indeed it is time the Admiralty should look after these would-be heroes.

An Old Tar.

[In reviewing the Guelphic Order, a task we propose to ourselves at no distant day, we shall notice the services of officers on whom the honour has been conferred. Captain Badcock, one of the officers referred to by our Correspondent, served as Master's Mate on board H.M.S. Neptune, in the memorable battle of Trafalgar, and is a deserving and justly distinguished officer.—Ed.]

THE SYSTEM AT ADDISCOMBE.

Sir,—Presuming that amid the extensive range of your readers, so many of whom are connected, either positively or relatively, with the Company's service, a few particulars connected with Addiscombe will not prove uninteresting, I take the liberty of submitting the following for your leisure revision, and if you deem them of sufficient importance to claim publicity, I shall be proud to see them in the pages of your Gazette. The first point to which I would direct the attention is to the system of preparation at schools dedicated to that purpose alone. The Engineer service being now so difficult to enter, and when entered such a splendid compensation for previous labour, that an immense majority of the Cadets are sent by their friends to make themselves completely masters of the Addiscombe course of study, under tutors properly qualified for that purpose. It is a pity that such a system as this exists at all, but since the evil is so general, it would be advisable for any father or guardian who wishes his son or ward to be an Engineer to make him pass two or three years previous to his entering Addiscombe at one of these schools. The identical routine of study is pursued. Hutton's Mathematics, Shakespeare, Hindustanee Selections, and Straith's Fortification, are the text books there as well as here, and any young man with moderate talents and perseverance, may easily manage to make himself acquainted with these so as to stand high in his term. At these schools a supply of what are termed in our slang fudges may be obtained, and I am sorry to be obliged to state, that little or nothing is done without them. Much evil results from this, as it weakens and enervates the mind by accustoming it to depend upon extraneous assistance rather than on its own powers. It is an evil, however, which I fear never will be eradicated, and that so long as Addiscombe exists fudging will continue.

I will now leave this branch of the subject, and the following remarks will apply to the conduct of the Cadets when in the seminary. Here, as well as in every other place under like government, much is in the power of the master as regards the pupil's status in his class. With this in view, the style of conduct will immediately present itself, and let me assure every one whom it may concern, and under whose eye these observations may come, that scarcely anything is of so much importance as to stand [wall with] them. Nor can they be accused of much partiality, because human nature will be human nature, and in obeying its dictates it is impossible for them not to prefer some individuals to others. The habits, the manners, the feelings of those who are under their charge are so varied, that among them some must be found whose powers of rendering themselves agreeable are more extensive and fascinating than those of their neighbours, and these always carry their owner well through a place like this; at least such is the inference of my slight observation. In Addiscombe, however, steadiness of conduct is of more importance than positive talent, because the latter, when unaccompanied by the former, is null and void, never by any chance acting as a screen to any encroachment on military discipline, whereas good behaviour always attracts notice and reward. Hence any young man with steady principles, who is not apt to be led away by the temptations to excess in dissipation which surround him, may consider when he obtains an Addiscombe appointment that a competency for life is secured.

CAPTAIN HANCHETT'S CASE.

Sir,—Referring to your valuable paper of the 8th Aug. 1835, wherein you so independently call upon the Right Hon. S. R. Lushington, M.P. for Canterbury, to move for a Committee of the House of Commons to investigate the charge I have so frequently and so publicly made against him, I hasteo to inform you that as soon as the term of six months imprisonment was expired, to which Mr. Lushington condemned me for calling on him as one gentleman does another for purposely keeping back from the table of the House of Commoos a paper of calculation of an annuity which was frequently alluded to in the depositions secretly made against me, and never shown me, by Lieut. Dombrain and his father, and which paper of calculations he afterwards made use of in his place in the House of Commons without alluding to its combination with the depositions, thereby proving to myself and to all my friends that its emission of being laid on the table (as it ought to have been done with the depositions) was not the effect of accident of a clerk or other person, but purposely done by himself. I have therefore addressed the following letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons, and sent it open through Mr. S. R. Lushington himself for his perusal; and as I find twenty days have now elapsed without his taking the least notice of it, either in his place in the House of Commons or otherwise, I once more request that your truly valuable and independent journal will endeavour to excite him, or in some independent M.P., some attention to this charge against him.

J. M. Hanchett.

390, Rue St. Honoré, Paris, Feb. 1st, 1836.

To the Right Hon. the Speaker of the House of Commons, &c. &c.

Sir,—During the last Sessions of the Imperial Parliament, I had the honour of transmitting to you three copies of the enclosed paper, and I transmitted to the Right Hon. S. R. Lushington, M.P. for Canterbury, two copies of the same, through the channel he had himself pointed out as my channel of communication with him, Messrs. Capron and Co., his solicitors, and I left another copy at his address given at the Vote Office of the House of Commons, No. 8, Duke-street, Westminster. As that member for Canterbury has allowed the last Sessions of Parliament to sit for seven weeks after the first communication to him without calling for the investigation his honour required, I once more avail myself of the only constitutional means left me in requesting of you, as the organ of communication with the hon. House of Commons, to take the earliest convenient opportunity, in the presence of the member for Canterbury, to shew the enclosed paper read in the House, in hopes of inciting that member for Canterbury to vindicate his honour by moving for a Committee for that purpose. I have the honour of enclosing this open through the Right Hon. S. R. Lushington, that he may not accuse me of doing anything underhand, or pretend ignorance of my having done so. I have the honour to be your most obedient,

J. M. Hanchett.

THE FOREIGN PACKET QUESTION.

Sir,—I beg pardon for again trespassing on your valuable columns with any further remarks on the Packet question, but I deem it right to reply briefly to Capt. Manderson's letter of the 5th inst., in order to assure this gallant officer that I regret extremely the allusion I made to his property at or near Falmouth, as to its having influenced him in supporting the merits of that harbour for the packets, in preference to one in Ireland: but it occurred to me that, whilst admitting the worthiness and the excellence of the character of the gallant Captain, yet, as human nature is not perfect, the desire to promote the interests of his connexions and friends, if not immediately his own, might involuntarily have influenced his judgment, in some degree, on this question. I am, however, now assured that his zeal has arisen solely from an earnest desire to secure to the port of Falmouth the continuance of the packets, under a belief that it is the best situation for them. On this point, however, I still beg most decidedly to differ from him; for I must again maintain that Bearhaven is infinitely superior to any other port in the United Kingdom for the Packet Station. As to the 20 hours' difference in the arrival of the mail from London at this port of Ireland, (even supposing it to be so much, but I believe 14 hours later will be the extent,) this is as nothing compared to the five degrees of longitude, which, for full nine months of the year (even by Capt. Manderson's own showing, in his pamphlets about Falmouth Harbour) Bearhaven lies to windward of Falmouth. Had the Pantaloon last month sailed from Ireland instead of from Falmouth, with the important despatches for America, would a merchant vessel from Liverpool have arrived at New York days before her? No, I am positive of this, and all I desire is, to see a fair trial made for one year, and then let the result of the different voyages determine whether Bearhaven has not tenfold greater advantages than Falmouth. Capt. Evans, the officer appointed to report on the most proper harbour in Ireland for the packets, has, I find, named Bearhaven; hence I trust soon to see them established there, for the public good ie every form, and most of all for the good of too-long neglected Ireland.

February 22, 1836. A Post Captain.

COAST GUARD SERVICE. (LETTER V.)

Sir,—To be consecutive in the history I purpose continuing, to give of the formation of this service, and to show forth its inconsistencies and anomalies in all their bearings, it is now necessary that I advert to another class of officers—namely, Inspecting Commanders, from which it will be seen that the immediate predecessors of Commanders in the Navy, men bearing high military rank, were, generally speaking, individuals without education or attainments, and such as ought never to have been assimilated or classed with them.

In the year 1816 the revenue cutters were placed under the entire control of the Lords of Admiralty, and their Lordships were requested to appoint naval officers to them as vacancies occurred. One of their first acts was to reduce all such Commanders as then acted as Inspectors or Commodores to their original level, and to pay off the smaller cutters which had been attached to them as tenders. These tenders were commanded by Mates—men who had in most instances risen in the service by the patronage of their late Commanders; and it is a fact that some of them had been promoted from the menial capacities of stewards and personal servants. They were, however, on the paying off of their vessels, considered eligible by the Treasury for the appointment of Inspecting Commanders, so that in the year 1822, when the control of the cutters was again transferred to the customs, the anomaly was produced of the Mate commanding his previous Inspector; and it is, I believe, a fact that one of the latter officers had to remonstrate against the hardship of being placed under the inspection of a man who had formerly blacked his shoes. The greater part of these men are still in the service, good and efficient Custom-house officers no doubt, but a somewhat singular component part of a Naval service.

It might, indeed, be a matter of expediency to appoint Naval Commanders as the equals of such men; but surely such an admixture is not calculated to keep the dignity of the Naval profession up to that high bearing so essentially necessary to ensure respect, and to secure to an individual eligible to be a Captain of a King's ship that estimation which he ought always to be held in. In a service purely Civil this admixture would be bad enough, and of course it could not be expected that there would be much cordiality amongst men so dissimilar in their habits and tastes as the persons I have described. But we are told that the service is now "essentially Naval:" the rank is certainly represented by the Naval uniform, which is directed to be worn, and what an anomaly is here produced. The Naval Inspecting Commander naturally looks upon the civilian as having no corresponding rank with his own, and as in all respects (in a Military point of view) his inferior. The Naval Lieutenant is a commissioned officer; how, then, I would ask, can he consistently act under a non commissioned officer? Yet he is obliged to do so if ordered to the district of one; and if the view taken by some Inspecting Commanders be correct, that they are entitled to the same Military honours which Capt. Bowles claims, then may this non-commissioned officer, distinguished by a Custom-house button only, order a Lieutenant out to receive him in a similar manner, and thus reverse the order of military respect by making the Captain salute the Serjeant!

Is it not to be regretted that such inconsistencies should warrantable stretch of power? Those barriers which an officer be suffered to exist, and which can only be supported by an inhas to protect him in his relative position in the Navy seem totally disregarded here. It is truly lamentable to find that Naval officers are, without any consideration for them whatever, made subject to the constantly vacillating regulations of the Board of Customs, and their rank and uniform subservient to every species of whim and caprice.

I will now show the amount of pay and allowances of the Inspecting Commanders, and then advert to their duties.

The Naval Commander receives a salary of 6*s.* per day, in addition to his half-pay of 8*s.* 6*d.* per day, 10*s.* per day for seventy days in each quarter for moving duty or travelling allowance (but not paid unless he travels), 90*l.* a-year if on a two-horse district, and 60*l.* if on that of one, 5*l.* for stationary, and a contingent account to cover postages, &c. In addition to which, his horse-taxes are paid; so the situation may be said, with half-pay, to vary from 469*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* to 499*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* The civilian has a salary of 200*l.* a-year, with similar allowances, but no half-pay. It will therefore be seen that there is but little difference in their amount of emolument. The civilian's appointment is, however, permanent, whilst the Naval officer's is only triennial.

It may now be expected of me to point out what are the precise duties of the Inspecting Commanders; but I must confess it is past my utmost ingenuity to do so, although I have studied the service as much as most men, and have had excellently good opportunities of so doing. Were I competent to the task, I should do an infinite benefit to the service generally, and more especially to the Inspecting Commanders themselves.

The service is so badly defined, and subject to such extraordinary change and uncertainty, that no officer can sure whether or not he performs his duty correctly. Wh one officer does in any particular matter is no authority another; and, indeed, what be, the aforesaid officer, d correctly to-day, will be considered irregular to-morro The Inspecting Commanders generally must, and I thi will, acknowledge that scarcely a week goes by that they not receive some contradictory order, memorandum, or c cular, bearing either retrospectively or prospectively up their duties, and calculated to produce a confusion and p plexity unknown in any other branch of the public servi It will naturally be asked whether there is not a book of structions, and whether the precise duty of every office not therein pointed out, and the relative position of e and all fully defined? I answer, there are no tome there fo extant, and the book of general instructions (the others plying to courts of inquiry, mounted guard, and playing soldiers) more stupendous in size than the instructi issued for the guidance of the whole Royal Navy. B Sir, I pity the poor wight who takes this volume up for authority, and acts upon it, for as surely as he does, es cially if he be a sensitively high-minded man, will he made to wince under the rap on the knuckles of some cial underling in the Coast Guard office for some sort of parent irregularity in his duty; and these indirect re mands, although in somewhat measured language, ill-timed and discourteous, and have not, I am certain, sanction of the Comptroller-General, although they ma times bear his signature, but come, I believe, from subordinates who will not take upon themselves a little ditional trouble.

What a system! but to proceed. The truth is, Sir, almost immediately after the general instructions w drawn up, the Board of Customs began to fritter them a by memorandums, orders, and circulars, and have contin to do so for upwards of six years; the consequence is, it is now difficult to find a single article that is not mo lated, qualified, or superseded, and can no longer be ta in its literal bearing. An officer, however, on his first pointment to this service (for he can have no intuitive kn ledge of its various changes), naturally acts upon the af said printed instructions, but is soon referred to a sub quent order. Again, resolved to be more correct, he, the second instance, looks over the ponderous accumulat of papers he finds in office (the instructions being issued July, 1829), and meets what he supposes the identi thing he wants; but in this instance he is no more fortun for he is then told there is a later order. Discomfitted all points, tired and vexed, his only alternative is to ap to some officer who has been in the service longer than h self, and has acquired some smattering of it by r Thus, an Inspecting Commander plods on for the first ye soured in temper and disposition, and taking as perso those gentle reprimands which all are subject to, and wh are, in fact, the fault of a most faulty system. The seco year he becomes indifferent to them, and all the incon tencies of the service. The third, he probably acqui tact enough to get over his duty comparatively easily, to escape the distinguished notice of the rapping o tlemen. And when, at last, he retires (if not promote he does so fully impressed with the beauty of the syste and exclaiming, as all must who know it, what a fresch service, to be sure!!!

CAPTAIN GLASCOCK'S MANUAL AND A MASTER, R.N.

Sir,—In your Gazette, published for the interest of navy, of the 20th inst., I was very sorry to see such letter as the one signed Master Employed; and as you ha so judiciously thrown the glove in vindication of Triste I will, should a better not be found, take it up, upon t principle only, that it is not worth T.'s notice, and in he that he will not waste that time be so laudably and humane appropriates for the benefit of the Navy generally, in endeavouring to promote the interest of all, whether employ or not, and to prevent, if possible, his entering into an unnecessary vindication, or be dragged into an explanati where it is not required. I must here, Sir, respectfully h leave to remark, that I think it would be much better w the Navy generally to follow T.'s example in advocati the interest of the profession they are members of, than e brace every opportunity (with some only) to endeavour to find a hole to his coat were there is none, and not wish fill the columns of your Gazette with vindictive observati and unnecessary spleen.

The universal interpretation of that part of T.'s letter you of the 21st Dec. last, as referred to by the M. E., w that he was paying the Masters of the Navy the high compliment that could possibly be conferred on them. did not contain a single syllable that could or ought to b given offence to any one; and where there is not any pressed or meant, no offence can possibly be given (it is true no one can help the conviction of conscience); consequently, Sir, there does not require any vindication or explanation on that head. And with reference to that part of the M. E.'s letter respecting coats, or any part of the wearing apparel of a Master, there was not any mention or even allusion made to them by T., much more whether the coat the M. E. were was paid for or not, nor did either T. or the Navy require to know what family he had. The M. E. has therefore, Sir, unnecessarily and wantonly required of T. to enter into a pro and con litigation upon an imaginary grievance, that arose and dwelt in his own breast only. It therefore would have been much better had he read Capt. G.'s Manual before he wrote his letter, or at any rate before he sent it.

I presume, Sir, from your note under the latter of the M. E. I need not quote any other part of it, and only notice it as a letter, when from the general tenor of it I should conceive that the person who wrote it had not served the first six years of his sea service in the cockpit, otherwise he would have known that it would have been folly, nay, even madness, for a vessel that only carried quakers in her port-holes to range up alongside of an admitted regular man-of-war, cruising under the flag of peace and good will to all men, on whose pendant was engraved the motto, "Malo mori quam foedari," and carrying guns of metal, whose broadside, if she did send one, would be sure to sink the pretender, or he would never have written that letter. I therefore hope, Sir, T. will spare him, for the generous and brave always love mercy.

I cannot conceive, Sir, why men will be so fond, after the many cautions they have had, of criminating themselves. Directly a man attempts to vindicate himself of a charge he is not accused of, that moment he convicts himself. In the latter alluded to of the M. E., a defence is propounded to a set of charges not in existence, but presumed from an imaginary self-conviction. I cannot see in T.'s letter to you of the 23rd Dec. last, which is now before me, a single charge against any one; on the contrary, unless it is where T. says, that a Master on board is a greater man than he thinks for, and that the writer of the M. E. is not a great man, but a little man. With respect to the word knowledge, Sir, I am apprehensive that the M. E. has not properly defined that word. Probably it would be as well if he would read the Cambrian of the 5th of April, 1834, where the word knowledge is defined, as spoken by an ancient, thus, "My knowledge only teaches me how ignorant I am; my ignorance only teaches me how knowing I am. The possession of knowledge requires thought; the more knowledge a man possesses the more thought he wants; but the more man wants thought, the less intellectual he is. And when a man possesses more knowledge than understanding, his intellect is in an enviable condition." And again, Sir, the M. E. launches out with invective against all on board, even by a side wind at the Lords of the Admiralty. What have they or T. to do with the conduct of others towards him? No doubt abuses have and do exist, but the Lords of the Admiralty cannot redress them all at once. I know they have every inclination to remove every grievance that may exist, but cannot so speedily as they would wish; for it must be admitted to be a very delicate undertaking for any set of governors the moment they enter office to upset the decrees of their predecessors.

I therefore hope, Sir, that the M. E. will, when mature reflection gets possession of him, make the requisite honourable amends to the unflinching and uncompromising advocate of the navy, Tristram. Should he not, Sir, I hope, nevertheless you will be pleased to plead for him, and beg of T. to be merciful. The brave are always merciful, for without mercy they cannot be brave. I therefore hope, Sir, that in this case T. will be pleased to temper his judgment with mercy by passing the sentence, Go, and read the book. And will, in concluding, beg of the M. E. in future to attend to and adopt the advice left by the Earl of Rutland, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, as written in the 17th No. of the Rover in 1834, viz. "1. Be always employed; 2. Look to the issue; 3. Be furnished with a friend; 4. Reflect upon thyself." TYRO.

[We certainly coincide in opinion with Typhis—Tristram must be merciful. Were he to give the self-sufficient "soundings" his due, the Employed Master would sink under the infliction of the literary lash. We shall merely remark, that were the Masters of the service such perfect adepts in nautical science, and so thoroughly masters of the several important and responsible duties imposed on them, why, may we ask, is the constant cry of Captains and Commanders "for heaven's sake recommend me a good Master," perpetually assailing the ears of professional friends? The Employed Master will doubtless receive the thanks of a grateful grade, for his able advocacy of the cause and calling of the "somebodies" of the service. His refined feelings and gentlemanly "taste" are ingenuously exemplified in the vacation for confession of the unpaid price of his ready-made [illegible], for his words and meaning are on opposite tacks. He desires "to confess the cape," as Shakspeare has it, and to promulgate the interesting fact, that he has "not yet paid" to Mr. Moses the price of his slop-cut coat. Well may the Masters of the service exclaim, "defend us from our friends!" As to "winding chronometers systematically," as a proof of system, the less of that boast the better. The dull memory of the Master is always jogged up by the jolly at the cabin door.—ED.]

* "I continually want a coat, the price of which is 3*l.* 10*s.*, and having a family, not yet paid for; how much less could I afford seven guineas for a [illegible] for the same garment.—Letter of Master Employed.

SAVING THE SLOOP LOVELY.

SIR,—Having been an eye-witness to the noble exertions of Mr. Burt, Tide Surveyor at Appledore in this port, and his boat's crew, in saving a vessel which was cast on shore on Northern Burrows, a few miles from his station, herewith I beg to send you the copy of a letter from the Master of the said vessel to the Collector of this port, upon which case, in justice to the officers, permit me to trouble you with a few remarks. The Master is part owner of the vessel which was not insured, and it is all the property he has in the world. Had the vessel not been got off on the 16th inst. she must have become a complete wreck the following day, when a heavy gale came on. I admit there was much personal danger in attempting to get her off, hence, perhaps, the excuse for the natives demanding so large a sum. When those circumstances were reported to the Collector of the Port, he called upon the men who have now saved the vessel, as a common act of humanity, and for the credit of their country, to make the attempt gratis, and without the slightest prospect of a reward, they did so at the risk of their lives, and, happily for the poor Master's sake, their exertions were crowned with success, and the vessel is now safe in harbour. The only disgraceful occurrence in this affair has been, that some disappointment was felt by persons interested in this case, who chose to look upon the officers' conduct as an interference with their expected reward, and an anonymous letter was sent to the proper authorities, containing pure inventions of the most infamous falsehoods against the officers. Now the fact is, that the officers never interfered until the terms were refused by the Master, and his mind quite made up to await his fate, solely from the circumstance of its being quite out of his power to pay the sum demanded. Z. Z.

SIR,—I humbly beg to return you my sincere and grateful thanks for your kindness to me in distress, granting me the help of the officers to get my sloop Lovely off Northam Burrows, and bring her into Appledore, and without their assistance, there undoubtedly she would have remained, but through their most praiseworthy and active exertions, they succeeded, and got her to this port. Therefore, under due consideration and my conscience, I consider myself in duty bound to make the said officers a present of the sum of five pounds, as an acknowledgment for the great risk of personal safety, and the important service they have done me, (if it were in my power, I should make them a large present,) which I beg you will be pleased to accept of for the said officers. I am a poor man, and could not get any help from any person, under the enormous sum of fifty pounds, as was asked me for assistance, which sum I could not raise. I am, &c., DAVID JAMES THOMAS, Master of the sloop Lovely of Cardigan.

RETIRING PENSIONS TO NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS OF THE BRITISH ARMY.

SIR,—Having read in your very valuable and interesting paper several well written articles appertaining to the pay and pensions, &c., of the British army, I am induced to offer a few remarks on the pensioning of non-commissioned officers and privates. By a Warrant issued in 1829, an indulgence was held forth for two non-commissioned Officers and one private, to be discharged annually in every regiment of an establishment of 700 rank and file. The individuals so recommended must have served twenty-one years in the infantry, and twenty-four years in the cavalry, have never been convicted before a Court-martial, and must have borne an irreproachable character, &c. The foregoing I consider a great indulgence to deserving soldiers; but the lopping off of 2*d.* per diem from their regular pension being the conditions on which they are to receive such indulgence, makes it press rather severe on the old and meritorious soldier. Instead of 1*s.*, he receives but 10*d.* But this is not all. A Non-Commissioned Officer or soldier, after having served say thirty or thirty-five years, can claim no more by this regulation than the person who only served exactly his twenty-one years.

I think, Sir, you will concur with me that this regulation should be reconsidered:—a soldier serving ten or twelve years over the stipulated period (and perhaps a great part of that service in the East or West Indies), should not be put on an equal footing as regards pension with the soldier who only served twenty-one years, although each may have been granted his discharge at his own request.

Should you consider the above observations worth inserting you will not only confer a favour on the subscriber, but a lasting obligation on many a deserving old veteran, who considers it rather hard after a long course of services in foreign climes to forfeit from 2*d.* to 6*d.* per day, by taking his discharge at his own request on the modified rate of pension. AN OLD SOLDIER.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ROYAL ARTILLERY.

SIR,—I have often read with pleasure in your valuable journal your observations for the encouragement of the meritorious and deserving class of men called Non-Commissioned Officers of the Army. I will show you how they encourage merit in the Royal Artillery, without fear of contradiction, as I have it from good authority, and I am surprised that that gallant officer who commanded the artillery and directed the operations against St. Sebastian, and stands so high in the estimation of the Duke of Wellington in the Peninsular war, does not interfere in such appointments. A Serjeant Major is to be placed on the pension list, after twenty-seven years' service to make room for a Serjeant after thirty years' service. Is there anything more absurd than this? It is well known to officers that the energy in going from any Non-Commissioned Officer after this length of service. I think it would be much better to provide an active and worthy Non-Commissioned Officer with an easy situation, and remove him from the toils of the field, which he would be subject to if called into actual service. More on this hereafter. INQUISITOR.

PROMOTION OF THE SUBALTERNS OF THE ARMY.

SIR,—Having seen various propositions for giving promotion to the old Subalterns of the Army, will you allow me to suggest the following.

Give to Subalterns on full pay of 20 years' standing brevet rank of Captain (with or without the allowance attached to that rank), at the same time fill up all the vacancies of Captains on the retired list, or on the British half-pay, with Brevet Captains from full pay, if they choose to accept it. This would be no expense to the public, while it would give promotion to the Subaltern of long standing and the old Subalterns would have no objections to it, as the rank would still go on as Captains, with the prospect of the unattached rank as vacancies occurred. I believe Subalterns of 15 years' standing, while in India, are Brevet Captains, and receive the allowances of that rank, but some years ago there was such a rank in the army. Now the warrant of 1834 only Subalterns having 20 years' full pay, are entitled to the unattached rank of Captain, so that a Subaltern of 20 years' standing, with 10 years' full pay, must wait for 10 years more before he can receive the unattached rank, certainly a very pleasant prospect; but if he had the brevet rank of Captain during those 10 years it would be some consolation for his hard bondage. The warrant of 1834 took effect from the 1st April, it is therefore nearly two years since, and during that time only Subalterns have received the unattached rank of Captain out of 200 at that period (up to 1816) on the list. It will therefore, take some logic to make the Army consider the warrant of 1834 as a great boon.

A SUBALTERN OF TWENTY YEARS' STANDING.

ADMIRALTY REGULATIONS AND COAST GUARD SERVICE.

SIR,—The Admiralty, with that feeling which characterises their attention to the respect and comfort of our officers, have issued orders by which the Directors of Police (Naval Lieutenants) are relieved from the disagreeable duties of sitting up for, or rising to let in and out, officers, attendants, or visitors, of the dockyard, after 9 o'clock. This duty in future devolves on the Inspector after the gate is closed for the night, and most sincerely do hope this may lead to the immediate discontinuance of NAVAL LIEUTENANTS turning out a guard to the HEAD of the Coast Guard departments, an honour not even allowed to the Admiral of the Fleet, or an Admiral bearing the union flag of the main (nor, indeed to ROYALTY itself), and which in Ireland has been carried to such an offending degree that a Lieut., a Chief Officer, acting as Inspecting Commander, during the casual absence of the actual Inspecting Commander, has demanded this honour to be paid to him by the Lieutenants, his brother chief officers of stations in his own district, over whom he was only temporarily employed, during the absence of their established Inspecting Commander. This new regulation respecting the Police, is hailed by all residents and visiters of the dock and victualling yards as a great boon indeed, and rigidly attended to, will prevent the above persons, officially FEMALES, from being improperly detained at the gate at the mercy of bad weather, and the customary insults of the man-port towo, while the Director had to dress before they were admitted. # Naval and Military Gazette.

A recent writer has observed, "that any attempt to convert India into a source of Ministerial or Royal patronage will inevitably hasten the downfal of British dominion in it, or that if the Minister is once empowered to reward his political friends by appointments in the East, India will soon cease to hold the sway of England at all." This passage has been forcibly called to mind by the late intriguing that has been going on somewhere regarding the nomination of a Governor and Commander-in-Chief for Madras.

The former appointment has we understand been offered to Lord Errol, and fortunately for that Presidency he has declined it. The latter was offered to Sir James Lyon, and he has declined also. Without wishing to disparage the abilities of the one, or the military fame of the other, we will ask in what respects have they been singled out from the herd as the most eligible for the offices respectively offered them, when so many others are available, who, by long experience in India, are so much better qualified for them? Neither the one nor the other has ever crossed the equator, or been within 16,000 miles of the country they were asked to govern, or in the remotest degree connected with it. When it is remembered who Lord Errol is, and that Sir J. Lyon has long been one of the favoured few at this and the Hanoverian Court, can any one deny this being a flagrant instance "of converting India into a source of Royal patronage;"—and did not Lord Heytesbury's recal show that the Government of India is mixed up with home politics, in spite of the many warnings that have been given against a system engendering so much peril to its stability? Do not both these cases prove that the Court of Directors are mere cyphers, and that it is an absurd deception denominating them Directors, and the Indian Army their servants, when there does not appear to be one member of their Board gifted either with energy or talent sufficient to uphold their weight and authority, and thus enforce a little more respect for their opinions and wishes in matters of so much importance to the country, with whose interests and welfare they are intrusted?

The whole system of Indian administration is already on the wane. The Native armies are almost disorganised by the reckless innovations of the late Governor-General. The authority of officers is annihilated, the Sepoys have been persuaded to withdraw their confidence from them, and look to head-quarters as the only source of redress for their grievances. Lord W. Bentinck's whole policy was to disunite the men from the officers as much as possible; they are mismanaged, and taught to look on every act of their officers as oppressive and unauthorised; a ridiculous consideration is often evinced for them that they were never before accustomed to receive, and they are raised to such consequence in their own estimation that they will naturally soon think of taking advantage of it at our expense,—in proportion as their officers' authority is withdrawn so is their respect for them, they are no longer the obedient orderly soldiers, but are converted into a discontented cavilling set of lawyers.

In our former numbers we have given many proofs of the disorganised state of the Indian Army, and, by way of re-establishing discipline, an officer is selected to command it who is entirely ignorant of its constitution. Has the Indian Army no one in this country to look to for redress and protection against political intrigues and Court favour? Will none of the retired officers, by going into Parliament, obtain a place wherein they may stand forth in defence of their comrades, and exert the influence which their talents, rank, or fortune may have given them in defence of the people of India? Is that vast population and large army to be governed and commanded at the caprice of any individual unacquainted with the country and ignorant of the service? and will not one of the Directors urge the prior claims of their own officers, and thus confer well earned reward on the individual, and justice on the army and people of India, in the nomination of one of them, to one of the offices now vacant at Madras, either as Governor or Commander-in-Chief?

We learn by letters from France, that their ships of war in commission are all to be placed on the war establishment, and we are informed that the Russians have always been so. This measure we consider a very politic and a very wise one, and we confidently hope and believe that ours will be all similarly equipped; for, as we have again and again maintained, one ship fully manned and fully appointed is far better than two with reduced complements, for any actual service that may be required against the ships of any other power; besides, in the one case, we should, by gaining the victory, receive additional glory and renown, whereas in the other, in the event of defeat, our national honour would be deeply impaired, and the spirit of our brave sailors would experience a serious check, whilst that of those of the enemy would rise in an equal ratio on finding themselves the conquerors. Let us hope, then, that whatever ships we have at sea will be well and fully manned, and appointed in every way, and that they may thus be enabled, as they have ever been wont to do heretofore, to dare those of equal, or even moderately superior force, of any other state.

It is with much satisfaction we learn from various communications, especially of "a General Officer of Twenty Years' Standing," that our recent notices on Reform, and exposition of certain abuses in the Army have been the theme of considerable comment in Military circles, and that our efforts to direct attention thereto have been duly appreciated. Such assurances cannot be otherwise than gratifying. Our labours, as we before averred, have been directed solely with a view to benefit the Service:—not to impair the system by unnecessary restrictions or unnecessary reductions, but to correct and amend those parts which by time, mismanagement, the force of circumstances, &c., have become defective. All we can do is to hold up such abuses to the public gaze; In that course we shall persevere, and we sincerely hope for support, not only from the profession generally, but from every independent member in the House of Commons.

In reference to the article in the London Review, and agreeably to our promise of last week, we shall now commence our observations on the Staff of the Army. We have already alluded to the number of General Officers at Head-Quarters, and the less that some of them have apparently taken of their situations. Most of these hold appointments that ought to be filled by Field, instead of General, Officers; for instance, "if a Colonel was considered a rank sufficient to fill the office of Quartermaster-General in 1811, it is evidently so now, when the Army does not amount to one-third of the number it then did." But they seem comfortably fixed, and, in defiance of the recommendations of the Parliamentary Committee, still remain, aye, and as long as delusion can prevail, will not be readily moved.

It is really much to be regretted that the Commander-in-Chief does not perceive the necessity of yielding to the reasonable suggestions of the Committee on this head; a judicious concession would now satisfy many who are loud in their outcry for a reduction of the Military Establishments, but a determination to uphold such palpable abuses upon the most frivolous pretences, must, in the end, be productive of radical measures.

Considering the present state of the Army, particularly of the Half-Pay, there should be an abolition of all "exclusivism," of all sinecures, and all pluralities; it is deep injustice to the body at large to allow their existence. One Officer is appointed to a lucrative government abroad, and having enjoyed his command for many years, is sent to another lucrative post in America. In this manner, a limited number of the élite alone are kept constantly employed, and monopolise the few good places, to the exclusion of many equally meritorious Officers. To keep up the efficiency of the Army with regard to Officers, no Regimental Officer on Full Pay should be permitted to hold a Staff situation, and every such appointment should be held for a stated period only. The following evidence will show the very long period one of these Officers has remained at the Horse Guards:—

"'How long have you held the office of Quartermaster-General?—I was appointed to it in 1811.'

"Previous to which he held other offices at the Horse Guards,—he does not state for what length of time; but we believe they commenced with the Duke of York's appointment, which will make his residence there forty years.

"'What was that office?—The office of Commissary-in-Chief. I had left the office of Secretary to the Com.-in-Chief, and was requested to take upon myself the office of Commissary-in-Chief. From that office I was called upon to fill the office of Quartermast.-Gen.; in neither case by any solicitation of my own. The office that I gave up was of much greater emolument, and I was then told that although the office of Quartermast.-Gen. (my being a Colonel) was of less amount, yet as I succeeded in due course to military promotion, so would the emoluments of my office increase with it, in like manner as my predecessors did; and it was upon that distinct understanding, assured to me by the Prince Rent, and recorded upon the Minutes of H.M.'s Trea-y, that I accepted the office. I thought therefore that ad cause of complaint, and felt it to be an act of intice, as a breach of faith, when, notwithstanding that corded assurance, the office was put, in the year 1820, en a different footing, and consequently that expectan under which I had given up another office of greater olument, and which, as I have before said, I was called ou to give up; the public faith so pledged to me was aken, and my office was placed upon a considerably nced footing, and upon which footing it now stands.

What is the emolument you now receive?—The exact a, as stated in the Army Estimates, 1,800*l.* a-year.—
you receive no other additional emolument except the owance for forage?—None whatever.—In what year s the present pay of the Quartermast.-Gen. fixed?— 1803, and upon the faith of which I accepted the office make no complaint, but merely state the fact); and I ould now be receiving the pay of a Lieut.-General, in addition to the pay of the Quartermast.-Gen., as then ed, instead of the present allowance of 500*l.* a-year, ich is included in the annual amount above stated.'

'This officer certainly holds, in addition, the Colo-cy of a regt.; but the emoluments from that being, suppose, looked upon merely as a fair profit on the ply of the clothing, he did not consider as pay. This l, however, make the income he derives from the pub-at least 3,000*l.* per annum. It will be remarked that, hough he says, 'I make no complaint,' he considers has been badly used; and he afterwards states, 'It l be found that I have not received a leave of absence four months at any continuous period.' Without any ringament of this, he may easily pass the greater part the year in the Isle of Wight. He refers to the allness of his income, as being 'a breach of the reded agreement under which I accepted the office in 1;' as if his accepting the office was a favour con-red on the public; and as if, having got an appoint-nt, he has a right to hold it as long as he pleases.
is, by the way, is rather an odd sentiment to come m the Horse Guards, from which orders are transtted to all parts of the world, removing and appointofficers as deemed expedient."

We could mention other instances of Officers on Staff of the Districts in Ireland who have like-e become "fixtures."

It is observed that the Committee had it in conplation to recommend an amalgamation of the ertermester and Adjutent-General's Departnts, the heads of which were naturally enough posed to such a union, although, from the pret numerical strength of the Army, it is consi-ed by many who understand the mysteries of ce that such a measure might be adopted with-detriment to the Service.

The Adjutant-General, and one of the deputies, state as a hardship that their office-duties require r constant attendance in London. The real hard-is, as other officers who have not a tour of these ly desirable situations. If the Adjutant or Quarter-t.-Gen. were really tired of their offices, their interest uld easily obtain for them the Governorship of one our best colonies."

Amongst the various abuses, there is scarcely more replete with injustice to the Army than appointment of Kings' Aides-de-Camp; the ober of supercessions that have taken place by means have been sufficient to disgust the old ld Officers of the regular forces, who find them-ves passed over in rank not only by their juniors he Line, but, what is no less absurd than moring, by Officers of Militia and Yeomanry.

It has been already mentioned, that on the promoof a Captain in the Foot Guards to the rank of imental Major, he obtains the rank of Colonel in the y; and that Majors in the Life Guards, on their notion to Lieutenant-Colonelcies, enjoy also the same ilege, the great advantage of which we have before ted out. But, independent of these promotions, ch take place according to an established rule or sys-
, a large field is opened for favouritism by the ap-tments of Aides-de-Camp to the King. In the reign George III. until some years after the French Revoon, the number of such Aides-de-Camp was limited to which is still, we believe, the number receiving pay; rank is of much greater importance than the pay, this appointment, conferring the rank of full Colonel, on the fortunate individual, who is always selected n the Lieutenant-Colonels, at once over the heads of those who had before been his seniors. Towards the end of the reign of Geo. III. the number was increased to nine, and during the late reign it was augmented to thirty. His present Majesty has added two from the Marines, and ten more, called extra, making altogether from the regular Army forty-two; besides which, he has appointed twelve from the Militia and Yeomanry, as well as a number of naval aides-de-camp. The number of these favoured individuals, it will be observed, has increased sevenfold since the time of Geo. III.; and there appears to be no restriction to the number being still further increased to any amount, according to the pleasure of the Court. These appointments are, it must be allowed, chiefly conferred on old and deserving officers, who are thereby advanced only a few steps; and the names of these officers are always brought forward, in reply to any animadversions on the system, in order to silence complaints, by showing how justly this patronage is disposed of. If, however, we look at the present list of Aides-de-Camp, we find a proportion of fully one-third comparatively young officers, without much claim for services; and, amongst the number, one young gentleman who entered the Foot Guards as an Ensign in May, 1814, who has thus, by this mode of promotion, been made a Colonel—a rank which, by the regular promotion of the Army, has not yet been attained by the Lieut.-Cols. of 1814 (the year in which he entered the Army), nor of course by those of 1815; and further, the greater number of the Lieut.-Cols. of the former year were promoted to that rank as a reward for their service in the field in the Peninsula, whilst he probably was still at school."

We shall close our remarks for the present by observing that the Judge Advocate-General's Department appears also to require some reform; indeed, the recent circumstance of an Officer tried by Court-Martial at Glasgow, and although most honourably acquitted, kept six months in arrest, occasioned by the dilatoriness of that office, is sufficient evidence to this effect.

The following return of the Horse Guards Staff, which has just been presented to Parliament, has reached us in time to be an appropriate appendix to the foregoing observations.

The chartering of three ships to convey convicts to New South Wales has again called forth some animadversions from our sensitive contemporary the Morning Herald. We have frequently had occasion to allude to this subject, and although it would appear that, in the case of the Amphitrite, the ship was not in that state of efficiency proper for so long a voyage, we cannot discover that any blame can be attached to the Surveyors appointed by Government, as to the selection of the George the Third and Neva, both which vessels stood in class Æ at Lloyds, and had been minutely inspected. It is true that the same ships are often accepted for this service, but this does not proceed from any favour shown to the owners thereof, as has been insinuated, but from the fittings, &c., already in their possession, enabling the parties to make lower tenders than their competitors. It is hardly necessary to inform our nautical readers, that the age of a ship has little to do with her efficiency, provided that she has been sufficiently repaired when occasion called for it, and that, as ships were formerly built of better materials and of larger scantling than at present, it is very frequently the case that old ships are far superior to new ones. Under the present regulations of Lloyds, a ship cannot keep her place in class A 1 after a certain period, nor in class Æ, unless she is well conditioned and fit to carry a dry cargo and moreover must be annually surveyed. It has always appeared to us, that it would be far better for various reasons that the Government should employ ships of their own in this and the transport service in preference to hiring others. Some of the frigates now in Ordinary (which will never again be employed as such) may be equipped for this service, armed en flute, commanded by Masters and officered by Second Masters and Master's Assistants, and a large proportion of petty officers before the mast. By this means a considerable number of good seamen would be retained in the King's service, available on sudden occasions, when the performance of this duty could be again contracted for. We would therefore suggest, that all Navy and Ordnance Transports, Store, Victualling and Troop Ships, as well as those employed to transport convicts, should be thus equipped, and they might be employed on other services, such as carrying timber, &c., or conveying emigrants to new settlements, when not required. We should by this means have a formidable body of seamen always available, with little, if any, additional expense, without giving cause of umbrage or apprehension to foreign powers by the display of a large Naval force.

We last year gave the names and services of the following Officers, whose long and distinguished military career had gained for them Special Annual Rewards, not exceeding three fifths of the emoluments of garrison appointments, viz.:—

The Navy Estimates were brought forward last night by Mr. Charles Wood, the Secretary to the Admiralty, in a speech of great perspicuity, and so satisfactorily detailed to the House as to call forth the encomiums of Mr. Hume, a thing we never recollect to have happened before. We are glad to find the sense of the House unanimously expressed in favour of increasing and maintaining our Navy upon a proper footing. After the principal items had been voted, the Committee adjourned till Monday. We shall next week take a review of the intended measures announced last night.

We cannot forbear adverting to the letter of the late Grand Master and principal members of the Orange Institution of Great Britain, calling upon their brethren to "anticipate legislation," and dissolve the Society. It is a document breathing the spirit of religion, loyalty, patriotism, and obedience, worthy of record, and proving the fallacy of the assertions that were so wantonly made against the intentions of a high-minded, honourable, and loyal prince. We much regret that we have not space for the document.

It was with considerable regret that we noticed the late decision in the House of Commons regarding Mr. Buckingham's just claims for compensations for the serious injuries which he sustained in India. Our only feeling in this matter has been to uphold the oppressed against the oppressor, and to lend our aid in placing before the public the true merits of Mr. Buckingham's case, as they have been shown before a Select Committee of the House, and which, to every impartial mind, we had hoped would have carried conviction of the wrongs which the Honourable Member for Sheffield suffered whilst residing at Calcutta. Amidst the disappointment which Mr. Buckingham must experience at this moment, at finding the majority of the Commons, that were present on the 23rd ultimo, decided against the second reading of his Compensation Bill (and we think he will always have reason to regret that it was brought forward in so small a House), he must, however, receive heartfelt consolation from the fact, that the late Governor-General of India, who must be so well acquainted with all the merits of the question, voted in favour of his, Mr. Buckingham's, claims. This alone, to every unbiassed mind, must speak volumes in support of the justice of his demand, and we will therefore yet hope that perseverance in so fair and well-grounded a complaint will ensure to him that satisfaction which he seeks, and which we deem he is so well entitled to receive. It has been suggested to us just now, by one of our Naval correspondents, that, as public subscriptions are constantly raised for the erection of statues of some statesmen, and for presents to others, to mark the general sense of their measures, that were only those who have signed the numerous petitions in favour of Mr. Buckingham's claims to compensation, for the treatment he received in India (and almost the whole of whom we have been told are respectable persons), to subscribe but one shilling each towards remunerating him for his losses, arising from his independence of mind in maintaining the liberty of the press, it would amount to a considerable sum, and we doubt not but that those in our Eastern possessions, who have lived to see the advantages which are now reaping from his exertions in their behalf, would also cheerfully come forward largely in support of this object. We are led thus to sanction this suggestion, wholly unknown, as we sincerely believe it to be, and we may add as we are positive it is, to Mr. Buckingham or to any one connected with him, and we shall leave it to our liberal-minded countrymen, who are ever ready to defend the injured and to relieve the oppressed, to adopt the hint or not as they may think right. For ourselves, as friends to a free press, all we can say is, that we shall be ready to give our humble offering to such a subscription whenever or wherever it may be started.

In our last we took occasion to point out the benefit which might be expected to accrue to the Naval service, by adopting a system regarding the ratings and pay of petty officers before the mast, which should have the effect of inducing the best seamen the nation possesses to engage in such situations in preference to those of Mates, &c. in Merchant ships. As we are no advocates for sudden innovations upon established customs, we would recommend that (excepting the pay, which must of course be equalised) the plan should be tried, in the first instance, on board of three or more of his Majesty's ships, under the command of experienced officers, and reported upon after sufficient time had elapsed to form a judgment of its effects. The Petty Officers should be formed into messes by themselves, giving them greater indulgences as to cooking, lights, &c. than the rest of the ship's company, and, by upholding the respectability of these ratings as regards the treatment of the men occupying them by the officers, &c. offer a strong inducement to all seamen to obtain them through good conduct. It is absurd to talk of the link between the officers and ship's company being preserved, by the young gentlemen serving their probation as Midshipmen. The generality of these have little feeling in common with the seamen, and care nothing for their habits or general conduct, so that they perform what is required when under their temporary command. The coxswain of a boat, who has the permanent direction of the crew, and whose authority is duly supported by his officers, would be found to perform the duty in which boats are generally employed much more efficiently than the youngster in casual command of her; and when this point is once established, and this and other duties devolved to steady seamen, a decrease of young gentlemen might take place, and an increase to the same extent of Petty Officers before the mast, thus instituting a greater number of prizes in the shape of superior ratings for the well-behaved seaman to look forward to, and which he knew he should be sure to obtain by good conduct and a faithful discharge of his duties, regardless of interest or favour. Since the necessity has become apparent that a Gunner should possess qualifications which seamen will seldom take the trouble to attain, there is now but one berth in each ship to which the most faithful and lengthened service can look forward—that of Boatswain; and even this, from its peculiar nature, is one which we have known good seamen to refuse. With the view, therefore, of holding forth inducements for good conduct, and thus obviating the necessity of inflicting punishment for bad, it should be our policy to create and maintain as many desirable berths as possible in the shape of Petty Officers' ratings, and to treat the men holding them with such confidence and respect as would make them valuable and desirable in the eyes of the ship's company, and within the reach of every man to attain by good behaviour. Such is the system already pursued in the Army, where the non-commissioned officers are the real links between the officers and the men; and we think, if the same system was adopted in the Navy, it could not fail to be attended with beneficial results.

A correspondent has called our attention to what he considers an error in our last, viz. substituting the name of the member for Tynemouth, for that of Dr. Young, the Professor of Natural Philosophy. Our object in the association of names which a writer in the Hampshire Telegraph had distinguished as "illustrious," was to ridicule the practice of conferring the most distinguished appellation which our language boasts, upon men who, however eminent or learned in their professions, cannot be considered as worthy to be called illustrious, and, for all we know to the contrary, Mr. Yoong may have just as good a right to that title as any one who has borne his name, and that is saying a great deal.

British Auxiliary Legion.—Extracts of Letters, Vittoria, Feb. 16.—The Legion has suffered severely from disease and death since it came here. Were it not for the moral effect of having an English army fighting on the Queen's side, we are not worth the money we cost. Had the Legion been properly attended to in regard to quarters and other comforts, and Evans been allowed either to keep them at rest in winter quarters at Bilbao, improving them in discipline and manœuvres, or to have brought them into battle with the enemy, they then, as mere fighting men, would have been well worthy of all the expense they have cost. As it is, the strength of the legion has been wasting away in marching and countermarching, their clothes destroyed, and their shoes worn off their feet, whilst discipline has suffered, and the tone of the men's minds has been lowered, accustomed as they have been, for some time back, to unsoldierly habits, fruitless efforts, and to the spectacle of their unhappy comrades, emaciated, if not devoured, by the cruel fate which has made amongst them so many victims.

Santander, Feb. 19.—The division of the Legion, 2,000 strong, under Evans, had marched on their way to Balmaceda, as far as La Puebla, when, in consequence of Espartero having entered the former place, the further forward movement became unnecessary, and they returned to Vittoria, where, and in the surrounding villages, the bulk of the Legion is again quartered; 1,000 British only still remaining at Trevino to complete the fortifications of that place. It had been determined at head-quarters to reduce the number of brigades of the British Legion from five to three; the two brigades to be reduced being those commanded by Brig. Evans, Lieut.-Gen.'s brother, and Brig. Shaw. The result of this arrangement will not be any diminution of the number of men belonging to the Legion, but will necessarily lead to the dismissal of a number of officers. The real effective force of the Legion at this moment is between 4,000 and 4,500 men; and as sickness, both at head-quarters and here, is daily diminishing, that force may, in the course of another month and the influence of milder weather, be raised to near 6,000 men, including the detachments in the depot there.

From the Globe:—"The public belief in the military talents, if not in the loyalty of Cordova, has been much shaken by late events. The unsoldierly movement which he made from Vittoria, and the dangerous position to which he placed Gen. Evans and the British troops, by conduct not very far distant from poltroonery, ought, we think, to have insured his removal from a command for which he then and since has shown himself to be unfitted."

A letter of the 23rd from Salvatierra announces that a Captain of the 1st regt. English Legion had just left Trevino and joined the Carlist ranks. He was presented to Gen. Villareal, who cordially received him, and invited him to dinner.

Various conjectures are afloat as to the manner in which certain Orange letters were obtained for publication. One rumour is, that they were purchased by subscription among certain members of Brookes's.

The Grand Orange Committee met in Dublin on Saturday. It was agreed, in reference to the King's answer, "That the brethren should be warned against the novel doctrine that the mere wish of the Sovereign, expressed through his Ministers in answer to an address from the House of Commons, has the force of law, or can restrain the subject in the legal exercise of constitutional rights. The Orangemen of Ireland have the most sincere respect for the will of the Sovereign; but the liberty of the subject they respect more, and will maintain; while the British constitution remains unabrogated they cannot be deprived of their rights save by the joint operation of the three branches of the Legislature." H. Lees has addressed the Orangemen to the same effect in a short letter.

Lord Denman has accepted an invitation from Lord Brougham, after he has finished the assizes at Cumberland, to visit his Lordship at Brougham Hall. Lord B.'s general health is improved, but it is much doubted whether it will be advisable for him to attend the House of Peers during the present session.

Fieschi did not call himself Fieschi—that was the family name of his mother, which he had taken to avoid the infamy attached to that of his father, who had been condemned for theft.

A serious accident nearly befel that excellent yeoman the Earl of March, on his return from Chichester to Goodwood on Friday week. He was in a gig with his servant, the horse became restive, and going at a rapid rate came in contact with a waggon. The concussion threw his Lordship and the groom on the pavement, but fortunately they received only a few slight bruises.

Government intend to do away with the receiving hulk for convicts at Cove, and to have the stores [illegible] ingeniously constructed for the use of the navy appointed as places of security for persons under sentence, previous to their being transported.—Dublin Paper.

The Hon. S. [illegible] has been appointed to the junior clerkship in the Board of Control.

sabell is the new Assist. Secretary in the Secret and Political Department, vice Mr. Jones; and Mr. R. Gordon, M.P., and Mr. Vernon Smith, M.P., continue to officiate as joint Secretaries to the Board of Commissioners.

Capt. J. Sheil, India Company's Service, appointed Secretary of Legation at the Court of Persia, is brother to the Member for Tipperary; the situation is worth 3,000*l.* a year.

The dispute between Captain Marryat and Mr. Willis has been terminated by the interference of friends without bloodshed. The parties met at Chatham with hostile intent; but it being determined before pulling their triggers to examine the cause of quarrel, it was ascertained that no legitimate ground for blowing out each other's brains existed, and thereupon they mutually withdrew their offensive letters, and departed to their respective homes.

Dr. Maltby is appointed to the vacant see of Durham. The new Bishop is to be Dr. Longley, Head Master of Harrow School, and son-in-law of Sir Henry Parnell.

Mr. Clint.—This admirable painter, especially of domestic subjects, has returned his diploma of Associate Royal Academician to the Royal Academy, in disgust at having been passed over at the last, and several preceding, elections to the rank of R.A.

The arrangement for the Metropolitan University are sufficiently advanced to admit the choice of a Chancellor, and Lord Brougham, who was a senior wrangler at Cambridge, will be the first individual appointed to that office.

New Reform Club.—Eight hundred members have joined. The Club is in treety for Lady Duver's house at Whitehall.

The rumour is revived of a claimant to the titles and estates of a Noble Marquis. He is a youth of 12 years, and the offspring of the elder brother of the Marquis, who died in the south of France, and where, it is alleged, he united himself to a Mrs. C.

Sir George Grey has come to a complete quarrel with Lord Gosford and his other colleagues, at Montreal; words were so high that the Secretary was sent out of the room. —Brighton Gazette. [This is contradicted.]

Col. Thorn has been endowed by his guests of the Faubourg St. Germain with the honorary title of "Duke of (New) York."

A fire broke out on Saturday evening, at the mansion of Mr. Neeld, M.P., at Grittleton. The damage to the house is considerable, many fine paintings and valuable works of art being destroyed. The fire originated from an old beam in the flue of the dining-room chimney becoming ignited.

The Court.

His Majesty's Levee on Wednesday was attended by the following Naval and Military officers:—

Admirals—Sir P. C. Henderson Durham, Sir C. Paget. —Commanders (R.N.)—Hon. F. Maude, Forbes.—Lieut. Edmonstone, R. N.—Generals—Anderson, Sir C. Maxwell, Sir T. Montresor.—Colonels—Keate, H. Bennack, Ashworth, Sir J. Hope.—Capt. Brev.—Presentations—The Hon. D. Erskine, on appointment to 51st regt.; Capt. Hon. Sir J. A. Maude, on receiving the honour of knighthood; Ens. A. J. Magnay, on appointment to 40th regt.; Capt. Sir J. S. Peyton, on receiving the honour of knighthood; Capt. Rayner, Uxbridge Vol. Inf.; Lieut. Welford, Uxbridge Vol. Inf.; Mr. Stillwell, Surgeon Uxbridge Vol. Inf.; Com. J. Peard; Lieut. Col. Weare, on receiving Third Class of Guelphic Order; Capt. Romilly, on appointment in the Scots Fusilier Guards; Lieut. H. Wynyard; Lieut. C. Dickson; Lieut. A. S. Dickson; Lieut. Carter.

It is the Queen's intention to hold Drawing Rooms on the following Thursdays—March 24, April 21, May 5, May 28, being for the celebration of his Majesty's birthday; June 16.

The King has conferred the honour of knighthood upon Henry Hart, Esq., Captain R.N., K.C.H.; and upon Maj.-Gen. C. W. Maxwell, C.B., and K.C.H.; also the Third Class of the Guelphic Order on Lieut.-Col. A. Moore, R.I. Artillery.

The King has appointed Mr. T. de Grenier Fonblanque, Consul at Dantzic, and for the ports and places in the dominions of the King of Prussia; also granted permission unto Lieut. J. H. Tilson, 66th N.I., Bengal Establishment, to take and use the surname of Chewne; and appointed Mr. Derinzy, Exon of the Yeomen of the Guard, in the room of Mr. E. Pearson, resigned.

His Majesty, it is now said, intends keeping his birthday in Buckingham Palace on the 28th May. The Palace is to be called "St. George's Palace." Her Majesty intends entertaining a large party of the younger branches of the nobility on the 1st June with a ball, on a grand scale, to conclude with fireworks, purposely to enable the juvenile guests to inspect the beautiful and extensive gardens.

The King has changed the costume of the court uniform for the Master of the Buck Hounds from scarlet to green.

Yesterday week, the inmates of Kensington Palace were alarmed by cries of fire from the rooms occupied by Princess Sophia. The attendants immediately proceeded to the Princess's dressing-room, where they discovered her enveloped in flames. With extraordinary presence of mind she called to them not to be alarmed, but to render her assistance in extinguishing the flames, which was speedily done. Her Royal Highness was but slightly burnt on the right side of her neck, her right ear, and eyebrow. The accident was occasioned by a spark which flew out of the fire as the Princess was passing the fireplace with a bottle of spirits of wine, the stopper of which, in her endeavours to extinguish a small portion of her dress which had ignited, fell out, and the liquid, coming in contact with the flame, instantly caught fire, and enveloped her in flames. Her Royal Highness has been indisposed from the fright and effects of the burns.

Preparations are making at Kensington Palace for the reception of Prince Ferdinand of Portugal, who is expected about the 15th of this month, with his brother, Prince Augustus of Saxe-Cobourg, to visit this country on his way to Portugal. Prince Ferdinand, who is in his 20th year, is the eldest son of Field Marshal Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Cobourg Gotha, who married the Princess Kohary. Prince Ferdinand has, in consequence of his alliance with the Queen of Portugal, renounced in favour of his next brother his succession to the family estates. His Royal Highness is nephew of the Duchess of Kent, the King of the Belgians, and the reigning Duke of Saxe-Cobourg Gotha. A special commission has been appointed in Lisbon to regulate the succession to the crown of Portugal in the event of the Queen not having any family.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 29th Feb.—The report of the Committee on the plans for building new Houses of Parliament was referred to a Select Committee.

Tuesday, 1st March.—Lord Ellenborough, the Earl of Westmoreland, and the Bishop of Llandaff presented petitions against the Ecclesiastical Courts' Consolidation Bill.—Lord Teynham presented a petition from Mary Ann Booth, complaining of certain magistrates; but their conduct was vindicated by the Duke of Richmond, Lord Strangford, Lord Chichester, and the Lord Chancellor.—The Duke of Richmond inquired whether the Inspectors of Prisons were likely soon to make their report.—Lord Melbourne observed that the government daily expected it.

Thursday, 3rd March.—Lord Teynham complained of an alleged breech of privilege on the part of the Morning Post. The proceedings, however, terminated without the proposition of any measure by Lord T., who expressed his regret that their Lordships' time had been occupied on the subject.

Friday, 4th March.—Various petitions were presented. —A Bill to improve the administration of justice in the Colonies was brought in by Lord Glenelg, and read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 29th Feb.—Mr. P. Thomson presented the report of the Select Committee appointed to inquire into the best mode of proceeding as to Committees on Railway Bills.—Several Railway Bills were read a second time.—The Greenwich and Gravesend Railway Bill, which it was proposed should be carried through the Royal Park, was thrown out on the second reading by a large majority.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer stated it was the intention of government to make an equitable adjustment of the emoluments of the see of Durham, and to relieve the office from all the civil duties with which it was at present encumbered. — Mr. O'Loghlen moved the second reading of the Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Bill. After dwelling at considerable length upon the details, he suggested, according to the provisions of his bill, that the House should sanction a system founded upon the same principle as was adopted in the cases of England and Scotland. In furtherance of this plan, he proposed that the qualification in the great towns should be a 10*l.* yearly rent, but in the small towns a smaller qualification. Sir R. Peel entered at large into the history of Corporations, and denied the proposition that they were all founded upon popular principles. On the contrary, he maintained that many of them were established expressly for the confirmation of the Protestant interest in Ireland.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer contended that the danger of adopting the measure would be far less than the danger of rejecting it. Lord Stanley justified the conduct of those who, like himself, had supported the Irish Parliamentary Reform Bill, but who doubted whether it was expedient that in every town in Ireland they should run the risk—nay, should incur the certainty—of mixing up with the administration of her municipal affairs those political affairs which they desired to keep separate from them, but with which, unfortunately, they were certain to be mixed up in the state of political and religious parties in Ireland.—After some remarks from Mr. Shiel, &c., the second reading was agreed to without a division. Sir R. Peel stated that on Monday, on the order of the day for going into Committee on the Bill, he would move an instruction to the Committee to adopt his plan. If the House should reject that motion, he would not give the government much trouble with respect to the details of the measure.

Tuesday, 1st March.—Mr. P. Thomson moved five resolutions founded on the recommendations of the Select Committee as to the best mode of dealing with the several Railwey Bills, especially in Committees above stairs, &c. The matter led to much desoltory discussion —Mr. Wakley obtained leave to bring in a Bill to provide for the payment of medical witnesses at Coroners' Inquests.—Sir S. Canning adverted to the statements that had appeared in the public journals, of an armed force of Austrians, Prussians, and Russians having entered Cracow, and asked whether government had received intelligence of such a fact?—Lord Palmerston stated that the government had not received any official information of such a proceeding.—Mr. Borthwick was afterwards proceeding to bring forward his motion regarding the negro population of Mauritius, but was stopped by the House being "counted out."

Wednesday, 2nd March.—Several petitions were presented on a variety of subjects.—The Prisoners' Counsel Bill was considered at great length in Committee.—The adjourned debate on the Poole Municipal Election question was resumed, and the original motion was agreed to.

Thursday, 3rd March.—Petitions were presented against any alteration of the timber duties.—The report of the Irish Constabulary Force Bill was brought up. —Sir R. Bateson asked if it were true that letters had been sent round to the Constabulary Force in Ireland in order to ascertain who among them had given him information on this subject. Lord Morpeth was aware of any such circumstance. He had a complete vindication of Sir F. Stoven to submit.—Lord Morpeth in answer to a question from Sir R. Peel, stated that Shaw Kennedy to have accepted the office which had been offered him.—Lord J. Russell mentioned that a Bill for regulating church-rates would be introduced after the Easter recess; also, that he had felt it his duty to recommend that the two Dorchester labourers, whose sentence it had not been in the first instance thought right to mitigate, should be allowed to return at the end of three years.—Mr. Wilbraham moved for the appointment of a select committee to consider the state of the salt monopoly in India. The motion was agreed to, and a committee appointed.—The Slaves' Compensation Bill was read a third time, and passed.—The Staffordshire Disfranchisement Bill was read a second time. An amendment to postpone the second reading for six months was lost on a division, by a majority of 47.

Friday, 4th March.—Mr. C. Wood brought forward the Navy Estimates (given in our last). The resolutions were not opposed. Sir J. Graham gave his vote in favour of the proposed increase in the Navy. Lord John Russell said the augmentation was necessary to protect our foreign commerce, as well as to guard against the possibility of the country being taken by surprise. Sir E. Codrington said, when at St. Petersburg, he saw twenty-four or twenty-five Russian men-of-war. That satisfied him that an increase of our naval force was necessary. Lord D. Stuart said the increase was required to thwart the designs of the Russian government. Sir E. Codrington made some observations upon Lord Auckland's appointment to the Admiralty. Sir J. Graham said he had received no pension for holding the office of First Lord of the Admiralty, but Lord Auckland had stipulated to receive one. Mr. Hume thought the fact disgraceful to the Noble Lord and the government. The Chancellor of the Exchequer stated the Noble Lord had given up, on accepting the situation, an office and pension from which he derived 1600*l.* per annum. Sir J. Graham repeated his former statement. The Chancellor of the Exchequer complained of the ungenerous insinuations it conveyed. Lord Howick and Lord J. Russell defended Lord Auckland. Sir S. Northcote and Mr. Goulburn mentioned that an unfair construction had been put on what had fallen from Sir J. Graham. Mr. Hume withdrew the harsh expression he had used, and which would not have been uttered if he had understood how the case really stood. Resolutions agreed to, and the House adjourned.

The present Board of Admiralty have found a [illegible] which promises to be of infinite service to the Navy.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The election of Presidents and Secretaries of the nine Bureaus, into which the Chamber of Deputies is divided, seems treated by both parties as a trial of strength. Of the nine Presidents, four are decided Tiers Parti, two are Doctrinaires, one is nil, whilst of the remaining two, one leans to the Doctrinaires, and the other to the Tiers Parti.

SPAIN.—There is no news this week of particular interest. The progress of the contest presents no novel or decided features, nor any marked advantage on either side.

UNITED STATES.—His Majesty's ship Pantaloon has returned home, with an official account of the acceptance by the President of the mediation of our Government in the controversy between the United States and France.

PRUSSIA.—The King, it is stated, is labouring under an affection of the brain, which has assumed symptoms of insanity. If this intelligence be true, it may lead to an important change in the affairs of Europe, as the Prince who stands next in succession to the throne is known to be of a more warlike disposition than the present King.

POLAND.—The journals again contain a list of 169 persons of the government of Wilna, whose property has been definitively confiscated for having taken part in the Polish revolution. A fruitful subject of discussion is the conduct of the three great powers towards Cracow. Count Pahlen states that the occupation of that place by Russia is necessary as a guarantee for the tranquillity of the western frontier of the Russian dominions. The Polish Refugees were ordered not to remain in Cracow beyond Ash Wednesday; but many of them had threatened to resist the order. The general opinion is that Russia will have possession of the Republic.

ALGIERS.—The recent expedition of Marshal Clausel to Tremecen, the most westward town in the Regency of Algiers of any importance, is far less calculated than even the expedition to Mascara to flatter the French, or make them in love with African conquest or colonisation. The Arab chief, Abd-el-Kader, though surprised at first in the neighbourhood of Tremecen, was, nevertheless, able to muster such forces as completely to defeat and prevent Clausel's design of erecting a fort, and establishing a French garrison at the mouth of the Tasna, which would have kept up the communication between Oran and Tremecen. Nay, further, on the Marshal's retreat from Tremecen, Abd-el-Kader followed and harassed the French to such a degree, that it was only by the aid of great efforts and skilful manœuvres, that the Marshal could bring his army back in safety. Even Mustapha, the Boy, who has long held his ground at Tremecen, has thought fit to forsake it and retreat with the French to Algiers.

Theatres.

KING'S THEATRE opens for the season this evening with Bellini's opera, La Straniera, and a new ballet, Le Rossignol. The opera is one of the most difficult for a prima donna to create a sensation in of any that we are acquainted with. It has been the rock on which nearly every prima in Italy has split. Grisi's sister and Madlle. Pauli both failed in it at the King's Theatre. The part of La Straniera requires a voice of particularly high quality, capable of executing passages of great difficulty with flexibility and ease. The cause of failure with the ladies above mentioned was, that their voices, though high, were harsh and grating. We attended the rehearsal on Thursday, and are of opinion that the Countess Coleoni Torti will prove more successful in this difficult part than either of her predecessors. Her voice is a very high quality of soprano, and is remarkably flexible. Signor Cartagenova, the primo basso, has a good voice, and sings with feeling. The great attraction will be the début of Madlle. Romain, said to be second only to Taglioni, and the first appearance of M. Coustoo, a second Perrot. Little S. Grisi has left Milan for London, and is expected in a few days. She has been almost idolised by the Milanese: she is a first cousin of The Grisi.

COVENT GARDEN.—A new piece, in one act, called Marie, a Tale of the Pont Neuf, was produced at this house on Saturday evening, and met with an indifferent reception. The piece is of that description that excites our surprise how it ever found its way to the stage of a respectable theatre. It does not possess one redeeming point to make up for absence of interest and situation. On Monday evening Mr. H. Wallack appeared in the part of Gracio, in the tragedy of The Separation, in consequence of the absence of Mr. C. Kemble, who, we regret to hear, has lost his sister. Mr. Wallack's performance of the part of Gracio is entitled to praise. The house was thinly attended. We are informed that it is the intention of the proprietor of this theatre to close the present season on the 26th of this month, in order to get rid of a certain portion of his company. On Tuesday the comedy of John Bull was played, when Mr. Rayner appeared in the part of Job Thornberry, a character which he very much over-acted. It was by no means a natural or finished piece of acting—there was too much effort and straining for effect. The rest of the characters, with the exception of Miss Taylor's Mary were indifferently sustained.

QUEEN'S.—On Tuesday evening a Mr. Davis attempted the part of Edward in the comedy of Charles the Second, at this theatre, and contrived to murder his Majesty's English in a very superior style. On Wednesday, the part of Edward was assigned to Miss J. Mordaunt, who played it delightfully. Parry, as the merry monarch, was particularly amusing, and the Captain Copp of Mr. Brooks is entitled to great praise. Something new is sadly wanted at this house.

OLYMPIC.—A new burletta, in one act, called Forty and Fifty, was produced on Thursday evening, and proved successful, owing to the admirable style in which the two principal characters were supported by Liston and Mrs. Orger. The plot of the piece is extremely simple, and of little interest, and has but one situation of any novelty or merit. The dialogue is not remarkable for point or smartness, but the manner in which it was given by the above performers would have saved a much worse piece. The scene in which Mr. Lillywhite (Liston) in a fit of jealousy accuses his wife (Mrs. Orger) with her fondness for a young cavalry officer, and has the tables turned on himself for his former delinquencies, which are brought home to him in rather an unquestionable shape, was irresistibly droll, and was received with shouts of laughter. The piece was announced for repetition by Liston, amidst considerable applause. We were glad to see Mrs. Orger looking so well; it was her first appearance since her severe indisposition.

THE BENGAL ARTILLERY.

To the Editor of the Calcutta Courier.

SIR,—Our present respected Governor-General is so well-known to have the best interests of the Indian Army at heart in all its branches, that I conceive there cannot be a better time than the present, with reference to any chance of a remedy being granted, to make an exposé of the humiliating state of the Bengal Foot Artillery, usually styled in derision, although in melancholy truth, the Bullock Artillery.

The officers of the Foot Artillery labour under this great disadvantage, that with equal zeal and as much esprit de corps as officers of any other branch of this Army, they can take but little pride in the efficiency of their men, and none whatever in the performance of their parade and exercise duties, solely on account of that drawback, the horned cattle attached to their guns, which converts everything connected with a battalion of Foot Artillery into ridicule. Every person who has looked on at a review of Foot Artillery must have remarked the highly ludicrous appearance of bullocks manœuvring with the guns. Indeed, to enlarge on this point would be evidently superfluous—such a Military coup d'œil as it affords!!!

Is it besides JUST that the officers of a branch of the Army, which our honourable masters hold out to their young military aspirants as a reward for superior ability and attention to their studies, should become the laughing stock even of foreigners, in addition to the ridicule of their own more fortunate comrades of the mounted branch, and in fact of the whole Army? In all European states the respectability and efficiency of the Artillery corps is a primary consideration. While the other branches of the Bengal Army are equipped agreeably to the custom of our Army in England, why should the Foot Artillery be a solitary exception? The larger portion of the Bengal Artillery is a mere burlesque of that arm of the service. The inefficient and ridiculous nature of the cattle attached, render null the liberality shown in the materiel, such as the ordnance, ammunition, &c. which is on the first scale of efficiency.

Alluding that economy is necessary in the disposition of the finances of the state, still our liberal Governor-General and gallant Commander-in-Chief must be desirous that every branch of an Army under their immediate protection should be on a respectable footing, instead of one arm, and that arm too the Artillery!! How differently our brethren of the Royal Foot Artillery are estimated in the English Army!! The British government does not subject them to ridicule in particular, serving as a butt for foreigners and of their own comrades. If that friend to the Army, the Military Secretary to government, would assert his well-known abilities in our favour, a plan might easily be submitted to government, by which movings and alterations might be effected in various points, and without detriment to the service, equivalent to the additional expense to be incurred by substituting horses for bullocks in the Foot Field Batteries. By such an arrangement the State would be benefitted, the respectability and efficiency of the Artillery regiment at large increased, and bullocks for light field guns consigned to share the fate, as they ought long since to have done, of their absurd contemporaries, hair-powder, pomatum, pig-tails, and Co.

A BULLOCK TOPKHANA.

Literary Notices.

A Comparative View of the Form and Character of the English Race and Saddle-Horse during the last and present Centuries. With 18 Plates of Horses. T. Hookham.

To the breeders of cattle, to the huntsman, and to all who enjoy the pleasures of horsemanship and the race-course, this is a work most deserving of their notice. The main object of the author, who seems fully conversant with the subject, is to show the results of the structural enlargement of British animals, which is unnatural; to point out those properties which may be acquired by certain of them when fully reclaimed, and those which they are likely to lose in this condition; but beyond this there are most excellent hints and examples, which must be valuable to all who keep horses, and take a pride in their perfectness and beauty. The following points are worthy consideration. Is there a strong disposition in every fine race of the horse, whose structure has been enlarged by unnaturally rich food, to become either coarse or weedy? Are the means adopted on the Turf to prevent coarseness more than palliatives? and are not some of them objectionable? Is it not better to recur to nature when art has disposed a domesticated race of horses to coarseness, than to such a palliative as that of breeding on one side from old parents? Is not this substituting weediness for coarseness? The author recommends the adoption of a system under which both coarseness and weediness may be avoided by recurring, when necessary, to fresh blood, and thus to rear and work horses at the least possible expense. A chapter, recommending that the principle of selection applied to racers should be extended to some of our breeds of native ponies, is well worthy of notice. But we must for the present confine ourselves to the author's observations on the defects in the elementary organisation of our cavalry.

"Cavalry is an important but a very expensive force, and on service, if not properly constituted, the wear and tear becomes dreadful. If, however, any nation shall obtain a preponderance threatening our national independence, we must, at whatever cost, again take our place amongst the great military powers of Europe. The nature of our pastures, their peculiar occupation, and the immense annual supply of horses produced, should, under judicious management, enable us to bring into the field the finest cavalry in the world.

"Thinly populated countries can raise at less expense small and highly vigorous horses; but their superiority over us in this respect is compensated by our greater facilities for giving to these animals that increase of structural power which renders them more effective in line.

"The military history of modern Europe shows how difficult it is, in a protracted campaign, to maintain cavalry horses sufficiently powerful to act in line to an efficient state. Whether we look to the great importance of cavalry, or at the enormous loss which its disorganisation entails, every effort should be made to form it of such materials as, with the aid of due discipline, will ensure its not falling to pieces in any campaign through which that of an enemy can bear up. Whatever in peace may be the numerical amount of our military and naval force, it should, as respects organisation, be always prepared for a contest menacing the existence of the country.

"The great nations of Europe have long been making every effort to improve the organisation of their armies; and it will be found, should a general war take place, that some of them have not been unsuccessful. British infantry is unrivalled; but the elementary organisation of our cavalry, and the materials out of which it is formed, are defective.

"This force is divided into two principal classes: one is called heavy, and the other light. The heavy regiments are not dressed alike, but all are essentially heavy, and intended to act principally in line.

"Light cavalry is distinguished from heavy by having to act much on the out-post, besides in line. Looking at the duties its horses have to perform, it is obvious that they should be able to move quicker, and for a longer time, than those of heavy cavalry; that they should unite, with much activity and hardiness, enough of muscular power to enable them to act with effect in line. The horses of this force at present which are sufficiently active and well-bred, usually exhibit a feeble skeleton, and a want of muscular power. While at home, and getting plenty of good food with little work, they do well; but on service they would soon give way. The horses of this force should display a uniformity of character, by having nearly the same symmetry of the skeleton, the same amount of muscular power, and the same breeding. Admitting this, it follows that the riders should display a unirmity of material characteristics. The force of ell cevalry, ext to discipline, is in the nature end conditioo of the orses; if eeturelly bad or weakened by any cause, the ders become inefficient. It is true that horses can be ound to carry any class of men, but not in the same manar. oldiere of great etature cannot be carried so fest and fer e those of moderate statura. Government allows hot eoe rice for light cavalry horses, end thie ie low; while a large ortion of the dregoons when fully oquipped require such es ould not be beught for six times the sum allowed. Light avalry horses muet be able to movent a somewhet quick ace, and for a great distance; sleep at the bivooac, and aintain their etrength often oo little or poor food. All his we dsmeed from them, while placing on their hacks eo six feet, and sia feet two or three inchae high.

"How is it that, with eo many reasone for sdepting the aight of the dragoooe to the power of their horses, and ith the ready meens of doiug this, our light cavalry egimaate ere recruited on the same principle as infentry? he former in peace do not teke men quite so ehort as the afantry; but in war they enlist men whose etature renges rom five feet four to six feet three inches. This assertion oes not rnet eo hearasy, hut on espetience. It is ssid hat the statum of the fmot rnok men of some of these egimeetle now arerages six feet. We cannot eeswer for the ecuracy of this fact, but it is evident that in the front ranks f our light cavalry regiments a lerge portioo of the men re not lese than that beight; thst some are taller, while nany in the rear ranks are as low as five feet aeven inches.

"If it be trne that the weight to be carried shouid bs dspted es ecarly as ie practicable to the nature of the oimals beet calculated for such aservice; how is this selecion of men to be defended? In sllowing a large portion f the fiont rank men to reach sia fest snd upwards, we are ilscing heavy cavalry men upon light cavalry horses. It cannot be argued thet the horses of light cavalry should be f the same character as those of heavy cavelry. Admittiag, for the sake of argument, so absurd a proposition, it would yet not justify a system filling every light regiment w'th meo and horses of very different character.

"Whetsver diversity of opinion may exist respecting the beet height for a light dragoon eoldier, some one height must be preferable to aoy ether.

"We waet in thie service dragoons having a certein amount of strength; if we can get this in men of moderete tature we should select these, because weight placed below the eeddle tells with much more severity than weight placed bove it. It is the chest and amount of muscle of the body ed arms, unitsd with activity, and not the length of limbs, which maka one dragoon more efficient thao another. A light dragooo eia feet high is not necessarily more powerful thae ooe five feet eight inches; while the tesks imposed upon their horses are very different. If a man six feet high haa a chest and ao amount of muscle preportioned to his height, his weight will not be less thaa fifteen stones—fully secontred for the out-post he will weigh tweaty stooes. If the chest and muecles are not proportioned to the height, what is gsined by having light dragoons eix feet high? Men of this stature, whan well-proportioned and muscular, are too heavy for light cevalry horses; and if not strongly furmed, they are for every service inferior to well-formed men ef more moderate height. Supposing 500 well-formed men, five feet eight laches high, to wrastle with 500 men six feet high, having contracted chests, and, coosequently, an insufficient emount of mueclee, we could predict the result with certaiety.

"When the tall men, recruited for oor light cavelry, ere also powerful, they are too heavy for the class of horse which the duties of thie feice demand; if otherwise, there thsrn cenld be oo distinotion between light and heavy cevalry beyond thet of neme. Onr light cavelry may, by an injudicious eyetem, be rendered inefficiant; hut we cannot chenge the netura of its duties. It has to compete on service with the light cavalry ef an enemy in making long, rapid aod fetiguing marches, and le snbmitting to severe privations; it haa to head the advance end cover the retreat of ite own infantry; to hang on the rear and flenke of a retiring enemy, harassing him at every step, aod ehould be capable, hy its speed and eteutness, of withdrawing wheo necessary before a superior force without being compromised.

"If it be true that the conrage of the best infantry is sobject to ebbs and flows net to be eccounted for; how different must be thet of dragooos when mounted on fresh or on jaded horses. When a horse has eace got as much weight upoo his back ee he ie fully master nf, any essential addition talle severely. We learn that in racing it often happeos that three pounds of additionel weight will make e horse that wipe one day lose the next.)

"Our light infantry is always formed of men of moderale stature but good symmetry; and while carrying the same weight ae grenadiers, they march distances and perform duties on the out-posts for which grenediers are unfitted. If light infantry men are etrong eeough for light cavelry, why should this force enlist grenadiers? If the tall men in oet light cavalry are powerful, they are either undermounted or they are mounted on horses fit only for heavy cavalry; that is, on animals which want the hardiness activity, and hreeding, required fer light cavalry service. The duties of the twe forces differing, their physicel characteristics should net be the same. Our light cevalry regiments may requlre men of high er of moderate stature, but they cannot require men of almost every sisture.

"Private individuals who ride a great weight may, hy giving a large price, procure horses capable of carrying them; hat cevalry horees eufficiently powarful to carry heavy men, deriving their power from cart-horse blood, have oot the breeding and ectivity required for light cevalry duty.

"The movements of a column of cavalry are not regulsted hy the physical power of its best, but by that of its worst horsee. If ooe portion of it cannot move so rapidly or so long as the reet, it retards the mevements of the rest. Bad horses in a column are like elow esiling ehipe in a fleet; they retard the mevements of the whole.

"Whether cavalry horses be rendered inefficient hy ooe cause or snother—whether the animals be had or merely overweighted—the result ie the eame. It is then desirabla that the men in our light cavalry should be selected strictly in reference to the character of that class of horse which is best calculated for performiog the duties of such a force. Froot aod rear rook men of entirely different haights may suit a bettalion of infantry, but the two raaks in a regimeot of light cavalry should be filled with men as nearly as poesible of the same etature.

"The reader will probably be surprised to learn tha' while the lightest men in our cavalry weigh, when mounted with all their accoutrements and provisions, fifteen stones, meny weigh eighteen end aomn twenty stones.

"If it be impossible (which we cannot suppose) to select annually out of the whole body of recruits for military service, men of almost aniform height for our light cavalry, tha variety of stature should be classed and formed into differeot regimants. By maintaining uniformity in the character of the meu and horsee forming a regimeat, there would be more unity in its movements.

"Heavy cavalry oot being called on to take severe outpost duty, its horses, while more powerful, may be less hardy aod active than those of light cavalry. Still the efficieacy of heavy cavalry horses depends more on o eombinatioo of ectivity and muscular power, than on muscular power alone. Ie a campaign this force must he able to make loag merches, end snbmit occasionally to privstion.

"The most careless observer cennot but perceive how much the horses in each of the regiments of the household cavalry differ from each other; and how much those of one regiment differ from those of aoother. Many are sufficiently well hred, hut these heve usually the long back, contracted chest, and weak loins of the modern racar from which they derive their bresding—they could not carry through an ordinary campaign half the weight which would he placed on their hacks. If the officers commanding these regiments are compelled, as we doubt not they are, to buy such feeble horses, the fact furnishes us with an importeot argument for calling on government to make an effort to influeoce more successfully thso at preseot, our enoual supply of useful saddle-horses.

"These tell but feeble horses, with large men placed upon their backs have an imposing appearance in the streets; hut they are not calculated for the most ordinary campaign. At Waterloo these troops were effective, but we cannot hope in future to finish a war at the opening of a campaign. It is impossible for regiments to be better disciplined or more anxiously superintended than those forming our household cavalry—the defects in this force are the result of circumstances over which their officers have probably no controul.

"The horses belonging to the heavy cavalry regimeots of the line are better calculated for service than those in the household cevalry, hut they yet exhibit too much veriety of form. When the men in our heavy cavalry of the line are not heavy, this force is better calculated for service than our light cavalry, because the horses are better adepted to the men. Some of the men in our light cavalry are too tall for heavy cavelry, while others present not only a low eteture hut a very feeble form. Tha variety of form in the mae of every cavalry regiment in the service cenoot be too soon put an end to.

"Our artillery is the only mounted corps in the service whose horsee are et all what they ought to be. Foreigners, however, who are acquainted with the appearance of all the great Europeaa armies, concur in affirming the Reesian artillary to be the finest body of horses in the world.

"If we heve accurately described tha means resorted to for preserving speed on the turf, eod their consequences, our racers cannot be fitted for teking eny part in the production of horsee that heve to carry dragoons, who weigh, when fully accoutred, from seventeen to twenty stones of weight. If than the many feeble horees oow found in all our cavalry regiments ers received into them because better cannot be obtained, let ue not rest under each a state of things until surprised by the breaking out a wer in which we may have to fight for our national existance."

British Colonial Library. By R. Montgomery Martin, F.S.S. John Mortimer.

We are much pleased to meet with Mr. Martin's History of the British Colonies in this cheap and popular form. The volume before us containe the History of Upper and Lower Canada, which has been prepared with a view principally to the instruction of the rising generation, and also to convey information to thoee whose attention to the Colonies would not be attracted by an elaborate statistical work. It is illustrated with a view of Quebec, and maps of the two Canadas, and we trust the undertaking will meet with that public support to which it has unquestionable claim.

Evenings Abroad. By the Author of "Sketches at Corfu." Smith, Elder, and Co.

A very pleasant volume of tales, legends, and traditions. A party are supposed to be travelling throogh Italy, noting down such incidents as they meet with during the day, and depositing the same at evening in onn common portfolio. The collection is certainly very amusing, and an improvement on the author's "Sketches at Corfu."

Switzerland. By William Beattie, M.D. Parts XIX. and XX. G. Virtue.

The plates of each succeeding Part of this very chaste and elegant publication become more and more deserving of public approbation; and the letter-press is no less attractive both for its historical matter and pleasing anecdote. The moonlight view of Magadino, Lagga Maggiore, is a splendid illustratioo to the work.

Wellington and Buonaparte.—From the commencement of his fame up to the present moment, the Duke of Wellington's character has been consistent with itself—on every occasion, whether civil or military, his decision and firmness have been alike displayed: while Napoleon, if far from being the greatest, was perhaps the most extraordinary man that ever lived—for the conduct of no other individual has ever presented so many inconsistencies. His actions were ever at variance with each other—at one time evincing the utmost energy and promptitude, when at another they manifested equal weakness and indecision. In some of his earlier engagements he exhibited the most reckless daring—while at Waterloo, if he did not play the coward, he most assuredly rendered his courage on that occasion liable to be questioned. Never was a battle fought on which more dependad—and certainly never did hero fly from the field so ingloriously. Had Napoleon succeeded at Waterloo, it would have prostrated all the energies of the other Continental Powers, and it would have made him once again the idol of France, and have enabled him to command such resources as might have carried him once more in triumph to the gates of Vienna. On the other hand, he must have known that the French nation, in general, longed for repose, and that nothing but the most splendid victory could secure to him his kingdom and his crown. In fact, every thing on earth that ought to have made life valuable in his eyes was at stake on that eventful day; and knowing this, and seeing the field going against him, should he not in person have headed the last onset of his brave and devoted guards, and when he found that he could not conquer, at least die a soldier's death? It is said that his brother Jerome urged him to pursue such a course, but no—he abandoned the post of honour to Ney, and became a fugitive from the field. Certainly Napoleon's conduct on this occasion is at variance with all our conceptions of the hero. That an ordinary individual should prize existence on its own account is natural; but such is not the opinion we form of the man who has conquered in a hundred battles, and who has played the game of life with kingdoms for his stake. From such a one we look for something heroic—something great in the closing scene of his existence—something, in short, in accordance with his past fame and character. Had Napoleon bravely fallen at Waterloo, how differently would he have been estimated; but as it is, a feeling of contempt unavoidably mingles with our sentiments of admiration. Neither was his conduct on his return to Paris, after his flight from Waterloo, such as to commend either our sympathy or respect. In that moment, which would have called forth the firm energies of a truly great mind, he displayed both weakness and irresolution; and he that had been wont, when in the zenith of his power, to play the swaggerer, sunk, in the hour of adversity, beneath those who had been used to tremble at his frown, and became almost a passive instrument in the hands of his own creatores. But if Waterloo might be termed the grave of Napoleon's fame—it was, on the other hand, the theatre where the Duke of Wellington's glory shone forth with its greatest splendour. He was equally well aware as his antagonist of all that depended on that battle—and he resolved that he and his brave companions should either conquer, leave their bodies on the ground they held.—United Service Journal.

Lord Jersey is one of our finest specimens of a noble British sportsman, combined with a high-bred gentleman. Wimrod, in his "Crack Riders of England," says, he was not only "one of the hardest, boldest, and most judicious, but perhaps the most elegant rider to hounds the world ever saw. In his best days—those of Mr. Meynell—(when Lord Villiers) he was not to be beaten either by hounds or by man; on the contrary, there are tales on record touching his Lordship, that lead one to believe he was one of the few of those times who were too fast for the hounds, even over Leicestershire. I allude," says Nimrod, "to his having been now and then heard to exclaim in a run 'curse these hounds, what a hore they are; they can't get from under one's horse's feet.' But all the Villiers's were dashing fellows—'prodigal of their persons,' writes Clarendon." With the exception of occasionally running a horse for a hunter's stake, we believe his lordship did not make his appearance on the turf until the year 1807. Since that year he has been a steady and constant patron of it, and without virtue being altogether its own reward."—New Sporting Magazine.

THE GRAVE OF THE PATRIOT WARRIOR.

He lies beneath the mountain heath,
It is a rude and simple grave;
A narrow mound of loosened ground,
And near it weeds and wild flowers wave.
And by that tomb, with tuft of bloom,
The tall, tall thistle nods and towers;
And maidens bring, and fondly fling
Upon its dark sod, daily flowers.

No priest hath blessed his piece of rest,
He died amid the battle's din;
And comrades dear alone were near
The earth they laid the hero in.
No shroud and pall his limbs enthrall,
He lies, as soldier should, arrayed
In feathered crest and warrior vest,
And in his hand his blood-stained blade.

Yet earth ne'er gave a better grave
Than that where he is meanly laid;
And holier spot is worshipped not
By pilgrim or by mourning maid.
Where shall be found a fitter ground
For Valour's sleep than Victory's field?
The field that saw the foe withdraw.
And baldly fall, or basely yield.

He wants no tomb 'neath Minster dome;
For that let proud Ambition strive;—
His glorious deeds are all he needs
To keep his memory long alive:
A Patriot tried he lived and died,
Lived for the Land he loved so well;
And at her claim, as it became A Patriot's part, he fought, and fell.

Then, traveller, stop! and fondly drop
A tear to dust of such high worth;
And mourn that one, so brave a son
Of Freedom, should have left the earth.
And if thou art of free-born heart,
Thou'lt pray that, when thy star grows dim,
And death is nigh, thou may'st not die
Less nobly than they tell of him. D. W. D.

Metallic Lighthouses.—Mr. Samuel Brown proposes employing bronze or cast iron in the construction of lighthouses, instead of stone. He seems to have made out that a bronze lighthouse would be incomparably cheaper than a stone one, that it would be more secure against dilapidation or subversion by the waves, that the lights would be better protected from the spray by which they are occasionally extinguished, that it could be erected in one-twentieth part of the time, and in situations where a stone structure is impracticable. It has been proposed to place a lighthouse on the Wolf Rock, near Land's End, a position where it would be exposed to the most violent storms of the Atlantic; and a plan was drawn up for the purpose by Mr. Stevenson, who holds a high rank in this department of engineering; which plan Mr. Brown thinks, would require fifteen years for its execution, and cost 150,000*l.* Mr. Brown undertakes to erect one of bronze, 90 feet high, which would answer the purpose as well as the stone one of 134 feet for 15,000*l.*, and to complete it in four months.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

H. WHEATLEY.

St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1805.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undermined, and 200 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician in his Majesty, A. T. Hulroyd, E. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. Loudon, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Aurist to his Majesty, C. Millard.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

TESTIMONIALS.

From Joseph Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba

(Signed) "Joseph Henry Green,

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 25, 1835."

From Benjamin Cooper, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Brenchy Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution to ten or twelve cases with perfect success.

"New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From William Hentsch, Esq., House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, (Signed) "William Hantsch.

"Greville-street, Hatton Garden, April 18, 1835."

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION is the most wonderful Medicine ever discovered by man, for the cure of GONORRHŒA, GLEETS, STRICTURES, WHITES, Pains in the Loins, Affections of the Kidneys, Gravel, Irritation of the Urethra or Bladder, and for all Urinary Diseases in both sexes.—This Medicine is patronised, prescribed, recommended and sanctioned by the Most Eminent of the Faculty, not only in England but on the Continent; and stated by them, from experience, to be the only Medicine that can be relied on for the cure of these complaints, and they invariably resort to it when their own remedies fail.

Yoland's Specific Solution cures both sexes at all times sooner than any other known remedy, with the most triumphant success, after every Medicine of the present day has proved ineffectual, so that this justly celebrated specific has arrived at the acme of perfection, surpassing every thing of the kind that ever bore the name of medicine, frequently curing some of these serious diseases in a few hours. Those who have suffered from any of the above diseases for many years (such as strictures, &c.) will find upon taxing this medicine for a short time, that, if not entirely cured, they will no longer feel inconvenience from the trifling complaint that remains.

References to respectable Surgeons, who are in the habit of prescribing this medicine extensively, will be given on application to the Proprietor's Agents.

Sold in Sealed Packets, with full directions, so that any one may cure themselves with perfect safety and secrecy, sent to any part of the world by Hannay and Co., 63, Oxford street, the corner of Wells-street, London, to whom dealers in the country are requested to forward their orders direct; and Retail by all respectable Medicine Venders. Price 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. Country Order, Orders for the Continent, and shipping Orders to any extent, executed as usual on the day of arrival.

FISTULÆ, PILES, ABSCESSES, TUMOURS, STRICTURES, &c.—Mr. S. J. Van Buchell,

Accoucheur and Surgeon, for the cure of the above complaints without cutting, caustic, or confinement in the most dangerous cases, exemplified in a long practice, offers his professional aid to those who may be afflicted, with the fullest confidence of speedily restoring them to health, by his peculiarly successful and expeditious method of eradicating these disorders, even where the usual mode of treatment has failed of remedy or alleviation. Consulted till one daily at his residence, No. 16, Percy-street, Bedford-square.—Persons afflicted may obtain a prospectus gratis, containing a few out of the many cures effected by him on applying to Mr. Cradock, Chemist and Druggist, No. 6, Store-street, Bedford-square.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and totally eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—"86, Upper Gun-street, Spitalfields.—Sir,—Being troubled dreadfully with Corns, for some years, and at times unable to walk without assistance, when I heard of your Corn Solvent, and, extraordinary to relate, after using one half a bottle, my Corns were entirely removed, and have never troubled me since, which is now nearly [illegible] years. CAUTION.—It having been represented to Messrs. DELCROIX and Co. War Office, 22d Feb. 1836.

The 8th March having been the anniversary of the landing of the British troops in Egypt in 1801, under the command of Sir R. Abercromby, the surviving officers of both services assembled at the Senior United Service Club according to annual custom, to celebrate by a grand banquet the victories gained over the French in that glorious campaign under their immortal chief, who fell in the battle of Alexandria on 21st March, and whose portrait (a work of great merit as well as an excellent likeness of the hero painted purposely for the Club) was appropriately placed at the extremity of the table, having only arrived the preceding day from Edinburgh, Lieut.-Gen. the Hon. Sir Lowry Cole, G.C.B., took the chair, having for his Vice-President Colonel Reeves, C.B., and the following distinguished general and superior officers:—The Commander of the Forces, Lord Hill; Lord Dunsany, Gen. Sir J. Kempt, Adm. Donnelly, Lieut.-Gen. Sir C. Egerton, Sir T. Cochrane, R.N., Major-Gen. Sir J. Barns, Lieut.-Gen. Sir J. Lyon, Maj.-Gen. Sir G. Ramsay, Lieut.-Gen. Sir W. Houstoun, Lieut.-Gen. Sir H. Low, Sir J. Lymond, Maj.-Gen. Clitherow, Sir J. Coghlan, R.N., Maj.-Gen. Sir T. Reynell, Maj.-Gen. Sir C. Doyle, Col. Jolliff, Maj.-Gen. Sir C. Phillips, Capt. Kelly, R.N., Col. Bromhead, Capt. Lloyd, R.N., Capt. Forster, R.N., Col. Duffy, Col. Munro, R.A. Col. Arnold, R.E., Capt. Plumridge, R.N., Dr. Hume, Maj. Austin, Adm. Sir H. Adam.

It is rumoured that Lieut.-General Sir Robert Wilson is to have the appointment of Commander-in-Chief at Madras.

It is rumoured that an inquiry will be instituted in the House of Commons as to the extraordinary promotion of Captain Sir Harry Bathune to the rank of Major-General. The recent presentation by Lord Hill of this officer, on the event of his promotion, is a matter of general astonishment.

Lord Hill's Levee this week was attended by Lord Dunsany, Lieut.-Gens. Sir T. Brown, Bonham, Peacock, Sir C. Phillips, Sir P. Rial, Maj.-Gen. Sir J. Whittingham, Col. Sir C. Vane, Col. the Hon. G. P. Townsend, Lord Hotham, and many others.

Portsmouth, Mar. 11.—(From our own Correspondent.) —The Liverpool was brought into harbour on Saturday last by a party of officers and men from the Britannia and Excellent. Royal salutes were again fired, and on that evening she hauled down the Imaun's red flag, and substituted a blue ensign. The horses, buffaloes, &c., have been landed. The ship is overrun with vermin, and ought to be smoked. We hear she is to be registered on the Navy List by the name of Imaun. They are warping her alongside the dockyard, for the purpose of loading the timber. The Lascars have taken up their quarters at the Old Custom House until arrangements are made for their return to India. The Pantaloon was taken into dock on Monday, and out again on Tuesday. She sustained but trifling injury from getting on shore on Friday last. She will be ready for service next week. The Melville went to Spithead on Tuesday; her crew have been mustered and inspected by Vice-Adm. Sir P. Halkett. She is expected to sail on Sunday, if the weather permits. Vanguard was taken out of dock on Tuesday. She has since been masted, and is lying in the basin ready to be commissioned. Pembroke's masts are not quite ready. Bellerophon will be taken into dock shortly. Sovereign arrived from Malta on Wednesday with part of the 7th Fusileers, and went into harbour on Friday to land them at Gosport. Ships in port—Melville at Spithead. In harbour—Britannia, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Pantaloon, Sovereign.

Plymouth, March 9.—Minden, 74, was docked on Friday, and came out again on Saturday. Talavera was docked on Monday. Pluto, st. Lieut. Daffill, put back to Falmouth, on Monday, and arrived here on Tuesday, having experienced tremendous heavy weather. Star packet is ordered here for repair. Phœnix, st., went into Barn Pool, on Monday, to wait for orders. In Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, and Pluto, st. In Barn Pool—Phœnix, st., which is waiting (as reports state), to take the King Consort to Portugal, and then proceed on to her former station on the N. Coast of Spain. Letters from H.M.S. Andromache, dated 24th Nov., Isle of France, state that she was to sail on the 1st Dec. for Madras.

Admiralty, 10th Feb. 1836.

By accounts from Malta, dated 10th Feb., the fleet were in harbour, but expected to put to sea for a summer's cruise early in May; it consists now of the Caledonia, 120, Canopus, 84, Thunderer, 84, Revenge, 78, Edinburgh, 74, Barham, 52, Vernon, 50, Beacon surveying-vessel, Conflance, Hermes, and African steamers, and the Maria transport, which vessel has just brought up four cos. 92nd reg., and one comp. 60th rifles. Portland, 50, and Medea st.-frigate, are attending on the Kings of Bavaria and Greece; Volage, 28, is at Constantinople; Rodney, 92, Orestes and Childers on the coast of Spain; Tribune 24, at Zante; the Columbine, 18, Com. Henderson, left for a cruise, on 22nd Jan., and on the following, the Sovereign, transport, sailed for Spithead, with part of 7th Fusileers on board, and invalids from the different corps. The schooner yacht Lady of St. Kilda, arrived here on the 27th ult. from Civita Vecchia and Naples.

Belvidera, 42, was at Barbadoes on 21st Jan., and was about to proceed to Washington in the United States, with H. S. Fox, Esq., our Ambassador, who had arrived there in the Wanderer from the Brazils.

Peorl, 20, and Viper entter have been dispatched to Figueras, on the south coast of Portugal.

Lieut. Doose and Mr. Baidlew, Purser, both late of Snake, and Lieut. Coode, late of the Nimrod, invalided and came home passengers in Serpent, relieved by H.M' brig Snake.

One hundred and forty tubs of spirits were this week thrown on shore at Stokes Bay, having been broke up by the late gales; the Rob Roy tender to the Adelaide cutter, also picked up at sea 103 tubs which had been cut adrift by some smuggling vessel.

When the Serpent left Bermuda, on the 4th ult., Sir G. Cockburn had not sailed (as reported in Lloyd's List), to run down the W. India Islands; but had waited the return at Bermuda of H.M.S. Racehorse, 18, Com. Sir E. Home, from Para, whether he had dispatched her to endeavour to quell the insurrectionary movements of the natives in that quarter. The Racehorse not being of sufficient force alone to reduce the natives to vacate the town, though she fired upon it several days, the Com.-in-Chief had sent thither the Rainbow, 24, Capt. Bennett, and Snake, 16, Com. Warren, to be joined by two other ships from Port Royal for that purpose, and the protection of English Merchants' property there, some of which had been seized by the aggressive force, and other parts of it destroyed. This increased force, it was believed, had orders to resort to the utmost extremities to restore the Government authority.

The Nume, Formelia, and Prince Regent transports, Lieuts. Howe, Davison, and Scrymgour, are fitting at Deptford to take troops to the Mediterranean, and the Hope, arrived from Woolwich, is fitting for Halifax at the same place.

The Buffalo is hourly expected to be commissioned at Portsmouth, and it is expected Mr. Sadler, Master, R.N., will again have her.

The Topaz is taking in stores at Deptford for Gibraltar, and the Moffat, Sovereign, and Lord Lynedoch are fitting to take convicts to New South Wales.

Royal Marines.—A Corporal of the Woolwich Division, belonging to the tailor's room, has suddenly disappeared, after pledging property belonging to the officers to some amount. The man's clothes were found on the banks of the Thames, whether he has deserted or destroyed himself has not been ascertained. He has left a wife and large family. The field-days will commence on the 21st inst.

Swift, new brig for packet service, was commissioned on Saturday last by Lieut. Welch. She is taking hands at Woolwich; her mizen has also been taken out, as she was barque rigged. This is considered an improvement.

Blazer, st.-v., is being got ready for service, and it is strongly rumoured Lieut. Pearse will again have the command of her, which will give much satisfaction, as it will be remembered his pennant was only flying eight months when she was paid off.

Carron, st.-v., is at Deptford, having her wheels enlarged.

Firefly, st.-v., is in dry dock, and being fitted with larger paddle-wheels.

Quail, cutter, Lieut. Bisson, is expected hourly at Woolwich, as she has sprung her mainmast; and it is understood from a paucity of steam vessels in commission, she will take out the April mail to Malta.

Echo, st.-v., is being brought forward with all possible dispatch.

Firebrand, st.-v., Master Allen, has paid off her hands, and is at Blackwall being repaired, as also the Alban.

Spitfire, st.-v., Lieut. Kennedy, has refitted, and is expected to leave Woolwich on the 14th inst. for the West Indies.

Fairy, surveying brig, Com. Hewit, is nearly ready for sea, but is in want of petty officers.

Salamander, st.-v. has had new masts put in with increase of length.

Rhadamanthus, st.-v. is being rigged for commission.

Hermes, st.-v., Lieut. Blount.—Capt. Sir J. Warren, and Mr. Ewart, chief engineer and inspector of machinery, visited her on Wednesday, to inspect her, and ascertain the extent of repairs required; her larboard wheel was first disabled off Malta, the inner circle sections having snapped, they being made of cast iron according to Morg last patent, which were considered a desideratum, be three hundred pounds cheaper than those supplied un the former patent. It must be here remarked, that it was first trial of the improved wheels; their giving way may partly owing to the inner sections upon which the press lies being of the same diameter (two inches and a hal metal) as the outer. Lieut. Blount gives great praise to engineers for the masterly manner in which they put t clump, formed out of a pig of iron, as well as various pl to strengthen the wheel, and at which they worked in aantly for four days and nights. With this wheel ( other being totally unserviceable) she made her passage England through some of the roughest weather perh experienced by seamen, and was only four days beyond time. When at Malta, Sir Josias Rowley, the Admi remarked to Lieut. Blount, "that he supposed he kept holm a port against the wheel;" but Lieut. B. assured Admiral that he had "kept the helm a midships," wh be continued to do on the passage home, going at the of eight knots and three quarters an hour. This pla evinces, as remarked by the officers of this ship, the entific nicety with which Capt. Symonds has calculated position of her rudder. Her paddle-wheels are well wor the inspection of any officer visiting the yard; but sh capable of carrying more horse power, as she does not any water in heavy seas. These particulars are given she is a new vessel and this has been her first voyage. repairs are expected to occupy about six weeks, and will take out the May mail to Malta. This vessel brou Thomas Shopperd, the Master-at-Arms of the Colosso When the vessel arrived off Haslar, and the sick boat c alongside, Assist.-Surg. Patterson would not suffer the to be landed, as he was evidently dying, and wished to conveyed to his friends at Chatham; the boat had scar left when the poor fellow expired, and the signal was m for her return to consign him to the grave.

A placard is posted at the Woolwich dockyard gates eble seamen to enter on the disposal of the Lords C missioners of the Admiralty for his Majesty's service. people in the yard now work half a day on Saturday, wh has not been the case for a considerable period. A steam pump-house has been built to keep the dry dock from water. The old double dry dock (on the site of half of which it is built) will be repaired as soon as new wall next the river is finished, so as to extend it ther as both these docks are within ten yards of the smith out of the chimnies of which flakes of the red hot soot tinually issue. May it not be considered a dange locality for the ships lying in the dry-dock, as they c not be floated out at low water?

Sentence of the Court-Martial on Capt. Leyton the Woolwich Division of Rl. Marines.—"The C having duly weighed and considered the evidence for against the Prisoner, Capt. Frederick Leyton, and wha had to offer in his defence, is of opinion that he is Guilty of the charge preferred against him, viz. 'w having, between the 20th July and the 31st Dec., 18 during which period he had the management of the offic mess accounts at Deptford, repeatedly charged, under head of butchers', bakers', and cheesemongers' bills, s larger in amount than the bills sent in by those tradesm such conduct being unbecoming the character of an off and a gentleman,' does therefore acquit him, the C being of opinion that the discrepancies between the bills the charges in the mess-book, are sufficiently accounted The Court, however, regrets that Capt. Leyton should, the obscure method of keeping his accounts, have expo himself to misconstruction."

Seamen's Hospital.—Last Saturday the friends of institution dined together at the London Tavern, the Ear Minto being in the chair. Among the company w Lord Byron, Admirals Sir E. Codrington, Sir J. T. To Sir C. Adam, Sir J. Ommaney, and Thompson, Sir Troubridge, Mr. C. Wood, Mr. Robinson, Mr. A. Ch man, &c.

The following Midshipmen passed for Lieutenants at Naval College, Portsmouth, on Tuesday:—Messrs. Hy Drury, Racehorse; James Bull, Astræa; John Bo mester Dickson, late Satellite; T. A. B. Spratt, and A. Mansell, late Mastiff.

It is reported that Capt. the Hon. H. D. Byng, Superintendent of the ships in ordinary at Portsmouth, be placed in commission on the 1st April. The Commo and Lieutenants are to occupy their respective ships, have charge of a division as heretofore.

In the library of the Duke of Buckingham, at Sto is deposited a box containing papers, secured with th seals, said to be those of the late Marquis of Buckin ham, the late Lord Grenville, and the Right Hon. Grenville. The contents of the box are understoo be manuscript letters of, and documents relating "Junius."

Such is the passion for smoking among the lower c of females in French prisons, that they make pipe bread, in which they smoke snuff, tobacco being prohibited.

East India Intelligence.

CALCUTTA papers to 7th Nov, mention that the issuing of the new rupee, without any explanatory order respecting the difference of value between the old and the new coin, threatened serious consequences. The 44th regt. was in a state of excitement approaching to mutiny. The men had refused to receive the new coin, and the sepoys, who had received orders to march from Barrack. More to prevent any serious disturbance, had refused to move unless they were paid in the old manner. About five hundred of the police had also peremptorily refused to take the new rupee.

The work of quarrying the stones to be used in the Madras Breakwater involves more difficulty than was at first apprehended from the hardness of the rock; and the more expence of powder for blasting is calculated at double the entire estimate. With boats, rafts, land carriages, and cooly, a subsequent calculation fixes the sum total required at three lacs and a half of rupees.

Lieut.-Col. Dennis, commanding H.M.'s 3rd regt., writes on 25th Sept. that the march of the corps from Ghazeepore, was so arranged as to bring it to Agra on 7th Dec. About 26 officers and 600 men, with 1500 camp followers, leave Ghazeepore.

The losses of the insurance brokers this year, owing to the sudden and heavy fall of rain in June and the late losses of the cotton export season, consequent on the crops having been thrown back so much last year, have been excessively heavy. One Agra native house alone has lost lacks to near the amount of 150,000 rupees out of 10,000 or 12,000 boats insured at its office during the past twelve months. The rate of insurance, therefore, has raged very high, but has since receded. There are still some unadjusted disputes as to the liability of insurers in the case of damaged cotton, the one party contending that the injury was occasioned by the rains, the other by the foundering of the boats.

Lieut. Conolly, Assist. to the Agent to the Governor-Gen. in Rajputana has arrived at Agra, having been detached by Maj. Alves to inspect the papers lately seized in the house of Sunghee Hookumchund, the brother of Jolaram, at Agra. The result of the double seizure at Dursuh and Agra must be either to clearly establish the guilt of Jolaram's party, or to fix it upon Thakur Bence Lall.

The state in which the timbers of the Sherburne were found on opening her, has induced the insurance offices to cancel their policies, and to declare that they will not recognise any claims under them, having agreed to the following resolution, "that in consequence of the ascertained unworthiness of the Sherburne at the period of her departure from Calcutta in July, 1835, the insurers at Calcutta do not recognise any claim against the policies granted by them, and that the premiums paid be returned to the policy holders if required."

Capt. Richardson, Paymaster at Vizagapatam, having acknowledged himself to be the writer of a letter which appeared in the Male Asylum Herald, and which was characterised by the Governor as a misrepresentation of a disgraceful nature, under the unmanly safeguard of an anonymous signature, has been removed from his appointment, and placed at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief for far regimental duty.

Colonel Conway is seriously ill at Arcot.

A Court-Martial is now in progress at Trinchinopoly, on Capt. Byng, of the Madras L. C., for writing an anonymous letter in the Madras Paper.

SHUMSHOODEEN.—There are rumours abroad, that the relations of the late Shumshoodeen intend to prosecute Government and the officers concerned in bringing to trial and convicting him, and that some Christians are instigating the family on to adopt this course.

The date of the second departure of the Hugh Lindsay has been changed from the 1st to the 9th Feb.

Capt. Burns, of the Bombay Establishment, has been despatched on an important mission to the court of Sinde, relative to the navigation of the Indus, in which some obstructions have occurred.

TRISTRAM'S SPEECH BEFORE THE HOUSE OF COMMONS ON THE WRONGS OF THE NAVY.

SIR,—However desirous the Admiralty may be to benefit the Navy, I am apprehensive their Lordships' influence with the Chancellor of the Exchequer is not sufficiently great to obtain an annual grant of 10,000*l.* to enable their Lordships to establish a "reserved half-pay list," and as it is not probable, I shall at present take a seat at the Admiralty or be elected an M.P., to bring forward the measure myself, I purpose delivering a speech, sailor-fashion, on the wrongs of the Navy, before the grand council of the nation. Schooled in a man-of-war, where silence, yer Honour, is the only speche practised, and being unaccustomed to, and uneducated for, public speaking, I am naturally fearful of difficulties in the presence of the classic and the eloquent; and from whim and fancy eschewing all other pretensions, I cannot be answerable for my manner or such a critical and important occasion:—

> "Or in what style my tongue may gang,
> My heart or mind determine;
> Whether in prayer—whether in sang,
> But there it gangs nae sermon."

My good fellow, Mr. Editar, do then, I beg of you, instruct me in the etiquette to be observed by an unvarnished rough-knot proceeding to the bar of the House of Commons to plead his right, or to pray the redress of his wrongs; the exact number of obsequious bows; whether he is manfully to shape a straight course to the bar, or make a respectful sweep in his approach, as a coxswain of a barge steers his Admiral alongside: or whether he is to work "Tom Cox's sneaking traverse;" or boldly bust up to it, bank for bank, against the parliamentary breath (always a foul wind for the sailor), as Commodore Trunnion worked his horse to church against a head-wind; and as you are not that shifting dog-vane Editor, who veers and hauls in argument, or that double-breathed Editor, who blows hot and cold against rhyme and reason, I am confident you will give me your able and candid opinion upon this my purposed address to that august assembly.

> "Ye noble Lairds, ye Knights, an' 'Squires,
> Who represent our Burghs an' Shires,
> An' manage sea an' land affairs
> In Parliament;
> To tell you a' our wrangs an' cares
> Hither I'm sent."

The protection of this happy and prosperous kingdom, under the good providence of God, has been confided for many generations to the sons of Britannia, Hibernia, and Caledonia; the sailors in floating castles to guard their native land in all seasons and all weathers, exposed to the perils, and suffering the hardships of the sea, far from home, deprived of the fruits of the earth, the fat of the land, and the soldiers to pmicel it on shore, sheltered from the elements in Palace quarters,

> "No kind hearl to calm the storm—"

> "Free from all but love's alarms," enjoying every care and luxury the world affords, and sipping the balmy treasure of many a sweet damsel's lips,

> "Beneath the milk-white thorn, that scents the evening gale."

I envy not the soldiers' pleasure or comforts, pay or emoluments; I mention their well-earned privileges and their rights, to contrast them with the privations and the wrongs of the sailors, who have equally done their duty in their country's defence. I come not in your presence to make invidious comparisons between the rights of the Army and the wrongs of the Royal Navy, but to submit to your honourable minds that the great difference which exists between the rights of the one and the wrongs of the other is my sole reason and motive for thus interesting the honour of submitting a humble seaman's prayer in behalf of the hitherto neglected Navy—to exhibit the injustice of that difference in favour of the land officers, and the consequent hardships the sea officers suffer by not receiving the same maintenance for themselves—pensions for their wounds—their widows and their orphans, as you, ye considerate and benevolent legislators, have generously granted to the land officers for their services and their wounds, and compassionately bestowed upon their widows, their children, their mothers, and their sisters.

My Lords and Gentlemen,—I beg the indulgence of a hope that your known generosity will vote the small sum of 10,000*l.* to form a "reserved half-pay list" similar to that in the Marines, (what is proved necessary for the good and honour of that corps, and beneficial and fair to the officers composing it, must be so considered in every point and bearing for the Navy,) of the variously unqualified sea officers, leaving an active list for the qualified, who will many years sooner, by this just expulsion of the drones from the hive, increase their half-pay—to assure, as in the war, uninterrupted employment to the young naval gentlemen of character and ability, instead of discharging them penny-less on the wide world after three or six years' servitude, their profession half-learnt, and their naval prospects, without interest, for ever ruined; and if an increase of pay of 1s. per diem were granted to the Mates of the Navy who have passed for Lieutenants seven years, making their annual income 70*l.*—not then but a fraction more than half of that (136*l.*) of the Lieutenants in the Army or Marines of seven years' standing—our cockpits would resound with voices of praise and gratitude.

The hard case of the sea Lieutenants I beg to submit to your very serious consideration, the seniors of whom receive less on full pay, in arduous services, than on half pay—their full pay being 6*s.*, 6*s.* 6*d.*, or 7*s.*, according to seniority. Such anomaly, or injustice, does not exist in any other rank, either in the Army or Navy. The sea Lieutenant is the officer of the watch of a sloop-of-war, or first-rate, and manœuvres either in every emergency; commands a division or company of 80 or 100 seamen, and in battle a park of artillery (of rather too large calibre for field-exercise), and he ranks with a Captain of horse and foot, Artillery, or Marines; yet this Naval Centurion, this Captain of Sea-Artillery, has 4*s.* per diem less than the junior Captain of either corps!!! I humbly trust I am not reasonable in soliciting that their full pay be raised 2*s.* r diem, i. e. from 120*l.* to 156*l.* per annum, and from- n great and responsible duties of the First Lieutenants, and se in separate command, who lost the emoluments of rseerage, their pay from 150*l.* to 200*l.* per annum, as all ommanders, being duty of First Lieutenants, receive 300*l.* t 49*l.* less than Post Captains of sixth rates.

If the junior officers of the Navy are thus proved inade- ately remunerated for their rank and services, I hope I all not fail to convince your honourable House that the st Captains of the Royal Navy, Sea-Colonels of battalions, d regiments of seamen, and Commanders of floating garri- ns, have, beyond comparison, the greatest cause of complaint the greatest grievances to be redressed. These officers held mmissions of the highest trust, honour, and responsibility, d are obliged to uphold the dignity of a representative of ajesty on many occasions, to the utter ruin of themselves d families. They commission their ships for three years ly; their outfit alone takes the first year's salary, and eir table (a board of green cloth for public functionaries roud, and daily for a portion of their officers) empties eir purse of every fraction by the time they are to be paid on 10*s.* 6*d.* per diem, the full-pay retiring allowence of ery Captain of Marines (ranking with a Lieut in the avy) who, after a few years' luxurious ease, is satiated th backgammon and ward-room faro at sea, a guard-room e, and a cigar on shore—

"With his sweet girl, his friend, and pitcher!!!"

(To be concluded in our next.)

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

Sir,—Soon after the celebrated General Order by the late overnor-General in India, which created so invidious a rtinction between the European and Native soldiery in at important empire, to the manifest degradation of the mer, the following letter appeared in a Madras paper der the signature of "Lara." Having a copy, I send it you choose to publish it. Some of the anticipated evils of indiscreet an order, resulted almost immediately, and cent intelligence hints that it has led, or is rapidly leading, mere dangerous consequences.

Mr. Editor,—The policy of the regulation by which e practice of corporal punishment is banished from one rtion of an Army, whilst it is retained in another, is, it must allowed, at least questionable; it is probably the most vidious distinction that can be made; every lash now flicted on the non-emancipated back, will fall with aggra- ted severity, for the consciousness of the sufferer that he undergoing that, which others, walking in the same path life with him, and who may commit the very same fence, are exempted from, cannot but add to the mere in of the infliction, deep and rankling sense of its humi- tion and injustice.

I am far from being an advocate for the lash; I have seen too often resorted to when I felt it might have been spared; d glad indeed should I be if I could convince myself it uld be safely abolished in toto; but as things are, I main- in, and I know in so doing I shall pull a hornet's nest out my ears, that it cannot be so, at least just now. Let gulations confine it to offences of the deepest military cri- inality, let the bands that have hitherto fed its use con- ed to them, be held to the severest responsibility for its just or unnecessary use, but let it remain in terrorem, as resource in extreme cases. We are all aware of the natacles that at present prevent the general extension of the emption, would it not, therefore, have been more prudent have abstained from its partial application?

Some able letters that have appeared on the subject, as- ure pretty clearly some of the evils that may be expected om its working, even among those for whose benefit it is tended, and those anticipations are by no means visionary; e punishment substituted for the lash is inadequate, as ot calculated to produce the effect which the fear of the sh, and which only can justify its use, very greatly did, e., the restraining men from disobedience or crime; besides e natural shrinking from the mere bodily pain it causes, any men, for among the natives there is a great feeling of rsonal pride, pause on the eve of offence, from a consi- ration of the disgrace they might bring on themselves, and, rough themselves, on their immediate connections.

Now I ask any one conversant with the subject, whose owledge is derived from observation, whether the substi- ted simple dismissal is likely to have this effect? I want cant from theoretical soi-disant philanthropists, but plain answer from a practical man of common sense: ich I am sure will agree with me, that the mere dread of mple dismissal, which in the mind of a native, so far em carrying any idea of disgrace with it, is frequently, rough caprice or disgust, demanded, is not likely to strain the young and idle when beset with temptation, or e hasty and discontented, when under excitement, whilst e dissolute, the hardened, and the utterly worthless will ugh it be worn. On this subject there is a letter in the ited Service Journal for October last, which, considering s portion quoted therein as opposed to the entire abolition the lash, is, one would think, conclusive. But besides e substituted punishment being inadequate, the mode of its substitution is highly objectionable, as diminishing still further the before too limited power of Commanding Officers, for even this mild punishment cannot be inflicted by their authority. That able man Sir Thomas Munro, constantly and strongly advocated the necessity of strengthening the power and increasing the authority of Commanding Officers. Their means of punishment as well as of reward should be ample; but what of the former is now left to them, to cor- rect idleness, carelessness, and impertinence (the besetting sins), to put down insolence or turbulence, to prevent the commission of the greater offences, or punish them if com- mitted? Verily none.

But I am afraid we cannot expect that the measure, however premature or unwise, will be immediately, or, indeed, by Indian authority, ever rectified. Independent of the odium and popular clamour, the attempt to restore a punishment which, however necessary, is regarded with general disgust, would excite, common delicacy towards the originator of the abolition, and other manifest considerations, dictate caution; the sudden revocation of an Order like this, spread far and wide, as it has spread, would impair the dignity of the Government, for it would necessarily lend to the conclusion, that either past power had acted precipi- tately, or present power capriciously, and the respect due to Government, as well as the reliance on its wisdom and justice, and the stability of its enactments, would be shaken to the very centre.

It is, therefore, to the legislature at home we must look for the final adjustment of this now important question, and for the extinction of a distinction between the two portions of our Indian Army, alike odious and disgraceful, the con- tinuance of which is as fraught with mischief as its discon- tinuance is with embarrassment. We have all observed how long the question of abolishing corporal punishment has attracted the anxious attention of Parliament; how de- sirous it has evinced itself of meeting a general wish, the mere dictate of humanity, and the patience with which it has listened to the many conflicting opinions on the subject; these opinions have been made public, and without meaning to cast the slightest reflection on the advocates of abolition, we have seen that the voice of practical experience is against it; men of the highest character and kindest dispositions, who have grown grey in the service and in the love of their men, have lifted up the warning voice, and have said, "the time is not yet come."

It is a gross mistake, and yet one too apt to be fallen into, that because officers have habituated themselves to consider the lash as necessary to the repression of crime, that they are therefore fond of its use, and that they do not see its evil as well as its beneficial tendency; I will venture to say no men can be more averse to its use than officers in general. Many a time have I seen an officer as well known for his gallantry in the field as for the kindliness of his dispo- sition, shuddering and almost fainting with painful emotion at the sight of the offender's back, abhorring the punish- ment from which his sensibility revolted, but which his sounder sense told him was just and necessary. This natural feeling against it, and the general clamour for its abolition, must grievously embarrass the legislature in their considera- tion of a question thus forced upon them in an entirely new point of view: it is now no longer whether they should ori- ginate an experiment of a doubtful or dangerous tendency, but whether they are to support one that is already made. The question is truly momentuous, no less than whether, in the teeth of experience, and despite of their own sounder judg- ment, that the time is not yet fitting, they must adopt the full measure of abolition, for partial it cannot be, or whether they are to cancel what mistaken philanthropy has conceded as a boon to a part, and which, however unexpected or unsought for, when granted, can hardly be revoked without exciting bad feelings: trial and difficulty seem to wait on either alternative.

But whilst it behoves us to wait with patient respect for their decision, I may be permitted to suggest certain points that, I think, demand the most serious consideration from authority. I have already adverted to the mischievous abridgment of the power of Commanding Officers; under existing arrangements a sepoy may behave with the utmost insolence, short of mutiny, to his Commanding Officer, assured that the power of confirming any sentence beyond a bare extra guard, is out of his competency, and that the very question of inflicting the punishment of such insolence, awarded by his own officers, rests with a higher and often distant authority—this is not as it should be. There are everywhere turbulent characters who will take advantage of it. The power of a Commanding Officer to confirm all sen- tences awarded by Courts assembled by his own order, ought not to be touched; the proceedings are always open to the inspection and comment of superior authority—restore them this power. In regard to discharge, it is nominal, for no man's discharge is complete until the certificate is countersigned at the Adjutant-General's Office; and as, in its progress thither, it must pass through the intermediate channels of cantonment or division authority, there is little likelihood of any abuse of this privilege, a privilege which I contend is necessary to uphold in the minds of the men a due respect for the authority and public character of their Commanders.

In addition to this, vest greater power in all Courts-Mar- tial; let Regimental Courts have authority to award soli- tary confinement, not exceeding forty-two, nor less than fourteen days, with mulct of pay not exceeding one-fourth; also to sentence the same period of confinement to the barracks, taking all duties, and, in aggravated cases, it should have power to add to discharge one month's impri- sonment in the common jail. Courts, superior to regimental, but inferior to general, should be allowed to inflict solitary confinement for three months on half-pay, the other half to be forfeited to Government, and, in addition to discharge, imprisonment, with or without hard labour; while to General Court should be confided the power of giving soli- tary confinement for six months, and of adding to discharge imprisonment for three years, with hard labour on the roads, and, in very aggravated cases, short of these calling for capital punishment, transportation even for life. With these available gradations of punishment, proportionate to the dignity of the tribunal to which its award is committed, the vicious and turbulent may be awed, and discipline pre- served; the hands of power will be strengthened in proper degrees and places, whilst the vigilant supervision of the various gradations of superior authority, can always check abuse, redress grievance, and punish, if it cannot prevent, tyranny.

ROYAL ARTILLERY BAND.

Sir,—In addressing you on a subject which creates no invidious sensation, but a discontent founded on the spirit of "the regulations of the Service," which are broken through with a glaring impunity, I am induced to hope, by your notice, that the prevailing censure (both military and civil) may be ended by a due observance of those ordai which are for the "well-being of the Army" in general. It has long been a matter of regret that some of the men in the band of this distinguished corps are permitted to parade the town of Woolwich and its environs in plain clothes, with all the paraphernalia not only of genteel life but the more wealthy order of society. Originally it was disco- vered that many individuals in this band were not soldiers, consequently they felt themselves independent of the offi- cers, and so far did it extend that they passed them without any salute; it caused an inquiry into their conduct by some spirited subalterns, and it was discovered many of them had never been sworn in; they had their option to take the oath or quit the corps: a few of the best availed them- selves of the latter alternative, and the remainder and sub sequent additions conformed to the existing law. I will no assert that the present dereliction of duty proceeds from th prior cause of these men feeling themselves superior to th Private, or any laxity of the gallant Commandant (Colone Drummond) of this body, or the vigilance of the highly respected Master (M'Kenzie), as it cannot be supposed they can be hic et ubique, but from the too extended indulgence granted them on all occasions of "making money," thereby imagining a right (which they do not possess) of "doffing their regimentals" whenever they choose to assume the "private" gentleman. It excites the observation of the soldier, who draws a comparison between himself and the bandsman, which not only engenders discontent, but causes an indifference in his conduct, from an unaccountable in- dulgence which is not allowed to the best non-commissioned officer or private. I will not go into the probable facility such a course gives to depredation, violence, and riot, at unseasonable hours of night, or I could substantiate facts of deportation as well as military punishment resulting from it, but I trust the regulations of the Service will be strictly enforced, and not one portion of a garrison be allowed to violate them, to the great injury of the other, from the bad example it sets forth.

NAVAL RESERVED HALF-PAY LIST.

Sir,—I have been a great admirer of Tristram's letters in your valuable Gazette, and from the generous feelings he has exhibited in these letters, I was little prepared to meet the sang froid with which he lends his well taught plume to disgrace so many of our unfortunate Captains, Commanders, and Lieutenants. I know he means it not; ner, "when he hurls the avenging dart," did he dream of wounding any but the undeserving; but his lumping re- puted worthless characters, emigrants, Jacks of all trades, quill-driving Jacks, gaolers, courts-martial, coast guard, in- solvents, &c., &c., &c.; treading on the heels of that direful offence, of not having been employed for the last 20 years, is too severe. Knowing some of the latter (non-employed for about 20 years) reputed unworthy characters, who are undeserving of gaining that little mite to be added to the trifle they now enjoy, I would in fairness inquire, and beg Tristram to point out why some of them have not been employed, what exertions they may have used, and what they (and perhaps hundreds more) may have felt from the cruelty of disappointed hope and blighted interest, were rendered incapable of gaining? He cannot tell! no would, I am sure, wish them to slumber on their oars, b awake in old age to distress, poverty, and woe, rather than they should employ (since their country's they cannot get ose powers God has provided them with for themselves d families in a gentlemanly and honourable calling. No, ristram, this is not your wonted appeal to justice, nor ould you mark with scorn those whose sufferings are keen, sadding the weight of injustice on the mangled worms, taking away that boon, the pledge and promise of the tion whom they served.

"Teach me to feel another's woe,
To hide the fault I see,
That mercy I to others show

FAILURE OF THE NEW SHIP TONNAGE MEASUREMENT ACT.

Sir,—I am induced, by a recollection of the many ju- ious remarks and observations given in your paper when above bill, two years ago, was first read in the Com- ns, to inform you that those well grounded doubts have en realised beyond your possible expectations. The new de of ship measurement is not only a complete failure of proximation to true burthen, but appears (however in- redible) to be by what follows a still greater deviation from

The new act came into operation at the commencement the present year, and two vessels have been measured by Customs at this port, one of them built full for stowage d burthen, the other of a sharp form for fast sailing, so at no exceptions can be alleged on the score of peculiar nstruction.

|---|---|
| A vessel in the timber trade, carrying dead weight and stowing | 310 Tons. |
| Measures by the old act | 233 do. |
| By the new | 219 do. |
| A new schooner, burthen | 180 do. |
| Measures by the old act | 162 do. |
| By the new | 126 do. |

ow, if as reported, the new mode be the production of a mmittee of seamen, after a five years' sitting, what will ientific foreigners think of our experiments and preten- ons to improvements in Naval architecture?

COAST GUARD SERVICE.

Sir,—I perfectly coincide with Numa in his second tter on the Coast Guard Service, on the degradation of e Lieutenants, having the rank of Captains in the my, being obliged to stand at the head of their crews quivalent in number to a Corporal's guard) to salute a aptain in the Navy in England and Scotland, in Ireland officer without recognised rank, and sometimes a Deputy- mptroller, whose rank is only a grade above themselves, Commander. In the order of military salute, I believe a eld Officer salutes the King, a Captain the Royal Family, Lieutenant Admirals and Generals. As this is an evident gradation, not at all requisite for the well being of the best Guard Service, never required in the Coast Blockade th all its strictness, even when the Admiral Commanding- Chief inspected it; and, as the season of inspection is awing nigh, I submit, through the medium of your va- ed paper, to the opinion of Tristram, or any other of your rrespondents, whether the Lieutenant chief officer would t be as much justified in respectfully declining to perform is duty, as derogatory to their rank, as they would under nilar circumstances on board ship; my opinion, grounded 40 years' service, is, that the Lieutenants should roogly remonstrate * against such a degradation as in- mpatible with the respect due to the service to which they long. If this is much longer persisted in they may look t for a little more humility;—there are strange tales oal, about the Officers of the Coast Guard presuming to mplain. I shall conclude by an old aphorism, "intuita æ indecora."

London, 2nd March, 1836. BRUTUS.

* [This must depend whether a written order has been issued by the Comptroller-General, Captain Bowles, and whether it has been subscribed to by the officers on the several stations, as it was their duty respectfully to remonstrate before attaching their signatures to the document.—ED.]

THE STARVATION SYSTEM AT ADDISCOMBE.

Sir,—You have already given place in your valuable per to a letter reflecting on the system of Addiscombe, far as regards mental improvement; I hope you may be duced to publish a few hasty remarks on the bodily com- rts of its inmates. Retrenchment, as in all other public partments, is the order of the day here; and though a derate reform might have been a salutary measure, I think ey have gone a little too far as regards the article of vic- alling. It is not perhaps generally known that all Cadets ho shall henceforward join the institution will pay nearly ouble the annual sum formerly required by the Honourable Court; one would naturally expect that their comforts would e augmented by this change, but it has not been so. The llowance of food, formerly unlimited, has been grievously iminished. Is it possible for ten growing young men to dine f a shoulder of mutton; weighing ten pounds, including bone, kin, and fat? You will have a better idea of our case hen I explain the rules of the mess. The carver cuts off small slice for each member, and the bone makes the tour of the table; the first three or four usually clear it; and as this is done in turn, a Cadet gets about three very fair dinners a week, the rest are hungry days. Before these regulations came in force, we were allowed meat to our heart's content; you cannot then wonder that some discontent should be manifested at the new measure. With respect to breakfast, we were formerly allowed one ounce of butter and a pint of tea; the latter has been commuted for milk, and the former has been altogether withdrawn. Now, milk does not agree with all constitutions; and if a Cadet objects to it, he has nothing upon which to fall back, save water and dry bread—the diet of a convict.

But now for the grand grievance. I am sure every body knows the old line in Horace, with the lame spondee in the rear: "Parturiunt montes, nascetur ridiculus mus." I fear you will consider my long preamble but the groans of the mountain, and what follows as the mouse which produced them. Can you believe that the twenty-four Sovereigns of Hindostan have deprived us of pepper and mustard? Give us less meat, give us inferior provision, but, in the name of goodness, give us something to make it go down! mustard surely was so great expense! we have beef, which requires that condiment, but twice a week. Courage is the grand desideratum in a soldier, but courage requires stimulants! we desire not cayenne, we dare not hope for Chili vinegar! we leave those to our more ardent French neighbours. Well, this is not all; you must know that on former Sundays there emeaked upon the groaning board divers large plum-puddings, emblems of British cheer and incitements to British valour; there they stood, poor things! their noble heads decorated with an ample powdering of white sugar (lucky was he who, trusting to his superior strength, dared to seize upon this for his own share). It has gone, a tax has been laid on the powder, and their dear bald pates are left destitute of all covering.

I have witnessed two or three examination days, and have seen several worthy gentlemen here bearing "Tea duca" for their motto. I have seen many a goodly stomach, and goodlier countenance—a countenance of humanity and joviality, a stomach bearing evident signs of acquaintance with the secrets of culinary tactics. They come down twice a year, and admire the merry faces at the mess-tables; they will never see such merriment again! I should like to see ten of these honourable gentlemen dine off a shoulder of mutton; I should like to see them served with the ghosts of mustard-pots, and the spiritual vacuity of pepper boxes. To conclude, I have just given you a sketch of our mode of living, and a few hasty remarks upon it; I have begun with the sublime, namely, the shoulder of mutton, and ended with the ridiculous, namely, the mustard and pepper; but you who have so much more experience than myself must know that where bodies of men or boys are brought together, they always look to the small comforts more than to the great disagreeables. If you should think any of my remarks worthy of attention, you will confer a favour on C. M. B.

CLERKS IN THE ROYAL ENGINEERS DEPARTMENT.

Sir,—Adverting to an article which appeared in a late number of your Gazette, in which you regret the small scale of promotion extended to that class of officers, the Clerks in the Royal Navy, after a period of 20 years' service, although I feel happy, in conjunction with every other liberal minded man, at seeing their claims brought forward, and am bound to admit that their promotion is indeed limited, I would, at the same time beg to call your attention to a class of individuals who, in my opinion at least (although they have never yet brought their grievances before the public) have infinitely more to complain of, I allude to the Clerks in the Royal Engineer Department, who, it appears, no matter how long, or in what climate, their period of service, or however valuable their exertions, are not to expect any promotion whatsoever.

I had hoped (but I perceive vainly so) that it would have fallen to abler hands than mine, to have advocated the cause of these praiseworthy, but so far unfortunate, individuals; but as no one has stepped forward to represent their case, I will beg a place in your valuable columns, and endeavour, notwithstanding my total inadequacy to the task, briefly to state to you the just cause these persons have for complaint.

The Duke of Wellington, when Master General of the Ordnance, I believe first took the case of Clerks in the Engineer department into consideration; he framed a scale for increasing their pay according to their length of service, and for placing them on the establishment of the Ordnance, for which acts his Grace is entitled to their everlasting gratitude. They were afterwards indebted to the Marquis of Anglesey, when he became Master General, for carrying the proposition into execution.

|---|---|---|
| For and during the first 7 years' service | 4*s.* 6*d.* | per diem * |
| After 7 years | 6*s.* 6*d.* | |
| 14 | 6*s.* 6*d.* | |
| 21 | 7*s.* 6*d.* | |

* The former rate of pay was 90*l.* per annum.

The advantages here held out by the generous framers of this scale are now denied them, and the cup dashed from their lips ere they have tasted it. By a subsequent decision of the Honourable Board, the increase of pay is only allowed from the 1st of July, 1834, so that a Clerk may have served 22 years, and still be in the receipt of only 5*s.* 6*d.* per diem, whereas, if the full benefit of the regulations had been extended to him, he would be in the receipt of 7*s.* 6*d.* per diem. Notwithstanding the spirit and intention of these regulations, as stated in the preamble, were such as should award to each individual a fair remuneration for his services!!!

You will, therefore, perceive that, according to the existing decision, no servitude previous to the 1st of July, 1827, is allowed, that a Clerk must serve 21 years from that date, before he can obtain even 7*s.* 6*d.* per diem, beyond which sum there is no increase of salary, either for service or good conduct, and although he is subjected to a stricter examination for his situation than a Clerk in any other branch of the Ordnance, though his time and abilities are given up wholly to the benefit of the service, though his duties are more difficult, complicated, and responsible than those of any other in the Ordnance department, not being those of a mere copying clerk, as might be inferred from his rate of pay, but actually and bonâ fide, those hitherto performed by the officers of the Engineers. Still promotion there is none.

I beg to call to your recollection, Sir, the number of years that meritorious class of officers the Pursers in the Royal Navy remained without obtaining any amelioration of their condition; government have at length become sensible of the justice of their claims, and they are now about to reap the benefit of their exertions.

I am fully aware that the most likely means of obtaining what is sought for, is by adherence to facts, and it is strictly to them that I have confined myself. Moreover I have been induced to make these remarks from a conviction that the present Master General of the Ordnance cannot have the slightest idea of the disadvantages under which the Clerks in the Engineer department labour, and it is simply with a hope that these observations may meet his eye, and be the means of causing inquiry to be made into the circumstances why such disparities do exist, that I have made them.

If I shall be so far fortunate as to succeed in my attempt, I shall be happy, and feel confident that the Master General, on being made acquainted with the true bearings of the case, will, in accordance with his universally acknowledged character for justice and benevolence of disposition, be kindly pleased to extend to Clerks in the Royal Engineer department, that boon which is not denied the Clerks in any other branch of the Ordnance, or, indeed, of his Majesty's service, namely promotion, and a fair remuneration for their services.

By giving insertion to the above in your highly prized paper, you will perform an act of justice, confer a lasting favour on a very deserving class of individuals, and ensure the thanks of

A CLERK ROYAL ENGINEER DEPARTMENT,
Of 20 years' Service.

PROTECTION OF MILFORD HAVEN.

Sir,—As your excellent Gazette is, no doubt, read at the Admiralty, permit me by its means to call attention to a piece of neglect evidently not remedied from being unknown. In a tour of some of the sea-ports on the western and southern part of the island I lately made, I was struck with the glaring want of protection under which Milford Haven labours—a haven noted in the annals of history, and, if I may be allowed from a superficial inspection to judge, unequalled, at all events not excelled, by any other noticed by the approbation of the government authorities. In times of peace, this must have been a neglect scarcely pardonable, and which I wonder was not frequently represented by the inhabitants; but now, when every demonstration of preparation to meet emergencies is taking place, even to the removing the guns at the fortifications at Plymouth, which I saw taking place there in my journey, it is doubly to be regretted. The different establishments in it belonging to the crown have not so much as a brig-of-war to protect them from the attack of even a boat from an enemy, and most assuredly would any opposing fee quickly avail themselves of this to injure particularly the ships building in the port. The establishments alluded to are an extensive generation department, packet station, custom-house, dockyard, and naval arsenal, and its adjacent marine barracks. On visiting this place, I found it to be an old 74 gun-ship, the Dragon, fitted as temporary quarters for the detachment of marines, but which, from her leaky state, and the dreadful effluvia arising from the mud on which she is grounded, generating malaria of the most injurious nature, cannot but be unhealthy in the extreme for the troops. I was informed the copper and other stores of which she is built would, it is said, more than pay the expense of erecting permanent quarters for them on the site long since decided on for the erection of proper barracks. The country would thus in reality be put to no expense, and those valiant fellows be once made comfortable while remaining on shore duty. It former times there were always two or three men-of-war on the station which used to rendezvous at Milford, as I am informed, and I do hope most sincerely these remarks will lead to similar steps being taken without further delay. I shall be "far awa" from it before such an arrangement can possibly take place, but delighted shall I be to see its accomplishment notified in the pages of your widely circulated periodical. ## ASSISTANT-SURGEONS OF THE ROYAL NAVY.

SIR,—I am induced by the well-known fairness of your pages, and the liberality as well as justice of your views on any subject that concerns the character or interests of all classes in his Majesty's service, to bring under your notice, and (through you) the notice of the public, a few of the grievances of a meritorious, but neglected and (compared with their brethren of the army) an ill-used class of officers, I mean the Assist.-Surgeons of the Royal Navy.

I believe I am borne out in stating, that the curriculum of education, and the attainments requisite to undergo successfully the ordeal of examination for admission to the army and navy are nearly equal; and that in talent, in general acquirements the naval are at least on a par with the military medical officers on their first entering the service; yet even at this early period how differently are they treated!

A gentlemen on entering the army as an Hospital Assistant obtains the rank of an Ensign with the pay of 6*s.* 6*d.* per diem. On being appointed Assistant-Surgeon to a regiment (which generally, if not always, takes place within a year from entering the army), he ranks with the Lieutenants, taking seniority according to the date of his commission, becomes at once a member of the regimental or depot mess, has a servant appointed, who is excused the ordinary routine of duty, and besides allowances, if on a foreign station, the pay of 7*s.* 6*d.*, which after 10 years' service is increased to 10*s.* per diem, and after 20 years' service as an Assistant-Surgeon, he can retire on 5*s.* per day half-pay. Whereas on entering the navy, and being appointed to a ship, the Assistant-Surgeon becomes a member of the Midshipman's berth, has no cabin nor servant allowed him, ranks always inferior to the Junior Mate and Second Master, who have no definite rank whatever, shares prize-money with Gunner's, Boatswain's, and Carpenters' Mates, Coxswains, Captains of Tops, and Serjeants of Marines. His pay is 6*s.* 6*d.*, and his rations, if drawn in money, are valued at 10*d.* per diem. He gets no increase of pay, rank, or accommodation, though he should serve for 50 years, and serve he must if able, or resign all connection with, and claims upon, the service. Should ill health, or even old age, render him unfit for farther exertions, he obtains the miserable half-pay of 3*s.* per diem, as a remuneration for his services in a life of privation and suffering.

When an Assistant-Surgeon in the Army obtains promotion, he retains all the advantages of his past services for increase of pay, half-pay, and retirement, and he takes rank with a Captain according to seniority, but the Naval Assistant when promoted to the rank of Surgeon, after any period of service, however protracted (and it is now seldom less than 10 or 12 years) gets only the lowest scale of pay and half-pay, ranks inferior to the Junior Lieutenant and Master, and, as he resigns all claims for past services, must serve 17 years in his new capacity ere he is entitled to exemption from service, and then only on the half-pay of 6*s.*, so that a Surgeon of the Navy who has served 20 years as an Assistant, has no advantage whatever over his more fortunate brother officers even of the same service who served only three years prior to their promotion.

I know it may be urged that the expenses of a military life are much greater than those in the navy, and therefore require a larger income to support the rank; but supposing the pay of a military life equal to the expense, and that Assistant-Surgeons and Surgeons in the Navy can even save money, can this paltry consideration be considered an adequate remuneration for their utter privation of all the enjoyments of life and pleasures of society, which their red-coated brethren possess during their servitude, besides the greater retiring pension they enjoy afterwards? But, Mr. Editor, it must be recollected that in the Army medical men enjoy many opportunities, fair and honourable, of increasing their income when stationed in garrison-towns, and when abroad in our colonies, where they generally remain for a series of years, whereby they become known, and their worth and talent appreciated; and, moreover, the very circumstances that cause the greater expenses of a military over a naval life afford them opportunities of acquiring those friends, and that knowledge of society which are so eminently useful in forcing their profession to advantage when freed from the trammels of service.

AN ADVOCATE FOR JUSTICE.

BADGES FOR BARONETS.

SIR,—Having recently remarked in your luminous columns some very judicious observations relative to the great want of appropriate personal distinctions for the various grades of Knighthood in this country, allow me to bring to your notice one, comprising a large portion of the most distinguished officers of both branches of the Service, viz. the Baronets of the United Kingdom. Their case is peculiarly hard; for, although ranking next after the peerage, and above all Knights whatever (the Garter alone excepted), they are absolutely divested of every external symbol that could distinguish them from the most ordinary Knight that ever carried up an Address to the foot of the Throne. This it is that has so lessened their "Order" in public estimation; and to remedy which they last year presented a Petition to his Majesty desiring at least to be put upon a footing with their brethren of Scotland, who had a badge and armorial bearings granted to them by King Charles the First, and whose location was posterior to their own. We still indulge the hope that its prayer will be granted.

I am of opinion that all degrees of rank should be distinguished by some external mark either of dress or personal decoration; for of what use alone can rank be unless there is something visible to denote it in society? Stars or crosses, we do not ask those as ensigns of honour and glory; we are content to leave to those whose nobler exploits have won them; but the badge, as merely denoting the rank of Baronets and their station in the scale of precedency, ought not entirely to be withheld from us. It would be far better at once to abolish our "order" than leave us in our present anomalous and degraded state. By giving insertion to these lines at your earliest convenience you will greatly oblige

MILES, AND A BARONET.

SHIPS EMPLOYED IN THE TRANSPORT SERVICE.

SIR,—On forwarding a few strictures on the unworthiness of ships received into the transport service, I beg to be understood I mean no aspersions whatever to the resident Agent at Deptford, or to the long-tried and inestimable worth of his predecessor, whose long and faithful services endeared him to every person who fortunately came under his auspices. It is the system of which I complain, and on the following extract of a letter in the Times of the 30th of Dec., 1835, I attach my minute. "The Comptroller of the transport service states that all vessels, before they are engaged for the public service, undergo a most rigorous examination, and are surveyed by the resident Agent of transports at Deptford, assisted by an experienced and skilful shipwright; that every ship taken up for some time past has been invariably docked for the purpose of examining her bottom; and that no vessel is finally accepted until a satisfactory report is received," &c. Thanks to the manes of the Amphitrite and George the Third for this. "Trust no man," an axiom of the Duke of Wellington's, than whom no one ever hit more hard, more honest, or more true. Both at home and abroad and in every nook in the globe where naval, ordnance, army, barrack, and hospital stores hold a place, wherever public works are erected, in a word, on every occasion, Boards consisting of the senior officers of Artillery, and Engineers, and the Storekeeper, or an officer of his department on the spot assemble, the senior military officer presiding. The others form the members of these Courts, and the Board thus constituted are designated "the respective officers." If ever a heterogeneous mass were assembled, these would bear the palm. When naval stores are overhauled, a Lieutenant or a Gunner appears, the most skilful artisans are at their beck, and cheeque upon cheeque insure less good nature, but more sinewy results. This healthy jury report, of course, to the principal Storekeeper for the colony, and are by him in due routine, after examination at the head-quarters, transmitted by him to the Hon. the Surveyor General's office at the Tower. Let us now reverse the picture. The Athol, built of larch from the Duke's estate, was a surveying vessel, or was employed a long time on the coast of Africa. She was surveyed at Portsmouth and said to be rotten; on her being again inspected at Woolwich, there was not be sound timber to be found in her. She was altered into a troop ship, and a more strong vessel does not exist, and does credit to that fine old warrior Admiral Sir Thomas Hardy's recommendation and administration. The Portsmouth yards chuckle, and declare this to be an instance of no Scotchmen being there employed. An Offset.—The Doris frigate, brought into the service from the Indian Company's (teak built), with iron fastenings, was coppered and surveyed at Portsmouth, and went out to South America; the galvanic action between the metals caused the destruction of the iron, and she was held together by her wooden ribs, and sold in South America, the crew returning in transports. The Woolwich yard say they may have Scotchmen, but they hold no India Bonds, begging their Portsmouth friends to take their change out of that. Where all are honourable men, I have said enough on oral inspections, and, in consequence of the foregoing, I would henceforward recommend a board consisting of the Resident Agent at Transports at Deptford (than whom no man more fit), a Surveyor (practical) from the Navy, a Master, an efficient one, one of your old sponges, who can take evidence from carpenters, caulkers, &c., and which Board should certify before a ship be received, her age, her build, the appearance of her timbers perforated by the augur in sundry parts, and the opinion of Lloyd's as to insurance; follow these instructions, and pitch and putty will no longer, with their ally oakum, tend to cover sin, and drown his Majesty's liege subjects. Yours,

NAVAL DOCKS' AND VICTUALLING-YARD POLICE.

SIR,—Among your excellent correspondence, observing you to have been addressed upon the above subject, I think you will allow me to remark that, at the Dock and Victualling Yards at Deptford, there is not any Director of Police who is a commissioned officer, as the one is a warrant old warrant officer, and the other a sort of Civilian, who only like a porter, which may account for their not appearing in uniform; but were the Yard in commission, there there would be a Lieut. R.N. appointed, who would, of course, be dressed according to the order of the Board of Admiralty. If there are not fires allowed there (which I regret to add, from information, I find to be the case), I trust the publicity of the fact, through your columns, will induce the officer in whose department it may rest to immediately issue an order for this necessary comfort. Your correspondent is in error in supposing that, by an officer wearing straps on both shoulders, he is a Commander; and, indeed, to be candid, I must state that, from the tenor of the letter in question, I have reason to believe Lieut. Pearse, of the Woolwich Dock-yard, is alluded to, a man to whom I must in justice give my humble meed of praise for his attention to the comforts of those under his command, in the formation of whom into a corps he displays a skill (which, however, might have been expected from his previous gallant and meritorious services for many years as a First Lieut. of several ships, as well as in command of smaller vessels*), that called forth the public thanks of Sir James Graham and other Lords of the Admiralty, not merely for the formation of the men into a disciplined body relative to their duties, but also for a code of regulations then had written and used, a copy of which he was ordered to send to the Board to be adopted in the other yards.

It is true that a new set of regulations have been latterly transmitted; they are founded upon this officer's, and only revised from the experience of time and the working of the system.

Apropos, if the comforts of the men have been better attended to at Woolwich Dock-yard than the others, it is only attributable to the sagacity and kind feeling of Lieut. Pearse, who, in five weeks after the order for their formation, had the station-house in the most clean and even "snug" state, for this gentleman was the first who had cupboards under their own lock and key for each man, in addition to a trunk about three feet and inches, and I believe these cupboards are only to be found in this Yard; if at any other, they have been copied from his plan, as well as hooks to dry their clothes on, from the inclemency of the weather, &c. Although I may be considered as playing the eulogist, still "palmam qui meruit ferat," and it is only a humble tribute to the efficiency and attention to the comforts of his men (so truly characteristic of the British officer); and as it is from an old correspondent, not emanating from private friendship, I hope it will be appreciated by your numerous and gallant readers.

OBSERVATOR.

* This gentleman had passed and been made some years Lieutenant abroad, but not confirmed at home, after his service for that period, for the most part as a First Lieut.; when he returned to England, he was again compelled to pass an examination with several others, and only took seniority from his last examination, so that he is several years senior than he appears on the List.

The O'Connell-Raphael Inquiry.—However dissatisfied some may be with the result of the Carlow Committee's Inquiry, nobody will be dissatisfied with the fact that the Committee has terminated its labours. The newspapers have published the evidence at a most preposterous length—the huge Morning Chronicle having given a double sheet, certainly the largest ever issued as a daily journal. The days must be lengthened by act of parliament if such sheets are to be often given. The report is in many respects diverting and rich for the illustration of character. Two facts are at any rate substantiated in it; that Mr. O'Connell asked Mr. Raphael if he had "any wish to be a baronet;" and that Mr. Raphael is much more attached to accepting them than to issuing invitations to dinner. Perhaps it would puzzle Mr. Vigors himself, distinguished as he is as an ornithologist, to classify the animals that were examined at the hospitable board of the Ex-Sheriff; and perhaps it would equally puzzle Sir William Woods to describe the particular badge, or to specify the honorary title which plain Mr. Raphael is likely to assume in consequence of O'Connell's "strictly confidential" quiz.—Court Journal.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY MARCH, 12, 1836.

The readiness and cheerfulness with which the proposal for increasing the Navy has been met by the Legislature, must satisfy the Government that whatever measures they may suggest for the improvement of this main bulwark of our strength, will be sure to be hailed with the like satisfactory approval by the country at large. With this confident impression we would earnestly submit, that there are some points which ought at once to merit the attention of our Naval rulers, as the alteration we could propose would tend materially to better the condition of our officers, and be the means of bringing forward some of the best and most distinguished men in the service, whereas, at this moment, many officers of the first character, who have every desire to give their future years of energy to their profession, are unhappily prevented from doing this in consequence of the vast cost attending the outfit of a ship, together with the subsequent expences of keeping the necessary table. Under the present system it is impossible for any Captain, who has a family, to seek employment, unless he has a private fortune to enable him to expend at least five hundred pounds in providing the requisite furniture, &c., for his cabin; and afterwards full four hundred a-year for his table, as he is expected to do that which has been done from time immemorial in the Navy, namely, to invite two or three of the officers of his ship to dinner daily. To remedy, then, these sad drawbacks in our Naval Service, we would submit simply, that the regulations regarding the officers of the French Navy should be closely followed in ours, and we feel confident that there is not an Englishman, not even Mr. Hume himself, who will refuse to a British Officer the same pay and allowances as is enjoyed by an officer of the same rank belonging to the Navy of our greatest rival power, France. The American officers, likewise, have double the pay of ours. The claims of the Captains of our Navy, on the consideration of the Admiralty and the country, have of late acquired a tenfold force, as a consequence of the vast reductions which have been made in their prize-money and freights; for, amidst all the recent arrangements for bettering the condition of the seamen the Captains have been made the sole sufferers; hence the pretensions of this class of officers ought to be at once brought under public regard, both as connected with their half-pay as well as their full pay; but it is more particularly with respect to the latter, by which the most experienced and meritorious officers may be enabled to give their valuable services to the country, that we contend for the policy as well as the justice of adopting the French system, of making suitable allowances to every class of officers for his table, in proportion to his rank, as well as the furnishing of his cabin at the public charge, by having the necessary furniture made in our Dock-yards, as is done in those of France, for the ships of the French Navy, and which, being considered as Government stores, are returned when the ship is paid off, and then supplied to another about to be commissioned.

Were a regulation of this sort adopted it would be but the first cost, of perhaps ten thousand pounds for all the ships in commission, and then the same furniture would last twenty, and possibly fifty, years with common care.

We hope, also, that like the French system our officers, when employed, will be paid according to their rank and seniority, and not according to the rate of the ship they may chance to belong to, by which a Captain of but two or three years' rank is in the receipt of 800*l.* a-year, whilst one of twenty years' seniority has but the half of this sum. The era has now arrived, we trust, when these and other salutary amendments will be made in our Navy, and by which, those who cause them to be carried into effect, will win the gratitude of the whole Service.

We last week concluded our observations on the article from the London Review, under the head Retrenchment, Abuses, &c., of the Army. There were many points but slightly dwelt on by our contemporary, and still less so by ourselves, in consequence of the limited extent of our columns and the quantity of matter on hand; to these we shall recur on some future occasion, and our readers may rely on it with greater independence than ceremony towards "the authorities."

There is one subject, however, which has escaped the reviewer's notice,—it is an evil of modern growth, and if not checked will very soon be productive of the most ruinous consequences to the Service; we allude to the Screening System. It is scarcely possible to reconcile our minds to the idea that officers should be found in the British Army capable of indulging in such an unworthy practice; and it is equally difficult to believe that any department in this country should countenance so unprincipled, so anti-British a measure, but thus it is, and an article from a late number of our monthly contemporary, the United Service Journal, which indeed we partly copied, has exposed its workings, and given instances beyond doubt of its prevalence.

A writer, in a more recent number of the same periodical, says,—

"I will mention a fact, which will prove powerfully the existence of such a system in a principal garrison town in Ireland a few years ago. A certain regiment, of the highest character, was found fault with by a great authority, for the great prevalence of drunkenness and irregularity apparent in their defaulter returns, those of other regiments being comparatively clean. It was represented by the officer in command of that regiment (as sensible a man and as good an officer as any in the service,) that it was the system of the corps to pass over no instances of intoxication, either with regard to the punishment or the recording of the offence, and to this was owing the apparent excess of irregularity over that of other regiments, whose system was different. The following query was the answer he received:—'Do you mean to say that the commanding officers of those regiments would send me false returns?' Annoying as was this answer to the officers of the denounced regiment, it was also to a certain degree amusing to them, who had a better opportunity of judging of the relative conduct of regiments in garrison than the 'great authority' above referred to, and who had been in the daily habit of seeing non-commissioned officers and men, of the regiments held up as models, staggering into barracks at roll-call unnoticed and at liberty.

"Your readers will hardly believe that it was hinted by the great powers to the commanding officer above-mentioned, that it would be agreeable if he could contrive to return fewer irregularities than he had been in the habit of doing. And when this was objected to, as contrary to the system of the regiment, which was that of concealing nothing, he was told to return his cases of ample intoxication numerically and not by name, in order, I suppose, that the return should not look so black! I may add, in proof of the injustice of the attack on the discipline of the above quoted regiment, that during the two months it was in the garrison, it had not a single instance of intoxication on duty under arms."

Let us hope that, for the reputation of the Service, the General Commanding-in-Chief will take steps to crush this system of Screening before it contaminates the whole Army. It is not by such deceptive means that due subordination is to be maintained; the officer so indulging may enjoy certain eclat for a while, but the evil will sooner or later manifest itself in the demoralisation of the troops, and, eventually proving the excellence of truth, will show that "honesty is the best policy."

We have more than once alluded in our columns to the unprecedented case of the late Commissioner of Bermuda Dock-Yard, Captain Ayscough, who was in the most unexampled manner superseded in that appointment, for reasons which he has never yet been enabled to discover, although we learn that he has again and again preyed the investigation into his conduct. The time is at length arrived, however, we confidently trust and believe, when this justice will no longer be denied to him, and which, we have been informed, would in all probability ere this have been granted by the late much-respected First Lord of the Admiralty, Lord Auckland, had he continued at the Board. The same distinguished Naval Officers, who were the colleagues of his Lordship, being still at the Admiralty, it is seriously to be hoped that they will now impress on the Earl of Minto the propriety of ordering a thorough inquiry into all the circumstances connected with the removal of Captain Ayscough from the situation which he held at Bermuda, in order that, if he was superseded through any improper and unfounded representations that might have been made to the then First Lord, Sir James Graham, he may, though late, at last receive some reparation for the grievous injury he has received.

It is not the peculiar case of Captain Ayscough alone that has led us to call attention to the measure complained of, but because it is one which seriously affects the whole service, for what has occurred to him to-day may be made to apply to some other meritorious officer to-morrow, and the erroneous statements of any individual may be the means of taking from a worthy and faithful public servant that which is far dearer to him than even life itself, his honour and character. Having thus once again briefly submitted our opinions on this extraordinary case, we will only repeat our fullest reliance that the present liberal-minded Board of Admiralty will not deny to Captain Ayscough the open and fair inquiry which he has so constantly prayed; for, unless this be granted him, this gallant officer will indeed have just grounds for representing, that in spite of our boasted liberties and rights, and in the dire teeth of all our highly prized attributes of justice, yet there does exist in this happy land, a wrong without a remedy.

We have heard the opinions of numerous officers on this case, and they are unanimous in favour of Captain Ayscough; a braver or more noble character does not belong to the Naval Service.

ALTHOUGH we have heard at different times, through the provincial journals at our Naval ports, of the plan which has been proposed to the Admiralty, by Captain James Couch, of the Navy, for fitting ships with solid channels, yet, until lately, we had never happened to see the pamphlet which this gallant Officer had published, showing the important advantages likely to accrue from the proposed measure. We have looked through it with attention; and now, believing as we do, that Captain Couch's mode of fitting the channels will, if adopted, be the means of saving numerous ships from foundering after being dismasted, by enabling the wreck to be cleared immediately, instead of, as is the case under the present system, its being subject to knock holes in the ships' bottoms, and thereby causing their total loss, and often that of the lives of the crews, we earnestly trust that the Admiralty will suffer a ship or two to be thus fitted immediately; indeed, if we remember rightly, there has been a frigate ordered to have these channels, and we therefore shall anxiously look for the report upon them at an early period. The Mercantile interest, too, will we hope, in like manner, try the experiment; and we would particularly recommend it for the ships employed in the TIMBER TRADE from Canada and New Brunswick, very many of which were lost during the months of November and December last, together with a great many lives. The Masters of several of these vessels, who happened to have been taken off the wrecks, will, we are assured, bear testimony to what we assert, as to the immediate cause of their ships filling, namely, that of the masts having stove in the planks, from its being impossible to get the rigging disengaged from the hull, and thus to free the vessel from the wreck,—could this but have been done, and which, under Captain Couch's proposed plan, we confidently believe would have been easily effected, both the vessels and their crews and passengers would in all probability have reached England in safety, by the getting up of jury masts when the gale had abated. For HUMANITY'S sake then alone we hope that the thing will be tried forthwith, and as the Commercial Marine always look to the Royal Navy first, for the trial of all experiments of this kind, we feel assured that the liberal-minded and distinguished Officers now at the Board of Admiralty will promote this desirable measure by every means in their power, for as it is a great NATIONAL object, that of determining on a means for the better preservation of the lives of our gallant seamen, together with that of the property of the subjects of the United Kingdom, we deem that were the cost, in order to effect this, thousands of pounds instead of hundreds, the trial should be made without delay, in every possible form, even to the extent of purposely carrying away a mast or two in a small class vessel, so as to put the thing to the most positive test.

In thus offering our remarks on this question, we should have done so with more diffidence did we not find these opinions confirmed by those of some of the most talented and experienced Officers of the Navy. In saying this we have only to name Admirals Erskine, Douglas, and Maitland, Captain Sir William Montague, Captain Skipsey, Captain Hayes, and others, all of whom stand so deservedly high in the profession, each and all of these having stated their conviction that, under the principle recommended by Captain Couch, "the wreck of the mast will be instantly cleared from the ship's bottom, by the chain plate and bolt, immediately under the dead eye, either breaking the strap of the dead eye, or otherwise by its holding on, enabling the lanyards to be instantly cut away, and thus get clear of the wreck." Whereas, under the old system, the channels and chain-plates go with the masts, and make it impossible, as Captain Skipsey has so truly observed, to clear the wreck for a length of time, and in many cases we may add it has been too fatally proved to be impossible to clear it at all. Under all these weighty circumstances we cannot but repeat our best and warmest hope, that a fair and impartial trial will be given to this invaluable invention without loss of time, in order that, if it really possesses the merits which it is represented to do, it may be adopted generally, both in our Royal as well as in our Mercantile Navy.

THE burthen of taxation incurred by imprudent contracts, wherein many of us "PATRIOTS" shared, the connivance at jobs for Martello-towers, fit only for the protection of oyster-beds and sea sand, together with numerous etceteras in which others participated during past wars, as well as the glorious catalogue of Commissioners, &c., whereby it has since been perpetuated, to the benefit of later candidates for favours, has been the theme of general complaint among our countrymen; and most pathetically re-echoed by us, the better to cloak the humbug of cajoling the people. The masterly scheme of setting up the idol "Economy" as the object of worship for the Pharisaical canters of the day, was worthy the Genius of the North. The blindness of superstition has ever been proverbial; but the fascination of this idolatrous worship has blinded the whole nation, and left us, the adepts, still to revel in the benefits accruing from the very incubus on which they gaze and grumble; and we reap the profits arising from the public funds, which had their origin in the debt thus incurred by the country, and which they complain of. The forbearance of Joseph, when under temptation, forms a beautiful episode in the sacred writings; we "PATRIOTS" cannot lay claim to participate in the heroic virtue by which that individual withstood the test of taking to himself that which was truly another's, when opportunity offered; but, on the contrary, have never neglected to indulge in all opportunities of stripping the public (a wanton dame in her way) whensoever we could; and when chances no longer presented themselves for so doing, have invariably joined in the cry of economy, lending our shoulders to the clogged wheel of State in the endeavour to trundle it out of the mire, whether by the heartless attack on the defenceless on the moral highway, and filching the bread from widows and orphans of deadweight, or crippling the energies of the nation by reducing the Dock-yards and the efficient strength of the Navy, no matter; nor ceasing to disgust its Officers in withholding promotion from claimants on the score of past service, forsooth! What want we with old veterans when we behold the devotion of our young nobility in the patriotic (we love the phrase) dedication of their glittering titles on the pitch-defiling branch of our national defenders! What care we, who benefit by every change? profit by peace, and popularity by economy; whilst another war would render contracts redolent and rife! As our arsenals must be restocked, and Woolwich alone prove a mine of wealth to our fraternity, to say nothing of the numerous establishments dispersed through-out our loved country. Nay, come war! th benefactress of the worldly wise! thou Deity contractors! and save us from the only ill dread; and to avoid which we care not how sacrifice those through whom we have flourish viz. the awful sponge which so fearfully ha o'er the national debt, and which we have set example of wiping away by laying unhallow hands on the funds of charity in support of widows, contributed too by their husbands to amount of some half million of money, and app priated them to uses for which they were ne intended. Should a similar fate be visited on unnipotent Fours, and no war, our only resour will be the rail-road and many mining schem for the display of talent in fresh accumulations humbug.

IT is supposed the Vanguard will be immediately c missioned by the Hon. Captain Honyerie, who has lected Commander Currie for his second Captain; that the Talavera or Bellerophon will be comm sioned by Captain Berkeley. The Stag and Madago will also be speedily commissioned, but it is expe that the Pique will await the launching of the Inconst which will take place in May, and that a trial of q ties between these frigates will take place at latter end of the year. Preparations are ma at the different sea-ports to raise men for the R Navy, who will be received into the guard-ships as as they are entered. The majority of seamen prefer the King's service to the Merchants' employm on account of the many comparative advantages whi possesses; and we shall endeavour to detail these ad tages, which cannot be too generally made public, in next.

WE have great pleasure in announcing that the has been graciously pleased to direct the name of Ca Charles Napier to be restored to the Navy List, wit former seniority. This intimation, which was conv to the gallant officer on Friday se'nnight, was the of great rejoicing amongst his friends and supporte Portsmouth and the neighbourhood on the following It is generally reported that his Majesty has lik been pleased to express himself favourable to the re tion of Captain Sartorius, whose memorial has some time before the King in Council, and we tru shall next week have to announce that this gallant c also is placed in his former position upon the Navy

WE were no less amused than enlightened by th servations of our worthy contemporary, of the Teleg last week. He will find it best, however, to retu his usual solemn demeanour, for his attempts at g remind us of the gambols of the ass in the fable. falls foul of Yorick, who, if we mistake not, will no long in his debt; and as our correspondent appears better acquainted with the parties in opposition tha profess to be, and is well able to defend his own opin we leave that part of the subject between them. must protest, however, against the assumption whic contemporary puts forth respecting the authoritie have quoted in support of facts stated. The tru that Mr. Hawkes is not a gentleman unknown to world, or remaining in happy obscurity, but a p functionary, filling the responsible situation of M Shipwright at Pembroke Dock-Yard, where the gre number of King's ships are built, and he has se name to an official document the statements in wh is attempted to controvert, nay to falsify—upon authority? why, that of "men of unquestioned and integrity," we are told. It may be so; but should they hide their light under a bushel? If the so renowned, possibly so "illustrious," as to look upo situation of a Master Shipwright as a "happy obs unknown to the world," they will probably give weight to the opinions they profess by making know celebrity of their own names. Until we have some ter authority than anonymous assertions, we mu permitted to enjoy our own belief, and it will be h convince the world to a contrary one. We have n count of the stowage of the Ganges, but we believ Asia and the Ganges to be sister ships, and whe former was last in commission she stowed of wate tons, of ballast 229 tons; we have this statement l us, signed by an officer of the ship, and therefore v able to give an unqualified contradiction to the as that she stowed 400 tons of water. The magaz the Vanguard is amidships, which deteriorates fro stowage of tanks, neither are her tanks made to some of the 80-gun ships are (the Thunderer's stance), and we are informed that we have considerably underrated bar stowage of water. But what has all this question of Asia, Ganges, &c., to do with the matter in dispute? and for what purpose does our correspondent quote an anonymous pamphlet (unless it be to puff the productions of the writer) to prove that "in mere wages the Vanguard cost 2,800*l.* more than the Clarence?" The only answer that can be made to such an assertion is that it is false, for the official account proves it to be so; and we are further informed that the cost of building and equipping the Vanguard is more than 2,000*l.* below the estimate. Let our contemporary give us some tangible authority for the statements he puts forth, and we will be quite ready to give credit to them; but it is unreasonable to suppose that, with our own experience of the misstatements which have been palmed upon the public by a certain junta, we should attach the slightest credit to what we know to be the production of that party; and we only regret that the ungenerous and unjust reflections which have been made upon Mr. Hawkes should have been permitted to appear in so respectable a journal as the Hampshire Telegraph.

An article recently appeared in a cotemporary journal, respecting the possibility of a war breaking out between the troops of the Sublime Porte and those of Mehemet Ali. The arguments employed by the Editor to show that the Sultan ought not to attack his rebel vassal, are somewhat extraordinary. He tells us that those persons who advise the Sultan to commence hostilities against Mehemet Ali and his son, are playing the game of Russia, and that the policy of England is obvious, namely, to preserve the status quo, and the arrangement which took place after the battle of Konieh under the mediation of England; "the latter," says the writer, "has a right to interpose her good offices to prevent hostilities." It was settled after the above mentioned battle, that the two pachalics of Syria and Egypt should remain under the authority of Mehemet Ali, provided an annual tribute of fifteen millions of piastres was paid to the Porte; besides, adds the Editor, what guarantee can the Sultan give that the inhabitants of Egypt and Syria would not be as ill used under his sway, as they now are under that of Mehemet Ali. He then advises the British Government, in order to prevent a war between the Sultan and his subject, to send a fleet to the entrance of the Dardanelles and another to the port of Alexandria, to prevent a collision between the Turks and Egyptians. In answer to these heterogeneous observations, it is necessary to remark that if the Sultan deems it necessary to declare war against Mehemet Ali, he will be only doing his duty towards himself, as well as to his subjects. England cannot permit Russia to interfere in this affair, which in no way concerns it. The Turkish provinces which are forcibly retained by Mehemet Ali are at a distance from the Russian territories; and the Czar might just as well expect the Turks to meddle in the affairs of Poland, as the latter would have reason to complain if Russia interfered in any way with the Sultan as to what concerns Egypt and Syria. But why does Turkey wish to recover these provinces? for the writer in question assures us that they are useless to her, and that she would not receive a greater amount of income than she now obtains from these countries. It is admitted by all parties that the wonderful improvements made by the Sultan throughout his empire, for the benefit of his people, have occasioned a great but necessary expenditure, whereas one half and more of the taxes raised by Mehemet are applied to his private use. To say, therefore, that Turkey would not receive an increase of income by the removal of Mehemet Ali is quite absurd, and is not worthy of notice. Egypt and Syria form a portion of the Turkish empire, and appertain in all right to the Sultan quite as much as Ireland is a part of the British empire, or that Moscow and its dependencies belong to the Emperor Nicholas. Although Mehemet Ali has arrogated to himself superior power in these provinces, it is neither with the consent of the Sultan, nor with the approbation of the Inhabitants. The most bitter complaints are continually arriving at Constantinople from the inhabitants of Syria and Egypt, exhibiting proofs of the horrid tyranny under which they groan; they are dragged from their homes, and compelled, under penalty of dreadful punishment, to serve in the army of Ibrahim; their property is seized upon, and they are reduced to a state of misery which must be witnessed in order to comprehend its extent. And the Sultan is not to be permitted to expel this tyrant, who is the cause of all these misfortunes! If the Sultan possess the means, and there can be no doubt that this is the case, if England understood her own interests, it becomes his duty to listen to the petitions of his subjects, and free them from the heavy yoke of Mehemet Ali. Our contemporary wishes to know what guarantee the inhabitants of Syria and Egypt would have that they should be under a better government and should not suffer the tyranny they experience under Mehemet Ali? If the people were not convinced that the Sultan intended to appoint a suitable governor to these provinces, why should they be sending petitions every day to the Divan? And as to a guarantee none can be better than that of the Sultan himself; his noble character has never been questioned; he has effected rapid and truly beneficial reforms throughout the whole extent of his empire; he has civilised his subjects, and consequently rendered them happy, notwithstanding the almost insurmountable difficulties he has had to encounter from ignorance and prejudice; and why should he not evince the same kindness, and pursue the same system towards his subjects of Syria and Egypt, as he always exhibited to all those who live under his benign sway?

The want of a safe and commodious harbour, to which vessels might run at all times of the tide, on the dangerous coast of the British Channel, between Ilfracombe and the Land's End, has long been severely felt and deeply deplored. The number of lives and amount of property lost every year, for want of such an accommodation, is so great that, from returns which have been obtained, it appears that no less than twenty-three vessels were wrecked in one year, and in most of them all the crews perished; the causes of such great destruction of lives and property by shipwreck, on the north coast of Devon and Cornwall, have been thus well expressed in a memorial sometime ago laid on the table of the House of Commons:—"Ships coming from the Atlantic in thick weather; outward bound vessels from Bristol, Liverpool, and Glasgow; coasters going round the Land's End from the English Channel, often meet with strong westerly gales and a heavy sea, which commonly prevail in the winter season; caught within the head lands, in vain they endeavour to beat off, as it is impossible for them to weather the land in either direction, and for want of a port of safety to run to, they eventually become a wreck upon the coast, and in many cases all hands perish, whereas if a pier, or breakwater, had been formed they would have had a place of safety to run to, and thereby have saved themselves, their ships and cargoes. Large quantities of wreck are found upon this coast almost every winter, which clearly proves that many vessels founder, or are dashed to pieces on detached rocks, in trying to keep off this dangerous shore, for want of a place of safety to run to. The loss of H.M.S Weazle, when all hands perished, is a melancholy instance also of the necessity of a safe harbour upon this coast." In the same year, it appears that 24 fishing boats were also lost, with the sacrifice of 31 lives, leaving 20 widows and 61 children, destitute and dependent on charity; and within a short period not fewer than 32 vessels have been wrecked in Bideford Bay alone, namely, 1 East Indiaman, 4 West Indiaman, 7 trading vessels from various foreign ports, and 20 coasters and Irish traders, of which 11 vessels had all hands lost, and others a great part of their crews, which is exclusive of six wrecks on the Island of Lundy, where only one of the crews were saved; besides which, numerous shipwrecks have occurred almost every year on other parts of the dangerous coast between Ilfracombe and the Land's End. It has, therefore, been long an important question with the philanthropist and merchant, what are the best means that can be devised to prevent such great sacrifices of human life and valuable property? Various plans have with this view been, at different times, suggested for the construction of a breakwater and harbour; but, upon examination of the coast, it appears that no place is so favourably situated, or affords so many advantages, as Tremoutha Haven, in the parish of St. Gennys. The extent of this haven is so considerable, that a harbour may be made capable of containing more than 500 vessels of the average class usually frequenting the British Channel; here there will also be good anchorage, as there are but few rocks below low water mark, and these are so near the shore as easily to be excavated. The depth of water, at low water, is unusually great as compared with other inlets in the Bristol Channel, and varies in different parts from 11 to 28 feet, so that vessels of large burthen, and even ships of war, may ride at anchor at all times of the tide, whilst there is now no port on that coast where vessels can enter at less than half flood. The haven being situated on the north of Carnbeak Point is thereby well sheltered from the south and south-west; on the opposite side is new Penkenner Point, so that the only direction in which the haven is now exposed is from the west and north-west. To afford complete shelter and to form a commodious and safe harbour, in connexion with the harbour it is in contemplation to build a small town, and construct a railway to Launceston; it is admirably situated as a packet station, especially for Waterford and other ports in the south of Ireland, and will afford considerable advantages as a fishing place, and as a port of safety to all towns in the British Channel, and to the merchants of Bristol, Liverpool, and Glasgow. It will also be of great use in enabling foreign vessels to proceed to their destinations without the loss of time to which they are now subject, by being often compelled to put back by contrary winds to King's Road, the Mumbles, Penarth, or Milford Haven, after having nearly reached the Land's End. It has been stated by West India Captains that when the proposed harbour is constructed, vessels might work down with the tide from Bristol, and remain there in safety until an opportunity be afforded for putting to sea. They could then take advantage of the first fair wind, and get clear of the Land's End in a few hours; as now situated, they often sail from King's Road with a fair wind, but before they reach the Land's End, if the wind changes, they are obliged to put back, and thus are detained for days and weeks. Such annoyances and delays might, as just stated, be prevented by resorting to the proposed harbour, which will, doubtless, therefore, become a place of general rendezvous for vessels bound round the Land's End, and waiting for a fair wind. The number of such vessels is frequently considerable, as more than three hundred at a time have often been thus seen at the Mumbles, and many other places more distant. In consequence of the great number of vessels that frequently take shelter in the Mumbles Roads, it was in contemplation to build a breakwater into the sea, nearly a mile in length, and an Act of Parliament was obtained to authorise its construction; but in consequence of the large amount which it would have cost, it was abandoned. The proposed harbour will be a much more eligible place of refuge, and doubtless will be much frequented. In the event of a war, the proposed harbour would be of incalculable advantage in affording the means of communication between the Bristol and the English Channels, without the expense and risk of the circuitous and uncertain voyage round the Land's End, which would then be materially increased by the application of steam-power to privateers. The King's ships and revenue cruisers will also obtain a secure place of an anchorage in and near the proposed harbour, from whence they may depart as occasion might require.

We are at a loss to discover whether the opponents of Captain Symonds's evident improvements in the civil service of the Navy, are actuated rather by blind prejudice, by a want of acquaintance with the subject, or by self-interest; sometimes it has appeared to us that bigotry fetters their minds, and there are some reasons for believing that sinister motives of interest guide them alone, as they often betray themselves by at once acknowledging that the vessels of the new construction are certainly "swift sailers," thus conceding the main point of the discussion, though they retract it afterwards. The eternal babble about the new ships being wet ships we now hear no more, as they have found out that all fast sailing ships against a head sea are so, which theoretical knowledge, if they had had any, ought to have convinced them of before. The wetness of the ships is a corroboration of the evidences of their superior velocity. The Barham is the wettest ship in the Navy; but the Barham is not Captain Symonds's build, and therefore we hear nothing about her wetness from the mouths of these impartial persons, nor do they think, in her case, that shipping a few seas is a counterbalance to her valuable sailing properties, although it had overpowering weight in one of the new ships. The case becomes altered. But what is the real question? Is it not,—have the new ships superior sailing qualities or not? The advocates of the old party say no;—here is the Barham that beats the Vernon. Well, gentlemen, what else? We think that sufficient say they. Oh! you do;—then we say you take the exception for the rule. You know very well that the Vernon has beat all the Navy besides, as Captain Symonds's ships almost invariably do, and yet you think that because one out of the lot has been found to rival the Vernon, the point is decided that the new ships have not superior sailing qualities. We tell you, you are the weakest logicians we ever met with, and go and learn that all the noise you make about the Barham, and the Barham only, proves that it is the sole exception you can produce to the superior velocity of Captain Symonds's ships. But we have a word or two to relate about the trial of the Vernon and Barham, though it is not at all material to deciding the question of Captain Symonds's merits, which has been decided by a vast majority of instances already. In drawing a comparison between the merits of the respective forms of Barham and Vernon, we believe all logicians will agree that the condition of ceteris paribus ought to be observed; or, in this case, that all the elements, not depending on the peculiar shapes, should be the same. If this be done accurately we boldly assert that the Vernon's mould will be found to unite more good qualities with it than the Barham's. The chief conditions for a fair trial of ships is, that the weight of hull and quantity of sails should be the same, the ships being armed and equipped in the same manner, which is not the case in the above ships, the Vernon having 125 tons more weight in hull and 400 yards of total canvass less to spread in light winds. The augmented weight of the Vernon arises from African timber having been used exceedingly in her construction, which is the heaviest timber used in ship-building, and which the French naval engineers have declared to be unfit for ships, although it is without exception the cheapest. The Barham was built chiefly of oak by contract at Blackwall in 1811, before African timber was known, and it must be remembered, that contractors never put more material into a ship than they can avoid, in order to save expense; she has also a great deal of Honduras mahogany in her topsides, which is extremely light: the oak in her is dried up, and is nearly rotten, this being the last voyage she is fit to run; hence Vernon is 125 tons heavier than Barham; the latter ship also is only filled in between her timbers to the floor heads, while Vernon's fillings extend to the lower deck. The masts and yards of the two ships are both spars of a 74 gun ship, but the Vernon, having a deeper hold and being higher out of water, causes her to house more of her masts than Barham, consequently there is three feet more drop in the courses of Barham than in Vernon, although the latter ship, had it not been from a principle of economy, might have taken much longer masts. These observations, together with the Vernon evidently being out of trim, account for the Barham's superiority in light winds, though the Vernon would lory her in strong winds, which are the circumstances under which we have taken most of the French ships.

In our advertising columns of this day will be found the Resolutions of a Public Meeting held at Sheffield, by the constituents of Mr. Buckingham, respecting the claims of that gentleman. A powerful address has also appeared, from the pen of Mr. Elliott, the author of "Corn Law Rhymes," in the public journals, in which the following appeal in his favour is addressed to the maritime portion of the community:—"Oh, that it depended upon the Navy to decide whether Mr. Buckingham should have an independent crust in the evening of his troubled day! There is not a British seaman in any part of the world where our hammered cross is flying, who would not gladly give a month's pay to 'the sailor's friend'—the great, the eloquent, the down-trodden, yet still unconquered and victorious advocate for the abolition of impressment!"

We have well considered Mr. Buckingham's case in all its bearings, not only upon his own showing, but giving the full value it deserved to what has been advanced against him; and our conviction is, that never was an individual more unjustly or remorselessly oppressed. In this belief we are not singular, for we find it supported by such men as Lord John Russell, Lord W. Bentinck, Lord Glenelg, Sir Charles Metcalfe, the late Sir John Malcolm, and Lord Hastings, Mr. Cutlar Fergusson, Sir C. Forbes, Mr. Hume, and a host of others. Besides that, a Committee of the House of Commons, which included Sir Robert Peel, Lord Althorp, Lord John Russell, Lord Glenelg, the present Speaker, and upwards of thirty other distinguished members, have recorded the resolution, voted unanimously—"That the Committee were of opinion that compensation ought to be made to Mr. Buckingham."

Notwithstanding that his claim was advocated by more than 200 petitions, and supported by upwards of 80 votes, the Bill for compensation has been thrown out on the second reading. But let not Mr. Buckingham despair; if, as Mr. Elliott observes, two hundred independent communities have thought proper to petition in his favour, there is still public virtue left in the nation to prevent his sinking under the weight of the enormous wrongs which have been inflicted upon him, and which he appears to have borne with more than human endurance. His triumph, however, is not far off, and in the meantime we hope to find him cordially supported by such of our manufacturers who acknowledge to have had new markets opened for their wares by his exertions. For ourselves, we can assure him he shall never want the aid of our zealous exertions; and, as a true friend to the Navy, gifted with eloquence, and ever ready to advocate its interests, he may calculate on the sympathy of that honourable service, and all well-wishers to our maritime superiority.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council met on Saturday:—Present: Lords Lyndhurst and Wynford, Sir T. Erskine, and Sir H. Jenner. Their Lordships confirmed the patent of Baron Heurteloupe for an improvement in firing guns. In the case of Mr. Wells's petition for the confirmation of a patent for Purifying Sea Water, which was stated by his counsel (Mr. Rotch) to be opposed by the Directors of the Purifying Sea Water Company; their Lordships intimated the application should have been made to the Attorney-General, under the 1st section of the Patent Law Amendment Act, by which the patentee might have disclaimed that part of the patent which was not opposed. Sir F. Pollock, for the objector, produced two patents, one granted in 1806 to John Lamb, and another in 1810 to John Frederick Archbold, in which the principle claimed by Mr. Wells was clearly shown to have been invented by both those patentees. It was also shown, from the Philosophical Transactions, that the invention was published as far back as 1670. Their Lordships dismissed the petition of Mr. Wells with costs. We suppose Mr. Rotch was guided by his brief, but we believe the Directors did not think it necessary to interfere in the matter.

The French papers contain reports of the trial of a curate, named De la Collogne, accused of having killed his mistress and cut her in pieces. He acknowledges that having frequently spoken together of a suicide in common, he put his thumb in her windpipe, asking her to say if it were much pain; when he removed his thumb she fell dead. He then cut up the body and disposed of it.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, 7th March.—The Marquis of Londonderry brought forward his motion with regard to Orange Lodges. He read the letters addressed to him by the Fairman, and remarked that, on comparing them with the printed copies produced in the other House, there appeared no fewer than twenty-two inaccuracies. He commented on the injustice of attaching any importance to documents thus dealt with, and wished to know whether the Noble Viscount would think it fair that letters obtained by purchase or otherwise, from one connected with the government, should be kept back for years and thus brought forward to attack him? Since the Noble Viscount had exerted himself to put down Orangeism he wished to know if he would do the same by Radicalism? Viscount MELBOURNE had thought the Noble Marquis fully exonerated when this subject was mentioned on a former occasion. The Duke of CUMBERLAND said he had been persecuted with the utmost bitterness, as one disposed to alter the succession,—a charge which he most earnestly repelled. He had accepted the office of Imperial Grand Master of the Orange body. It was an honour he had not sought or wished for. He did not accept it until he had obtained the consent of ate Majesty, George IV., who told him that he should e glad if he took the office, because he should then now that it was in good hands. And what were the rinciples of the Orangeists? To fear God and to nour the King. The moment, however, that his Majesty discountenanced the Orange party, he felt it his uty to give up his station as its head. From the prinples of Orangeism, however, he should never deport. he motion, which was merely one of form, was agreed .

TUESDAY, 8th March.—Lord MELBOURNE, in reply a question from the Marquis of Londonderry, on the bject of the twenty-seven Carlist prisoners, whose case s been frequently mentioned, stated them to have been st removed to Porto Rico, to place them in safety.

THURSDAY, 10th March.—Lord LYNDHURST presented petition from persons confined for debt in London and iddlesex, praying relief.—Lord MELBOURNE laid upon eir Lordships' table the second report from his Majesty's ommissioners appointed to consider the state of the stablished Church in England and Wales, with refernce to ecclesiastical duties and revenues. It recomends very important reforms. The Archbishop of ANTERBURY expressed great satisfaction that such a easure had been taken in hand by Ministers.—The arquis of LONDONDERRY gave notice of a motion for onday, on the subject of the Spanish correspondence tely laid before their Lordships.

FRIDAY, 11th March.—The Slaves Compensation mendment Bill was read a third, and a Bill for improvg the administration of justice in the West Indies a econd time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 7th March.—Lord F. EGERTON moved that he committee on the Bill for the regulation of Municial Corporations in Ireland be empowered to make proisions for the abolition of such corporations, and such rrangements as may be necessary, on their abolition, for curing the efficient and impartial administration, and e peace and good government of cities and towns in reland. Mr. LEFROY seconded the motion. Lord MORTH defended the Bill. Mr. Serjeant JACKSON opposed . Mr. Serjeant WOULFE thought great benefit would derived from the Bill. Sir H. HARDINGE said such a easure was not suited to Ireland in its present state. ord HOWICK denied that it had been shown that there as anything in the Bill that rendered it inapplicable to reland. The debate was then adjourned.

TUESDAY, 8th March.—The adjourned debate was reumed on the Irish Municipal Reform Bill. Mr. W. S. 'BRIEN opposed the amendment of Lord F. Egerton, nd supported the Bill. Mr. R. PLUNKET could not apeve of the Bill. Mr. GALLY KNIGHT thought it his uty to oppose the Bill. Mr. W. H. ORO gave his support to the measure. Mr. J. O'CONNELL supported the ill. Mr. E. TENNANT supported the amendment. r. BARRON and Mr. CLAY supported the Bill. Sir AMES GRAHAM opposed it. Mr. O'CONNELL called the passing of this Bill as an act of late justice to Ireand. Lord STANLEY opposed the Bill, and called upon inisters to do justice to every party in Ireland, but to the slave of none. Lord J. RUSSELL earnestly essed the measure under consideration on the House its adoption. Sir R. PEEL said, rather than encounter evils which he thought likely to grow out of the proand change of systems, he would prefer the lesser risk rejecting the measure altogether. On a division the mbers were—for the amendment, 243; against it, 307. he second reading was therefore carried by a majority 64.

THURSDAY, 10th March.—Mr. G. F. YOUNG called attention of the House to the conduct of one of its embers (Mr. Warburton), and described him to have ered the report of evidence given before a committee. r. WARBURTON gave an explanation of what he had ne, and the subject dropped.—Lord J. RUSSELL laid report of the Ecclesiastical Commission before the ouse. Mr. GOULBURN said, the measure contemated would be essentially beneficial to both the Church d the country.—Mr. S. CRAWFORD moved for leave to ing in a Bill to amend the law between landlord and nant in Ireland. Leave given.

FRIDAY, 11th March.—Mr. RIDLEY COLBORNE brought the report of the Carlow committee. He stated the nanimous opinion of the committee was, that Mr. Connell acted at the express desire of Mr. Raphael, d was only the medium of communication between Mr. igors and others in Carlow, and Mr. Raphael. The oney was paid to Mr. O'Connell's general account at s banker's in London, but was repaid, some part of it bills, but the discount allowed, and therefore the comittee were of opinion that no charge of a pecuniary chaacter can be attached to Mr. O'Connell.—Lord Howick rought forward the Army Estimates (see our last). Mr. HUME moved a reduction of 5,000 men. The mendment was lost by a majority of 93. Sir W. OLESWORTH moved that "The Foot Guards be placed on the same footing as the troops of the line." He thought the privileges enjoyed by the Guards extremely objectionable, on account of the jealousy which they created in the marching regiments. Mr. HUME seconded the amendment, which was also supported by Maj. BEAUCLERK. Sir H. VERNEY and Lord G. LENNOX denied that the jealousy supposed to be created in the regiments of the line really existed. Lord HOWICK resisted the amendment. Mr. LEADER spoke in favour of it. Sir H. HARDINGE bore testimony to the high character of the Guards, as did Capt. Hope, Mr. T. Duncombe, General Dalbiac, and Col. Peel, and opposed the amendment. Mr. C. BULLER considered that the course pursued with respect to the Guards was a system of jobbing. Mr. EWART thought the Guards enjoyed unreasonable privileges. On a division, the numbers were—for the amendment, 46; against it, 217.—The Stafford Borough Disfranchisement Bill was read a third time, and passed.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The National contains a very angry article, founded on the speech of Mr. Wood in proposing the navy estimates to the House of Commons; and comments upon his alleging as an excuse for an increase in the English navy the fact of France having 12 sail of the line in a state of active service. The naval supremacy of England was never acknowledged without protestation, even in the weakest and most disgraceful times of the monarchy, not even by the Cardinal Dubois, or under Louis XVI. The naval preponderance of England was the consequence of shameful peaces forced upon France after long wars, in which the infernal genius of England owed its superiority over French arms entirely to the power of its own free institutions. At the peace of 1783, the naval officers of France had no inferiority to acknowledge to the most celebrated of English commanders; and if England has since then regained her superiority, it is because she bravely waited until all Europe was opposed to and attacking this country. What France demands is no tyranny—neither the naval rule of England, nor the military one of Russia. It is inconceivable, therefore, that she cannot now have 12 sail of the line in active service without the permission of England.

The Ministry of M. Thiers appears to have surmounted its difficulties in the Chamber. The journals assume a milder tone with respect to the course adopted by the Northern Powers towards Cracuw, and it is inferred that the French Government has declared its approval of it. The question of French intervention in the affairs of Spain has been revived, and it is asserted that, in consequence of the success of the Carlists in the Basque provinces, France is ready to dispatch an army into Spain.

SPAIN.—Don Carlos has not ordered the six English prisoners to be shot. They are now actually prisoners in the depot, and are designed to be exchanged, or what is more probable, they will be permitted to enter the Carlist army. Many reports are spread of the approaching fall of M. Mendizabal; it is affirmed that he has lost his credit with the Queen; that she has a personal dislike to him, and that she lately refused to sign a decree permitting the importation of foreign manufactured cotton, &c. It is also said that M. Mendizabal has lost the support of M. de Rayneval, and that the English Ambassador begins to be less cordial with him.—Courier Francois.

The Swedish frigate Atalanto arrived on the 27th ultimo, at Barcelona, with 180 officers and 375 men of the Chasseurs of Oporto. On the same day 200 recruits from Alicant arrived, as did also English frigate, with a large supply of gunpowder.

The inhuman murder of the mother of the Carlist Chief Cabrera, by command of the monster Mina, has led to brutal reprisals. Cabrera, after quoting the order of Mina for the butchery of his aged parent and sisters, decrees—"1. All persons arrested shall be shot. 2. In just satisfaction for the murder of my innocent mother, shall be immediately shot the lady of Col. Don Manuel Fonteleras, Commandant of Chelva, who has been detained until now as a hostage against the fury of the revolutionary party; and three more, Cuita Tos, Marieoa Guardia, and Francisca Urquesa, until the number of thirty are fulfilled, in order to expiate the fate which the worthiest and best of mothers has experienced. 3. In future, the murder of each victim shall be avenged by that of 20 families." Mina and Cabrera are equally sanguinary; but the one is impelled by revenge, the other by an innate thirst for blood. Half the brutal murders which have disgraced Spain since the commencement of the civil war have resulted from the examples of sanguinary cruelty set by Mina and his subordinates. No cause can prosper with which such a monster is in connection.

The latest letters from Bayonne state that Espartero had entered Bilboa with 20 battalions on the 3d inst. Evans, with the British Legion, followed him, and an engagement with the Carlists was daily expected. The British Legion is in a wretched condition, and cannot exceed 3000. The Carlists have been in several points successful; and great excitement has been occasioned by a victory over the Queen's forces, in which 600 men were surprised and 150 captured. This disaster will affect the safety of the valleys, which have lately declared for the Queen.

CANADA.—The last arrivals bring accounts to the 10th Feb. The new Governor of the Upper Province Sir F. Head, had met the legislature and laid before it his Majesty's answers to the addresses and representations of the last session. Referring to these answers for the difficult and important duties about to devolve upon the legislature, Sir Francis concludes a very brief speech by saying, "As for myself, I have nothing either to promise or to profess: but I trust I shall not call in vain upon you to give me that loyal, constitutional, unbiassed, and fearless assistance which your King expects, and which the rising interests of your country require."

Theatres.

KING'S THEATRE.—The Italian opera season commenced on Saturday evening with Bellini's opera of Il Straniero, and a new ballet entitled Le Rossignol, and considering the many great difficulties with which the enterprising manager has had to contend, we are bound to say that he began the season well. Our readers are aware that until the close of the Italian opera in Paris, it is impossible for Laporte to obtain the services of the great vocalists whom he has engaged. The public have every reason to be satisfied that all Laporte promises will be performed: he has kept his word (for the last three seasons) with the subscribers, although they have not kept faith with him. The result has been, that instead of Laporte being a gainer of several thousands by the last three grand seasons, the profits have been the harvest of the booksellers, to whom, per necessitas, he was obliged to apply for that aid, which the subscribers and patrons of the opera ought to have afforded him for, in truth, they never had a manager who catered so liberally for their amusement. We hope, however, that during the ensuing season the harvest will be reaped by the spirited manager, and that the system of UNDERLETTING boxes to booksellers will be totally abolished. The nobility and gentry are bound to give Laporte their patronage, if it is their desire to have a well conducted Italian opera in this metropolis. In the course of three weeks the King's Theatre will be able to boast of an operatic company not to be excelled in Europe, and every week will bring an addition to the corps de ballet. La Straniera is certainly not one of Bellini's happiest efforts. The music, although it possesses but few pretensions to great originality or force, has still many passages that are agreeable, and one or two separate pieces that are highly gratifying. The best thing in the opera is the trio in the 1st act, commencing Cedo, cedo; a te m' involo, which displayed much science, and was not deficient in melody and feeling. The finale to the opera is also a clever, elaborate, and effective composition. This opera introduced to the London stage Signora Colleoni Corti, whose name we do not recollect to have heard on the continent. The part chosen by the debutante is one of the most difficult in the entire range of Italian opera, and a part in which nearly every prima donna has failed. Signora Corti's voice is what is termed a high soprano, a quality of voice much prized in Italy, and justly so, when that quality is of the first-rate order. In our humble judgment Corti does not possess the necessary qualifications for a prima at the King's Theatre; her voice is deficient in roundness and modulation, and though powerful, wants both clearness and sweetness. It generally happens that voices of such high quality are a little harsh, and seem occasionally to be produced by great effort. Her voice, however, is not deficient in volume and flexibility, but it did not appear to us that she was capable of sustaining her notes with any certainty or effect. We are bound to add that her performance of the part of Alaida was far more perfect than that of Grisi's sister, or Madlle. Tosi. Signora Corti deserves praise for the style in which she sustained her part in the trio mentioned above; and also for the aria which terminates the first act, which was her most successful effort. Signor Cartagenova sustained the part of Vokleburg, his first appearance at the King's Theatre, and put forth many claims to our approbation. His voice is a baritone of good quality, and considerable flexibility. He sings with energy and feeling, and will with careful study soon reach a high rank in his profession. The Arturo was Signor Winter, who is already known to the public; there was little of that brilliancy in his performance which is expected from the first tenor singer in the Italian opera. To maintain this rank, we think his abilities are altogether unequal. He will be found an agreeable second to Rubini or Ivanoff. At the termination of the opera, Corti, Cartaenova, and Winter were called for to receive the applause of the audience. "God save the King," was attempted at the end of the opera. The new ballet of Le Rossignol followed and proved a hit. A Madlle. St. Romain, from Berlin and Paris, made her debut as the heroine, and obtained showers of applause from a delighted audience. The new danseuse is a very delightful artiste, and the finished style with which she executed several novel steps, proved that for neatness and precision, she is not excelled except by the Queen of Dancers. St. Romain's style is not unlike that of Fanny Elsler. Varin was also much applauded and deservedly so. Mons. Coustou, the new dancer, is indeed a formidable rival to little Perrot. Coustou dances with considerable grace and finish, but is not quite so active as Perrot; his reception was highly flattering. The ballet gave great satisfaction, and the house was extremely well filled in every part.

ST. JAMES'S.—The "Lenten" entertainments at this theatre have been honoured by fashionable and crowded audiences. "Variety is said to be charming," and in this instance must prove particularly cheering to the manager, for his last variety has been the means of developing no ordinary degree of mimic talent. Barnett's "Etchings and Sketchings" are truly a treat. The matériel, mentally and physically, is well worked up, and instead of sketches, or "Pencillings on the Way," the artist produces the most perfect portraits. In the "Court of King's Bench" two characters are introduced to the audience—likenesses to the very life, "and no mistake." Indeed, we consider Mons. Jacques the only man we know of now living, who can supply the place of the late inimitable Mathews; for Barnett, like his lamented predecessor, appears to possess the gifted faculty which enables him to imitate the mind, as well as the manner, of the party personified.

ENGLISH OPERA.—This theatre will open for the season on Easter Monday, the performers having taken it on their own account for one season. We are glad to find that Mr. Peake will be the acting manager. Mr. Salter, we understand, is to be the stage manager for the season.

Literary Notices.

The Most Striking Events of a Twelvemonth's Campaign with Zumalacarregui, in Navarre and the Basque Provinces. By C. F. HENNINGEN, Captain of Lancers in the service of Don Carlos. 2 vols. John Murray.

THIS is one of the most heart-stirring, eventful, and interesting military narratives that for a long time has come before the public. Capt. Henningen gives a complete memoir of the insurrection in the north of Spain, and and details its progress with many cold-blooded atrocities, till the death of the enterprising chieftain Zumalacarregui, The Captain was on the staff of that skilful General, and had the best opportunities of obtaining correct information of passing events; his work, therefore, is the only one of any authority yet before the public, and its details will greatly add to the interest that is taken in the Spanish contest. For the present we shall confine ourselves to the gallant officer's sketch of his most distinguished hero Zumalacarregui.

"He was a man in the prime of life, being forty-five years of age, and of middle stature; but, on account of the great width of his shoulders, his bull-neck, and habitual stoop, the effect of which was much increased by the zamarra, or fur jacket, which he always wore, he appeared rather short than otherwise. His profile had something of the antique—the lower part of the face being formed like that of Napoleon, and the whole cast of his features bearing some resemblance to the ancient basso-relievos which are given as as the likeness of Hannibal. His hair was dark, without being black; his moustaches joined his whiskers; and his dark grey eyes, overshadowed by strong eyebrows, had a singular rapidity and intensity in their gaze—generally they had a stern and thoughtful expression; but when he looked about him, his glance seemed in an instant to travel over the whole line of a battalion, making in that short interval the minutest remarks. He was always abrupt and brief in his conversation, and habitually stern and severe in his manners; but this might have been the effect of the hardships and perils through which he had passed. A civil war, like that which for two years has desolated the north of Spain—such scenes of strife and massacre—the death of his partisans, and the imperious necessity of reprisals on compatriots, and often on friends, whom the virulence of party opinion armed in mortal contest, exposure to unnumerable hardships and privations, the summer's sun, and winter's wind; the sufferings and peril in which his followers were constantly placed, and his awful responsibility, may have been enough to change considerably, even in a brief space of time, Zumalacarregui's nature. It was seldom that he gave way to anything like mirth; he seldomest indulged in a smile when he led his staff where the shot were falling thick and fast around them, and he fancied he detected in the countenances of some of his followers that they thought the whistling of the bullets an unpleasant tune. To him fear seemed a thing unknown; and although, in the commencement, a bold and daring conduct was necessary to gain the affections and confidence of rude partisans, he outstripped the bounds of prudence, and committed such innumerable acts of rashness, that when he received his mortal wound, every body said it was only by a miracle he had escaped so long. He has been known to charge at the head of a troop of horse, or spurring the white charger which he rode in a sudden burst of passion, to rally himself the skirmishers and lead them forward. His horse had become such a mark for the enemy, that all those of a similar colour, mounted by officers of his staff, were shot in the course of three months, although his own always escaped. It is true, that on several occasions he chose his moment well, and decided more than one victory, and saved his little army in more than one retreat, by what seemed an act of hare-brained bravery.

"The General's uncommon features, his fur jacket and cap, resembling at a distance a red turban, gave more the idea of an eastern chief than an European general. One might have imagined Scanderbeg at the head of his Albanian army; and certes his semi-barbarous followers could have been no wilder in dress and appearance than the Carlists in the early part of the campaign. To me Zumalacarregui, in character and feeling, as well as in costume and manner, seemed always like the hero of a by-gone century. He was of a period remote from our own, when the virtues and vices of society were marked in a stronger mould;—partaking of all the stern enthusiasm of the middle ages, a something uncommon and energetic in his features seemed to indicate a man formed for great and difficult enterprises. You might have fancied him one of those chiefs who led the populations of Europe to war in the Holy Land; he possessed the same chivalrous courage, unflinching sternness, and disinterested fervour—disinterested so far as mere earthly things were concerned—which animated those of the religious zealots who went because they found it easier to win heaven with their blood on a battle-field, than through penitence and prayer. . . . .

"Like most men of an ardent temperament, he had the defect of being quick and hasty; and in his passion was often guilty of acts which, although nothing after all but a severe and unsparing justice, in cold blood he would have been incapable of. More than one officer in the Carlist army owes his rank to having been on some occasion reprimanded by him in terms which, when his anger was over, he knew to be too severe. I believe him—as far as it is possible to judge of a man's character by a year's observation and acquaintance—to have been free from any ambition of personal aggrandisement. Wrapped entirely in the cause he had adopted, he thought and dreamed but of that; and I believe that, from the hour when he undertook to repair the broken fortunes of the Royalist party, to that when he expired in the midst of his triumphs, his only motive was to witness its success. The wish of augmenting his military glory—the bubble reputation, which cheers the soldier on his perilous career—perhaps added a fresh incentive. The contempt of gold which he always evinced formed a striking feature of his character. When he died, after paying the army for two years, and raising contributions in three provinces, he left to be divided amongst his household all that he possessed in the world—about 48*l.* sterling, and four or five horses. Even his barber, the waggish Robledo, was richer than the Carlist Commander-in-Chief. Any sum he possessed in the morning was sure by the evening to be dissipated; he gave it away, sailor-fashion, by handsful to his soldiers, or the first beggars who importuned him, and who, well aware of his foible, never failed to beset him. He used, quite out of temper, to exclaim, 'Here—take—take! when you have got all I have, you will leave me in peace.' Of an evening, his subalterns were obliged to pay for him in the coffee-house. 'You give more,' observed his wife, 'than is reasonable, or than you can afford.' 'We are more like God when we give,' was his answer. . . . .

"Stern and severe as he was, and unsparing of fatigue for his men—leading them long marches with a rapidity which it seemed the human frame could scarcely have supported—he was the soldiers' idol. He obtained the sobriquet of El Tio Tomas, 'Uncle Thomas,' or the French called Napoleon Le petit Caporal; and he was better known under the appellation of El Tio, than by his Gothic name Zumalacarregui. His skill and valour, the peril from which he so often saved his soldiers, and the successes to which he led the way, seem scarcely sufficient to account for their wild attachment to the man they loved and feared above all others—an attachment which must be felt to be understood. Without garments, without pay, without provisions, his army would have followed him barefoot all over the world, or have perished by the way. The same degree of enthusiasm was entertained towards him as was displayed in the French army for l'Empereur, and this extended to the populations of the revolted provinces, excepting that it was difficult to say whether love or awe predominated—with the peasant they were certainly strangely blended. I joined the Carlists and Zumalacarregui when he had nothing but the reputation of a guerilla chief who had skilfully baffled the pursuit of the Queen's troops, and struck a few daring blows, but whom, from the description then given on the other side of the Pyrenees, I expected to find ferocious and ignorant. I remember at first my total inability to comprehend enthusiastic attachment, independent of private friendship, to any individual; but I ended by sharing entirely the feelings of the soldiers; and so long as he lived, in success or adversity, I would have followed him to the end, even if I had experienced no acts of kindness at his hands. It was of course for Don Carlos I had come to fight. I had been rather prejudiced against than in favour of his general, yet, in the brief space of a few months, if Don Carlos had abandoned his own cause, I should have remained to follow Zumalacarregui."

The Assembled Commons, 1836. E. Churton.

A NEAT pocket volume, which gives a brief, and, as far as we have been able to examine, just account of each Member of Parliament. These manuals are valuable auxiliaries to political history.

The Pacha of Many Tales. By the Author of "Peter Simple." 3 Vols. Saunders and Otley.

WE are always gratified with the writings of Captain Marryat; his sea tales are unrivalled. In all there is a lively humour and merry conceit that render them delightful companions, and place him before nearly every novelist of the day; indeed, from whatever he writes we gather the information of a man of literature, as well as one who constantly mixes in good society. The tales before us are admirable, and they are without the drawbacks of fashionable novels:—we may put them into the hands of wife, sister, or friend without offending modesty, but with the certainty that they will instruct as well as entertain.

Essays on a Few Subjects of General Interest, to which are added Scraps and Recollections. E. Churton.

WITHOUT any pretence there is considerable talent throughout this volume; the essayist, "a man of the world," treats on "matters occurring to the average of men in their progress through life," fox-hunting, society and the social system, University education, the present position of the English aristocracy, the amusements of the people, and the love of pleasure; he also gives us scraps and recollections, which are well worth reading. We have space but for a brief fragment:—

"Our peaceful English village, with its grey spire rising amid the trees, and the blue smoke curling upwards from its thatched cottages, how often has it been quoted as a fit emblem of a happy life. And many a passing pilgrim has framed the wish, that here might his lot be cast. Redolent it is true, of peace and quiet, and the stilled passions is the whole scene, and therefore to our fancy has it always seemed uncongenial to mankind with all its active sympathies. Yet how exquisitely adapted are such scenes for the uprearing of tender infancy and the last repose of age. Here might one who has battled with the world's tempest and found himself but a wreck at last, close the troubled scene. Here might some patriot, whose visions of liberty and social amelioration, have ended but in disappointment, console himself amid the beauties of nature, and the charities of a secluded circle. Here too can we imagine one of those images of female loveliness, which we meet, alas how changed! in the world, to have passed her childhood of innocence and peace, budding in progressive bloom, in unison with the trellised woodbine and the clustering rose. And here can we picture to ourselves such a one (snatched timely from a far heavier fate) returning, after a brief and erring but passionate career, to breathe her last. Here she may find that repose which the world denies; and here amid the scenes so dear to her heart, where her first dreams of innocence and peace were framed, and her aspirations after joy and love had budded forth, ere guilt or sorrow had planted their furrows, or the blush of shame had dried the tear that remorse had drawn, her last sigh may be breathed. The commencement and close of her life, amid the same tranquil scene,—but what a gulf of sorrow and passion lay between! The morn and eve seem to blend into unison in the stillness of their calm; intermediate there has been the heat, and glare, and strife, and alternate storm and sunshine of the day!"

Last Moments of Cobbett.—On the 18th June, 1835, while he was seated in an easy chair, surrounded by his family, friends, and servants, Mrs. Cobbett perceived that he was becoming very weak, and that his eyes, which were remarkable for their sparkling brilliancy, had become suddenly dim. She applied some honey and vinegar to his lips. "Ah!" said he, and his eyes then closed. "that is very good—I feel better." "Do you know who gave it to you?" said one of those near him. "Was it not you?" said he. "No," replied the other, "it was Mrs. Cobbett." He then raised Mrs. Cobbett's hand to his lips, to which he pressed it until he expired.

Athenæum.—This club consists of twelve hundred members, amongst whom are to be reckoned a large proportion of the most eminent persons in the land, in every line—civil, military, and ecclesiastical, peers spiritual and temporal (ninety-five noblemen and twelve bishops commoners, men of the learned professions, those connected with science, the arts, and commerce, in all its principal branches, as well as the distinguished who do not belong to any particular class. Many of these are to be met with every day living with the same freedom as in their own houses. For six guineas a-year every member has the command of an excellent library, with maps, the daily papers, English and foreign, the principal periodicals, and every material for writing, with attendance for whatever is wanted. The building is a sort of palace, and is kept with the same exactness and comfort as a private dwelling. Every member is a master without any of the trouble of a master. He can come when he pleases and stay away as long as he pleases, without anything going wrong. He has the command of regular servants without having to pay or to manage them. He can have whatever meal or refreshment he wants, at all hours, and served up with the cleanliness and comfort of his own house. He orders just what he pleases, having no interest to think of but his own. In short, it is impossible to suppose a greater degree of liberty in living. From an account I have of the expenses at the Athenæum, in the year 1832, it appears that 17,923 dinners cost, on an average, 2*s.* 9¾*d.* each, and that the average quantity of wine for each person was a small fraction more than half a pint.—Walker's Original.

LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK AND THE INDIAN ARMY.

Whatever may have been the danger to be apprehended on the north-western frontier five years ago, certain it is that circumstances have not contributed to diminish its extent, and the interference, as disgraceful as it was anti-British, by which Scindia's family were ruined (and Mr. Cavendish aggrandized), the re-acting on a small scale the same game at Lodore, and the capricious support afforded to Shota Ram, have raised up a feeling in the protected states peculiarly inimical to the British Government.

In the revision of the Canteen Regulations, we find the only measure for which his Lordship is justly entitled to praise—the placing the management of the funds under a Committee, and removing from Quarter Masters the controlling powers they previously exercised in the purchase of wines, spirits, and beer, has been felt by the European soldiers, as a relief. Far be it from us to say, that these purchases were made without a due regard to economy and the wishes of the soldiers, but it is natural that the men should feel better satisfied at having the disposal of their own funds; besides if a profit was not made out of purveying, why was any anxiety shown to retain what could only have been at best a disagreeable office? It is only to be regretted that his Lordship did not carry the principle into effect! In the conduct of regimental bazaars attached to European corps, which are still susceptible of great improvement, and imperatively require an active supervision.

The baneful influence exercised by Lord William Bentinck over the Bengal Army, was more felt in its consequences, than obvious from any peculiar orders that he issued; nor was his character as Commander-in-Chief fully developed until after the charter atrocity was perpetrated. Some few arbitrary indications had raised the suspicions of those who look below the surface, as to the real principles of the great liberal, but the military in general hailed with pleasure the nomination of his Excellency to the command of the Army, and anticipated that the horrible system of Oriental adjudication was to give place to an equitable adjustment, by hearing both sides of the case, while many looked forward to the glorious privilege of appeal to the new chartered Governor-General of all India. Woefully were they disappointed. Not a few instances are on record of the positive injustice perpetrated by his Lordship's refusal to hear the defence of the accused; and a striking illustration of benefit (!) derived from an appeal, may be found in the case of Capt. Mackinlay, who was deprived of his appointment by Lord William Bentinck, Governor General in Council, for disrespect to Lord William Bentinck, Commander-in-Chief (virtually for not giving up a contract, for the benefit of a broken down roué, whom his Lordship wished to provide for); yet this was the just, beneficial, and philanthropic regenerator of British India, who while promulgating in clap trap ukases, that stripes should no longer be inflicted on the British sepoy, and that the Native Indian Army is open to all castes, from the Brahmin to the Saug Melee, was depriving the European Officers of the right to be heard in their defence, and in reality placing them beyond the pale of military law.

We should designate as oppressive and tyrannical, the reckless disregard of the customs and usages of this Army, as evinced in the summary punishment which marked the departure of the liberal despot, did we not feel convinced that illness of a distressing nature had impaired his faculties and affected his judgment; but what excuse can be offered by the military advisers of the unhappy and afflicted man, who perceiving his incapacity to form correct conclusions—usurped the functions of Commander-in-Chief, and instead of soothing the morbid excitement of a disappointed political visionary, urged him on to commit injustice to old officers?

Many of his Lordship's faults may be traced to that blind reliance on his own perception of character, of which he was ever misjudging, and from that failing, he was constantly a tool in the hands of a set of irresponsible advisers (to say nothing of his bad selection of the responsible ones), specious pretenders, and gross flatterers. His Lordship courted the reputation of a philanthropist, and obtained that of Molière's George Dandin—he aimed at the renown of a regenerator, and succeeded in gaining the ephemeral notoriety of a Papa Pry.

The misjudging political speculator would have theorised with the Army, as he did with the country at large, had his heated imagination (perpetually haunted with chimeras of a universal language, a universal law, and a universal religion) afforded him spare time to introduce his "scheme of a system;"—as it was, the Bengal Army became a mere auxiliary to his Lordship's love of petty intrigue, his views on the gullability of the English public, and a rich source from whence the profligate expenditure of the Court of Directors, and the salaries of the higher functionaries of the state might be saved.

In every sense of the word, Lord William Bentinck was from first to last an Army oppressor, nor can any one act be produced by which he has benefitted the Native Army, while his gross misrepresentation of the feelings and spirit of that Army at the time of inquiry (before the charter was granted), gave a colouring to the calumny set forth by Sir Edward Paget. In health or sickness his Lordship showed himself the enemy of the European officers of the service, and while putting the country to an enormous expense on account of his own useless peregrinations through the country, sheltering himself at Simlah or the Neelghurries from the bad effects of climate, and promulgating orders not less uncalled for than unjust, not less oppressive than despotic; we find him depriving his fellow countrymen (we cannot say fellow soldiers) of those few relaxations they were permitted to enjoy; of the portion of their pittance, which enabled them to provide against sickness or unforeseen distress; of their character for fidelity to their employers, on which their honour as soldiers so materially rested, and of that esteem and respect paid to them as men of education, and gentlemen. While amassing in his own coffers a sum equal to one hundred thousand pounds sterling, he has deprived those on whom the attainment, preservation, and defence of the empire has been dependant, of the hope of a return to their native land;—beggared in health and in purse, but, in spite of his Lordship—preserving unblemished their reputation—he has left them to mourn the day Lord William Bentinck arrived in India; he has left them poor even in hate—but still they hate him.—Meerut Universal Magazine.

One of the greatest impositions practised at the present day by shopkeepers, not only in London, but in every city and town in the United Kingdom, is that of forging the property of another, and imposing on the public the forged article with all the assurance of innocence. We allude in the present instance to ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL. Many years ago Mr. Rowland discovered this useful and elegant article, which from its real merits alone gained an immense popularity; this no sooner became the case than it was, and is now, imitated by many shopkeepers. We should have imagined that an English tradesmen, who boasts of confidence and integrity unknown in any other part of the world, would not have stooped to the meanness of so base and paltry an action. Nevertheless, we know for certain that such is the case, and we advise all patrons of ROWLAND'S celebrated articles, to purchase only of respectable vendors.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 124, Oxford-street, near Hanles-street, established in 1830, than through the adoption of any other method whatever; as Domestics, with good characters, are in waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock.

Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for Hiring Servants; but if the Servant possess a good character, it certainly is perfect nonsense to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a situation.

N.B. It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

AS the following letter received from Major General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse testifies:—

BRANDY.—The injurious properties and deleterious effects of all the articles manufactured in this country under the title of Brandy, previously to the production of the PATENT BRANDY, were as notorious as the consequent prejudices were well-founded. It is equally certain that the high reputation which the Patent Brandy has, during the last seven years, acquired and maintained, has been made available for extending the sale of those inferior products, by adopting to them specious and laudatory titles, to which they have not the smallest claim. Nor (although numerous and costly experiments have been prosecuted for that object) has any Spirit been produced, except the Patent Brandy, in favour of the purity and wholesome properties of which could testimonials, chemical or medical, be obtained.

J. T. BETTS and CO., the Patentees, beg to draw public attention in a particular manner to their address; their only establishment being the Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield-Bars, leading to St. John Street, where the Patent Brandy may be had in quantities not less than Two Gallons, at Eighteen Shillings per Imperial Gallon.

Consulted till one daily at his residence, No. 16, Percy-street, Bedford-square.—Persons afflicted may obtain a prospectus gratis, containing a few out of the many cures effected by him on applying to Mr. Cradock, Chemist and Druggist, No. 6, Store-street, Bedford-square.

CARVING AND GILDING IN ALL ITS BRANCHES.

In this department will be found a very elegant and extensive variety of Chimney and Pier Glass Frames, Cornices for Windows, Ornamental Tables and Furniture, and richly mounted Frames in various sizes for Portraits, Paintings, &c. Paintings and Prints mounted, framed, and re-gilt.

PAPER HANGING, AND INTERIOR DECORATIONS

in all its branches, from the most simple to the first style of elegance. A rich variety of new patterns on show.

IN THE UPHOLSTERY ARRANGEMENT,

the greatest attention is paid to unite elegance with economy in character for the drawing-room, boudoir, dining room, library, and bed-chambers, from the most quiet to the most costly styles, in the various articles of chintzes, mureens, damasks, silks, &c. A great variety of the most splendid and novel styles are constantly on view of those qualities which can alone insure permanent satisfaction; the extreme disparity in prices in these articles mainly arises from the inferiority of the fabric.

CABINET, CHAIR, AND SOFA WORK

manufactured of the most seasoned materials. In the finish of Chairs, Sofas, &c., much depends on the quality of the materials used, and the workmanship. It may not be unworthy of remark that a similar effect may be produced at a saving of nearly one half, but which in the wear must eventually prove a serious disappointment to the purchaser. This applies also to the manufacture of Cabinet Goods, which, from being made of unseasoned materials and unsound work (that cannot be detected by the casual observer), can never be of that service and durability so essential. H. L. C. begs to add that he manufactures them on his own premises, and has always on hand a large stock of well-seasoned materials, which enables him to produce work at the lowest possible rate and of a superior quality.

STEAM and SAILING VESSELS promptly fitted up with CABIN FURNITURE and PASSENGERS' REQUISITES.

SOLID and PORTABLE Furniture, Bedding, Musquito Hangings, &c., for Foreign Climates. Families going abroad will receive every information respecting the articles best adapted for their particular destinations.

Merchants, Captains, and Dealers, supplied with the utmost despatch, on the most liberal terms.

CARPETING

of the fabric especially made for the first Upholstery Houses, viz. Brussels, Kidderminster, and Venetian; also a few of the much-admired velvet pile carpets, hearth rugs, druggets, baize, floor-cloth, &c.

BEDDING, BLANKETS, &c.

well-seasoned, real Dantzic feathers, also equally prepared light downy feathers for second and third rate beds, elastic spring, hair, and wool mattresses; real Witney, fine Bath and York blankets; Marseilles quilts and counterpanes. In the article of bedding, blankets, &c., so essentially important to all, H. L. C. is determined that no trader shall supply them on better terms.

FUNERALS FURNISHED,

and conducted with the greatest propriety, and with every consistent regard to economy.

Families in the country may command the most approved taste by being waited on at home with patterns; and designs made on the spot, calculated to harmonize with the plans, proportions, and decorations of the rooms; and their orders delivered and fixed on terms forming a very small addition to the first cost, by the system adopted by this concern.

With this short enumeration of the leading articles of his trade, and the very favourable terms on which he undertakes to supply them, HENRY L. COOPER appeals to all classes for a continuation of that flattering preference hitherto afforded his house, 98, Bishopsgate-street Within; Western Branch, 57, Conduit-street, nine doors from Regent-street.

H. L. C. begs respectfully to solicit particular attention to the Address. Also, that any article will be exchanged should a fair objection arise, thus securing the Public from imposition.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills; they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headache, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions on the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and the operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is the convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of an peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler; E. Edwards; F. Newberry and Sons, W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. (late B. Godfrey Windus), 61, Bishopsgate-street Within, London; and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN MEDICINE.—LEFAY'S GRAND POMMADE.—This extraordinary preparation cures, by two or three external applications, Tic Douloureux, Gout, Rheumatism, Lumbago, and Sciatica, and all painful Affections of the Nerves, giving instantaneous relief in the most severe paroxysms. It has been extensively employed in the public and private practice of several French physicians, who have declared that in no case have they found it to fail in curing those formidable and tormenting maladies. Since its introduction into England, it has in every case fully maintained the high character its unrivalled success has obtained for it on the Continent. Patients, who had for years drawn on a miserable existence, and many who had lost the use of their limbs by rheumatism and paralysis, have, by a few applications, been restored to health, strength, and comfort, after electricity, galvanism, blistering, veratrine, morphia, colchicum, and all the usual remedies had been found useless. Its astonishing and almost miraculous effects have also been experienced in the cure of nervous and rheumatic pains of the head and face, paralytic affections, contracted and stiff joints, glandular swellings, pains of the chest and bones, chronic rheumatism, palpitation of the heart, &c. The way of using it is by rubbing. It requires no internal medicine or restraint of any kind.

Sold, by appointment of J. Lefay, by Stirling, 26, High-street, Whitechapel, in Pots at 4s. 6d. each; and may be had of Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Butler, St. Paul's; Barclay, Farringdon-street; Harvey, 61, Great Surrey-street, Blackfriars-road; Prout and Co., Bow Churchyard; Stradling, Royal Exchange; Newbery and Co., Chemists, Blackfriars-road; and most of the principal Medicine Vendors. YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION is the most wonderful Medicine ever discovered by man, for the cure of GONORRHŒA, GLEETS, STRICTURES, WHITES, Pains in the Loins, Affections of the Kidneys, Gravel, Irritation of the Urethra or Bladder, and for all Urinary Diseases in both sexes.—This Medicine is patronised, prescribed, recommended and sanctioned by the Most Eminent of the Faculty, not only in England but on the Continent; and stated by them, from experience, to be the only Medicine that can be relied on for the cure of these complaints, and they invariably resort to it when their own remedies fail.

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION cures both sexes at all times sooner than any other known remedy, with the most triumphant success, after every Medicine of the present day has proved ineffectual, so that this justly celebrated specific has arrived at a sense of perfection, surpassing every thing of the kind that ever bore the name of medicine, frequently curing some of those virulent diseases in a few hours. Those who have suffered from any of the above diseases for many years (such as strictures, &c.) will find upon taking this medicine for a short time, that, if not entirely cured, they will no longer feel inconvenience from the lurking complaint that remains.

References to respectable Surgeons, who are in the habit of prescribing this medicine exclusively, will be given on application to the Proprietor's Agents.

Sold in Sealed Packets, with full directions, so that any one may cure themselves with perfect safety and secrecy, in any part of the world by HANWAY and Co., 53, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells-street, London, to whom dealers in the country are requested to forward their orders direct; and may be had by all respectable Medicine Venders. MR. BUCKINGHAM'S CLAIMS.—At a Public Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Borough of Sheffield, called by Advertisement in the Sheffield Newspapers, held at the Town Hall, in Sheffield, on Monday the 29th of February, 1836, for the purpose of considering what steps ought to be taken, in consequence of the extraordinary Rejection of the Bill in favour of Mr. Buckingham's Claims for Compensation from the East India Company,

WM. IBBOTSON, Esq., in the Chair:—

It was unanimously Resolved,

Moved by Mr. WM. VICKERS, and seconded by Mr. EBENEZER ELLIOTT,

1. That this meeting have learned, with the greatest surprise and regret, that the Bill introduced by Mr. Tulk into the House of Commons, to compel the East India Company to make compensation to Mr. Buckingham, our active and esteemed representative, for the infliction of a cruel wrong by that Company as the Governors of India, has been lost in the House of Commons on the second reading, though a Select Committee of that House, composed of men of all parties, had previously decided that compensation ought to be made.

Moved by Mr. THOMPSON, and seconded by Mr. LINLEY,

2. That Mr. Buckingham, by his useful and patriotic labours, both in and out of Parliament, in bringing about the destruction of the East India Monopoly; in advocating Free Trade, Temperance, the Abolition of Slavery, and the Impressment of Seamen; and by his fearless, consistent, and enlightened patriotism is deserving, especially under present circumstances, of the support, protection, and lasting gratitude of his fellow-countrymen.

Moved by Mr. H. VICKERS, and seconded by the Rev. O. H. RHODES.

3. That in order to give a substantial proof of sympathy for his wrongs, thus suffered in his country's cause, a Subscription be immediately commenced for the purpose of raising a fund to purchase an Annuity, secured on the joint lives of Mr. and Mrs. Buckingham, and the life of the survivor.

Moved by Mr. JAMES SMITH, of Sharrow, and seconded by Mr. C. F. FAIRBANK,

4. That Messrs. William Ibbotson, Edward Vickers, Samuel Woodcock, William Vickers, Edward Gillbee, William Ash, Ebenezer Elliott, Thomas Linley, G. P. Naylor, W. Thompson, and the Rev. O. H. Rhodes, with power to add to their numbers, be a Committee for the purpose of carrying the preceding resolutions into effect; and that they be requested to form, and correspond with, district Committees in the various towns of the Kingdom, to obtain Subscriptions, and to aid in carrying forward the object of this meeting.

Moved by Mr. ROBERTS, and seconded by Mr. A. BRANSON,

5. That Mr. G. Naylor be Treasurer, and that Messrs. Henry Vickers and Francis Hoole be the Honorary Secretaries.

Moved by Mr. E. VICKERS, and seconded by Mr. G. P. NAYLOR,

6. That the address now read be approved and adopted as the Address of this Meeting to the People of the United Kingdom; and that it be printed and circulated under the direction of the Committee.

WILLIAM IBBOTSON, Chairman.

7. That the thanks of the meeting be given to the Chairman for his services on this occasion.

ADDRESS TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE BOROUGH OF SHEFFIELD,

Assembled in Public Meeting, to the South of the Town Hall of Sheffield, in behalf of their Patriotic Representative, J. S. BUCKINGHAM.

Sir Robert Wilson received a handsome annuity, raised by the British public, to compensate him for the loss of his Commission, of which he was deprived without a Court-Martial, on account of his active interference in behalf of the persecuted Queen of England.

Sir John Ross received a grant of 10,000*l.*, paid by the country, as compensation for losses sustained in his efforts to extend Geographical Discovery, by a speculation undertaken on his own account to explore the Polar Seas.

Sir Walter Scott's children received a large amount, subscribed for them by the country, to compensate them for the losses sustained by their father, in printing speculations and literary pursuits.

All these instances of public sympathy and public aid were praiseworthy, and did honour to the givers and receivers, as well as to the country in which they originated.

Mr. Buckingham has been the victim of a series of cruelties and oppressions almost unparalleled in the history of modern times; and has done more for the extension of our commerce, and the increase of the wealth of his countrymen than any one yet named; while on grounds of political independence and literary pursuits he may be considered also entitled to public gratitude and reward.

Mr. Buckingham has sacrificed more than 50,000*l.* in defence of great public principles, which have since been established,—namely, Freedom of Settlement—Freedom of Publication—and Freedom of Trade in India. He preferred the maintenance of these principles, at the peril of banishment and ruin, rather than a subservient abandonment of his duty.

He has appealed to the India Company for redress—he has no legal power of remedy in a Court of Law—he has applied to Parliament, and though his just claim to compensation has been admitted by an impartial Committee—all power of enforcing his claim has been denied.

His friends, who knew him best, namely, his constituents, whose interests he has so faithfully watched, and so steadily defended—now appeal to the whole country—for there is no portion of it that has not felt the benefit, directly or indirectly, of his successful labours to extend our commerce and augment the national wealth, and we ask them whether they will see their able and zealous advocate perish as the victim of his public virtue, or whether they will testify their sense of his merits and his wrongs by themselves affording him relief?

It is proposed to raise, by public subscription, such a sum as would purchase a competent annuity for Mr. and Mrs. Buckingham, during their lives, secured from all possible risk of violation or loss.

Subscriptions from all classes are earnestly solicited, of any amount that is most congenial to the feelings, and compatible with the means of the contributors.

The Committee pledge themselves that the whole of the funds subscribed, (subject only to the payment of necessary expenses), shall be lodged in the Public Securities at the Bank of England, in the name of the Treasurer, till the Subscription is closed, when it will be invested in the Annuity proposed, under the strongest guarantee for its security.

Subscription Lists are recommended to be placed in the Banks of every Town in the United Kingdom; and the sums subscribed to be transmitted to the Treasurer, George Naylor, Esq., Western Bank, Sheffield, with the least possible delay, or on his account to the London Banking Houses of Messrs. Williams, Deacon, Thornton, and Co., Birchin-lane, City, or Messrs. Robarts and Co., Pall Mall East, Westminster.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—INJUNCTIONS.

CAUTION.—It having been represented to Messrs. DELCROIX and Co. Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, that frequent disappointments were occurring to the Nobility and Gentry, in purchasing from persons having the appearance of respectability, counterfeit articles bearing not only similar labels to their own, but even their name and address, Messrs. Delcroix and Co. have taken necessary steps to enable them to expose the parties so acting, and have the pleasure of informing their patrons and friends that Injunctions have been granted by the above Court, against Messrs. JOHN GOSNELL & Co. (late Price and Gosnell), of Red-street, and 3 Kings' Court, Lombard-street,

Mr. JOHN COLLEY, Perfumer, Bishopsgate-street Within, and Mr. ROBERT HOVENDEN, wholesale Perfumer, Crown-street, Finsbury-square; restraining them from vending imitations of Messrs. DELCROIX and Co.'s much esteemed Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs. And the trade and others are hereby cautioned against similar practices, as Messrs. Delcroix and Co. are determined to proceed against all parties resorting to any means of injuring the great reputation their perfumes have acquired, not only in this country, but in every part of Europe, India, and all parts of the Continent.

Purchasers are requested to be careful to notice that their Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs and Vegetable Extract, will in future bear the signature of J. Delcroix on the labels, and the name and address "Delcroix, 158, New Bond-street," on the back of the Bottles.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Boulilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 6, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Co., Howls, Moreh, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Co., Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Laxenby, Dublin;—and by respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or other Sauce.

PORTSMOUTH, Mar. 16.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The weather has been so tempestuous all the week, that no naval movements have taken place. The Melville is detained at Spithead by adverse winds. Vice-Adm. Sir [illegible] Halkett is sojourning at the Bush Hotel, and will embark the moment the wind becomes favourable for going down channel. The plan of entering seamen for "general service," is found not to answer, for very few have offered. The Admiralty have in consequence sent Capt. the Hon. D. P. Bouverie to join the Vanguard; his commission arrived this morning, and Com. T. Metcalfe Currie this afternoon hoisted the pendant. The Vanguard will have a complement of 650 men. The Surveyor of the Navy arrived this morning to inspect the [illegible] at present, the Liverpool, and the [illegible] preparing to commission. The Vanguard, Pembroke, Pique, and [illegible] dagascar are in the basin. The Madagascar will be [illegible] in a fortnight, the Pembroke next week. The Pique will not be required until May, when the Inconstant is to be launched, and those two frigates and the Castor are to have a sailing trial. A Portuguese frigate and schooner anchored at St. Helen's yesterday morning, but the weather prevented all communication until this day. The frigate is the Braganza. They came up to Spithead this afternoon, and shortly afterwards a steamer called the Manoel arrived under Portuguese colours. The Queen of Portugal consort will embark in the latter for a passage to Lisbon, and the frigate and schooner are to attend him. The Britannia will be paid off on the 4th April, and recommissioned by Capt. D. Dundas, M.P. We have not heard what new officers join her, except that Mr. Geo. Johnston, Surgeon of the Malabar, is to supersede Dr. King. Ships in port—Melville, Braganza, and a schooner at Spithead. In harbour—Britannia, Vanguard, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Pantaloon.

MILFORD HAVEN, March 16th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—This was the day proposed by the officers of our dockyard for launching the Dido and Harlequin, two of Surveyor Symeed's 16 gun brigs, but as no directions were received from the Admiralty on the subject, they remain on the stocks until further orders. It is reported that a regiment of the line (some say the 42nd), is to relieve the Marines doing duty at Pembroke. This is very unlikely, as the names of officers from the Chatham division of that corps have already been mentioned as those selected for duty at Pembroke next year. Immediately after the [illegible] semmar half-yearly inspection by Gen. Cockburn, the change takes place annually. The plan of employing the men in the dockyard as labourers, at a small daily allowance, is so approved of, that that alone is sufficient to retain a detachment there in these times of economy and retrenchment. The work they do is really astonishing. It has blown a gale here the last two days from the westward. News has just reached Mr. Starbuck, the agent for Lloyd's at this place, of the wreck of a large ship near St. David's Head. The Bowsprit has been washed on shore, and it is supposed all hands have perished. Remains of the Diligence transport, Tortoise lighter, and Skylark revenue cruiser. Our agent for packets, — Anson, Esq., has advertised by directions of the treasury, for tenders for building two light vessels. One is to be placed on the Chicken rocks, the other on the shoal off the Wear Point, for the convenience of our steam-packets in plying up to the new pier at Hobb's Point. As government has lent 7000*l.* to the turnpike trust in this county, for the purpose of completing the new line of road between Carmarthen and the Post Office packet station, it is expected we shall all be removed thence in the course of the ensuing summer. The accommodations rapidly progressing cannot fail to interest the English gentry travelling to and from this country.

PLYMOUTH, MARCH 17.—The Star packet arrived [illegible] on Wednesday, and came into harbour in the afternoon to make good her defects. She reached Falmouth on Monday last, after a voyage of five weeks from Port Royal, under jury-rig. Her old fore-mast has served her for a main-mast for her passage home, but it is the only remaining spar of her former set. The accounts which we gain by the survivors of the melancholy catastrophe which befel the packet on 24th Nov., on her passage to Halifax, represent her situation to have been truly terrific. Nearly the whole of her bulwarks, with 25 timber heads, were [illegible] washed away; her masts, with the exception only of the [illegible] of the foremast, were carried over the board, and [illegible] fellows were consigned to a watery grave. The [illegible] brought home a report that the [illegible] hands saved; she is said to have [illegible] Port Royal. Hibernia, 74, [illegible] brig, Lieut. Com. Hon. G. H. A. [illegible] on Thursday, but was obliged to put [illegible] the prevailing westerly gales. [illegible] Captains, four Subalterns, six Serjeants, [illegible] 100 men of the Royal Marines, are ordered to embark on board the [illegible] in Hamoaze. Their [illegible] board the [illegible] for Gosport [illegible] place on board [illegible] the Edgecumbe [illegible]

Extract of a letter from [illegible] Jersey, 16th Mar., 1836.

—The Pylades arrived here on the 12th, after having called off Portendic and landed specie for the Commissariat at the Gambia, at which place she remained two days; the only vessel of war there was the Griffon, Lieut. Parlby, who was daily in expectation of being relieved by the Rolla, Lieut. Glasse. The Buzzard, that most lucky vessel, has just sent in a fourth prize, the Semiramis, of Havana, captured off the Bonny, with 477 slaves on board. Mr. May, the Governor, and Mr. Bedford, Master's Assistant, brought her up; she is condemned, and the hull has been already sold for 650*l*. Lieut. Roberts, late first of Trincula, is the officer at present in command, and who captured this vessel. The Buzzard has captured in eleven months 1967 slaves; she is at present off the Bonny, blockading a polacca barque. The Thalia is daily expected here from the Cape, St. Helena, and Ascension. On the evening of 15th a Spanish brig, the Argo, prize to H. M.'s brig Chorybdis, Lieut. S. Mercer, captured off the River Gaboon, anchored here; she had on board at the time of capture 428 slaves, and during her passage up (five weeks), has lost 62. She will land the remainder this evening. The prize master, Mr. Rowlett, mate, reports that off St. Thomas's Island, he was informed the Buzzard and Fair Rosamond had captured the large polacca brig they were blockading, supposed cargo upwards of 600. The coast seems all alive with the slave trade, and the Spanish flag predominates in spite of all our attempts to suppress it. Twenty-five sail were lying at St. Paul de Loando six weeks ago, mostly Spanish, and large craft. On 21st inst. another prize, a Spanish schooner, the Conde de los Andes, in charge of Mr. J. G. Burslem, arrived here, taken after three days chase, by the boats of the Britomart, Lieut. Quin, 297 slaves on board; this is her first prize. She was captured off the river Bonny, and has only lost six in her passage up of one month. The Curlew arrived yesterday from a cruize; she has detained three Spanish vessels for being engaged in the slave trade, in breach of the new treaties entered into with Spain, by which they are liable to capture and confiscation, if it can be proved that they are in any way fitted for a slaving voyage. She could have seized three more, (all within 180 miles of our principal settlement, Sierra Leone,) but had no more men to spare to navigate them. The Pylades will therefore proceed after them. Other accounts state the Buzzard captured, on 27th Nov., off Bonny River, after a long chase and a hard fight, another slaver, with 280 slaves on board.

The Hyacinth, 18, was at Batavia on 9th October last, having left Sydney on 6th Aug. On her way through Torres Straits, four canoes, with New Holland natives, came alongside, but no allurement could induce them to go on board; they would only sit on the hammock-nettings, and would accept neither beef, pork, fowls, or tobacco; they had their faces painted red and white, at which they were much pleased; but on, having a small looking-glass given them to view their own faces they were frightened, and let it fall on the deck; they were naked, and used no paddles, but propelled their canoes through the water with their hands only. On 6th Sept. the Hyacinth was at York Island, on which Capt. Blackwood and Mr. Forbes, the Master, landed and discovered that it contained a beautiful harbour, capable of receiving 40 ships, with a hard muddy bottom, of five fathoms at low water, and of easy access. The Hyacinth sailed at Timor, and intended to go to Singapore, Malacca, Penang, and Madras. There were two frigates, a corvette, and a brig, all Dutch, lying at Batavia, at which place both French and English traders were looked on with great jealousy, while every encouragement was given to American ships.

Twenty second class boys, from the ordinary at Portsmouth, have been sent out in the Melville to fill vacancies on the West India and North American stations.

Naval Force of Russia in 1836.—The Russian Navy, in active service, consists of three squadrons—the Baltic squadron, commanded by Admiral Samoyina; the Archipelago, by Vice-Admiral Heyden; and the fleet in the Black Sea, by Admiral Greig.—Baltic and Archipelago Squadrons—Fifteen line-of-battle; Peter the Great, 110; Alexander, 120; thirteen two deckers, 74 guns; thirteen frigates of 44; two corvettes of 24; and five brigs of 18 guns.—Black Sea Fleet—Fifteen line-of-battle; Paris, 110; Empress the First, 110; four two deckers of 84; six more of 74; three less of 60 guns; five frigates of 44; seven corvettes of 20 guns; 7 brigantines, 6 cutters, 50 schooners, 130 gun boats, 20 galliots, 25 floating batteries. The Navy is manned by 35,000 men, including 3,000 artillerymen, and 3,000 troops or Marines.

On Thursday morning, the workmen in attendance at the steam engine in Portsmouth dock-yard, which is commonly used to clear the docks of water, were much surprised to find that though the spreading rod of the pump showed at least two feet of water, yet the pumps would deliver none. They proceeded down to examine into the cause of this, and found, to their astonishment, that the cistern below, in which the pumps worked, was filled by a solid mass of ash, which must, of course, [illegible] be cleared away before the pumping could be performed well. A large part-load of five [illegible] was carefully removed with no greater difficulty than just enabling them to [illegible] buckets.

Yarmouth, March 12.—The Court of Enquiry on Lieut. Dornford and the preventive boatmen of Freshwater Gate Station, concluded on Saturday last; when Capt. Maxmilith and the other officers engaged with him in conducting the enquiry adjourned to prepare their report to the Comptroller-General, and the Board of Customs. Fourteen witnesses were examined for the prosecution, whose examination continued from Monday the 22nd, to Saturday, the 27th ult. The more serious charges of "bribery and collusion with smugglers" appear to have been abandoned; not the slightest evidence having been adduced to prove either the one or the other.

Woolwich Dock Yard.—The Lords of the Admiralty visited this yard on Saturday last, and inspected several steam vessels: among them the Rhadamanthus and the Hermes attracted their immediate attention. The fractured wheels of the latter were particularly noticed, and the able manner in which she was brought to England much commented on. Carron steam vessel was brought down from Blackwall to Woolwich, and there commissioned by Lieut. Dow, and is being got ready for service with all possible dispatch. Hermes steam vessel, Lieut. Blount, in consequence of being found absolutely impossible to go through the duty from her being so short handed, six additional A.B.'s will be added to her crew. Quail cutter, Lieut. Bisson, arrived off Woolwich this week, having sprung her main mast. Pluto steam yacht, Lieut. Duffill, has arrived at Woolwich on Wednesday last, to repair the damage she sustained during the late gales; everything on deck having been swept away, not excepting "the lumber adrift in her lee scuppers," sprung her foremast, and lost her main topmast. Spitfire steam vessel, Lieut. A. Kennedy, will carry out the next mail to Malta, Lieut. K. having represented to the Admiralty that he had just returned from the West Indies, whither he had again been ordered. She has been twice down the river this week to try her engines, which are found to "work well." Hermes steam vessel, Lieut. Blount, is in the basin at Woolwich, and has had her wheels taken off, and it is expected she will get her new ones in in a fortnight, when she will proceed for the West Indies.

A spring of water, which takes its rise in a mineral district in North Wales, and is strongly impregnated with acid, has been long known to possess the property of preserving timber which has been immersed in it in an extraordinary degree, so much so that it has been asserted that coasting vessels which occasionally lie in the Pill, through which the current runs, have never been known to be affected with rot. It is, we believe, intended to institute some experiments on timber intended for the navy, and should the event prove successful, it cannot fail to prove beneficial to the proprietor, Mr. Parry, as well as to the country at large, as the expense of the preparation is small compared with the other preventives or preservatives which have been at various times suggested.

Royal Marines (Woolwich division).—The field-days will commence on the 28th instead of the 21st inst., as stated. Private Joseph Taylor has been sentenced to seven years' transportation, for stealing great coats from the divisional store.

The Portland is ordered home from the West Indies, and will be probably paid off, and her crew turned over to a line-of-battle ship.

It is confidently affirmed, that a naval promotion will take place on the approaching birth-day of his Majesty; and that some new regulations, relative to the Colonelcies of Marines, will be promulgated.—Portsmouth Paper.—[We wish we were able to add our belief that the report of a naval promotion was true, but on the contrary, we have reason to abide by our former statements—there is no chance at present of a Brevet either for army or navy.—Ed.]

We have the extreme gratification of announcing the safety of the Lady Jane, and there now only remains the William Torr to be accounted for out of all the missing whalers. The Lady Jane arrived at Stromness on Sunday, the 13th inst., in a most deplorable state. The dreadful sufferings undergone by her crew, and those of the Mary Francis who were on board the Lady Jane, it is impossible to describe; suffice it to say, that on the arrival of the Lady Jane at Stromness, out of 64 persons, officers and men, who were on board in the middle of December, 22 had died, and 30 were lying in a condition of utter helplessness; so that there remained but 12 hands in all to navigate the ship, and attend to their suffering shipmates. Indeed she came in a complete floating hospital, in all the misery and agony of such an establishment, but wanting every aid of medicine and care, and almost destitute of the simplest necessaries of life. Immediately on her arrival the sick and disabled were removed on shore, and taken to the hospital in which the men from the Jane and the Viewforth were put, on the late arrival of those ships; the convalescent were distributed in private lodgings. It is pleasing to be able to state that in four hours after the arrival of the ship, all hands had been well scrubbed in warm baths, and put into clean beds, a luxury to men in their miserable condition, more easily understood than described. The utmost praise—the thanks of the whole maritime community—fall short of what is due to Mr. Hamilton, the surgeon, at Stromness, and those who assisted him in the work humanity, for the prompt and efficient services bestowed the poor fellows thus thrown upon their benevolence. Se exertions must not be permitted to pass without some la ing testimonial of gratitude. We do not see, in the arriv of the Lady Jane, any grounds for supposing that our o ginal impression with respect to the William Torr was i correct. Our belief is unchanged that Capt. J. C. Ro will find the William Torr in Home Bay.—Shipp Gazette.

The Hope tr., Lieut. Spencer, Agent, is ordered to discharged, requiring repairs.

The Carron, st., was commissioned on the 12th at Wo wich by Lieut. W. Dow, 1814.

The Spitfire st., Lt. Kennedy, Com., having been fit with new boilers, it has proceeded from Woolwich to Pl mouth for further orders.

The William and Mary yt., at Woolwich, is enteri seamen and boys to augment the navy.

The Numa, Prince Regent, and Parmelia, transpo with Agents, are at Deptford, and will take troops to Mediterranean.

The Elisa is taking in stores at Deptford for Malta.

The Ordinary at Sheerness is expected to be put commission on 1st April, and will be composed of hundred officers and men; the officers will perform duties as heretofore, and reside in their respective divisio ships, on commission pay.

The Prince Regent yt., at Deptford, will be fitted for with with all possible despatch and attention to comf and elegance.

My Friends,—I have received, and accept with pride and gratification, the very handsome silver cup you have sent me as a tribute of esteem on my retirement from the service. To say that I thank you, would but poorly express what I feel for this token of your regard, the more flattering to me, from the disinterested and delicate manner of making the gift, after I had left the battalion and the service, and could no more benefit any of you. I shall ever feel a deep interest in the honour and good name of the Rl. Regt.; and the only return I can make for your kindness, is to wish and hope, that by your future conduct you will (as hitherto) uphold your own respectability and comfort, thereby securing the countenance and support of your Officers generally, and also of your admirable Commanding Officer, my esteemed friend, Col. ## East India Intelligence.

The Hon. Henry Shakespear was sworn in, the 26th Oct. and took his seat as a member of the Council of India.

From the Madras Herald, Oct. 20th, we obtain the following information about the refractory Rajah of Goomsoor:—"The 49th, 8th, and 2d cos. of the 21st, with the Native Artillery, have taken the field; so the Rajah would soon be brought to his senses, even if he were fool-hardy enough to attempt to hold out. It is reported, however, that symptoms of submission have been already shown,—that he has sent in 30,000 Rupees, given up a man whom the Government have long been trying to lay hold of, and volunteered to meet the Collector."

The trial, for the late fatal duel at Bangalore, of Lieutenants Joy, Morland, and Powys, has terminated, the whole being convicted of manslaughter; Lieuts. Joy and Powys sentenced by the Court to twelve months imprisonment in the common jail at Madras, and Lieut. Morland to six months, but the latter was earnestly recommended to the lenient consideration of the Com.-in-Chief. His Excellency has confirmed the sentence, ordering the imprisonment of the two former to commence on their arrival at the jail, and has remitted the sentence on Lieut. Morland. The chief evidence before the Court was the statements made by Ens. Davies prior to his death, and which were thus possessed of the full force of an oath, by which it appeared that Ens. Davies had acted throughout the whole of the Portuguese war; and on the evening in question, it appeared that, having called on Mr. Powys, and finding he was gone to Mr. Joy's house, he followed him there, when, in the course of conversation, Mr. Joy bantered him in an unpleasant way about his services in Portugal, which drew forth angry retorts, ending in the application by Mr. Davies of the epithets "liar or blackguard;" his being collared by Mr. Joy, and terming the latter a coward. It was urged that the deceased was anxious that very evening to have pistols to decide the affair. But whatever may then have occurred, reports enable us to come to no other conclusion than that the duel was forced upon him the following morning.

The Adjutant-General, Lieut.-Col. Conway, has returned to the Presidency, quite recovered from the ill-disposition he was labouring under.

The Com.-in-Chief has issued some General Orders dated 26th Oct., relative to the frequent occurrence of General Courts-Martial, in which he expresses his opinion that the amount of the crime in several cases was only such as might have been adequately dealt with by a District or Garrison, or even Regimental Court-Martial; that the great frequency of General Courts-Martial is much calculated to diminish the awe with which they ought to be contemplated by soldiers, and tends to great inconvenience and detriment to the Army by occupying in such duties so many regimental Officers.

Among the on dits at Bangalore is a report of the speedy payment of the Coorg prize money.

Literary Notices.

Genealogical History of the Commoners of Great Britain and Ireland. By John Burke, Esq. In 4 vols. Vol. 3. H. Colburn.

We are gratified to find this publication, which we have repeatedly noticed during its progress, so far advanced towards its completion. The volume before us is embellished with a very excellent print of Mr. Coke, of Holkham, and is equally deserving of praise with those preceding it. Indeed the work has every pretension to be classed with the most useful and important of the age; and for reference, in regard to British genealogical history, it has not a competitor. The three volumes now before the public contain the histories of the heads of more than one thousand families, with their connections; and those histories are scarcely less interesting to the general reader than to the antiquarian and genealogist; for with most of the records of ancient descent are blended amusing anecdotes and instructive historical facts. A few extracts will corroborate these remarks, and we shall begin with Graham, of Cloverhouse, who was created Viscount Dundee.

"John Graham, of Claverhouse, a distinguished, perhaps the most distinguished, soldier of the era in which he lived. Animated from his earliest years by the study of the poets and orators of antiquity, as well as by the traditionary songs of the highland bards, Claverhouse entered, at a very youthful age, on a military life, and served in the low countries against the French in the war of 1672, eminently signalizing himself at the battle of Seneff. Shortly afterward he returned home, and obtained a regiment from Charles II., for the especial purpose of forcing the non-conformists into communion with the established church. During the progress of the war which ensued, his success was varied. In 1679 he attacked a conventicle on Loudoun Hill, in Ayrshire, and after a close and furious engagement at Drumclog, suffered defeat, but retrieved his fortune in the well-known action of Bothwell Bridge. The acts of cruelty, however, which followed, and which procured for Graham the appellation of Bloody Clavers, have indelibly tarnished his gallantry and reputation. In palliation, he justified the course he had adopted by the allegation that "terror was the mercy, if it put an end to, or prevented war." After the flight of James II., by whom he had been created Viscount Dundee, and during the consequent proceedings in Scotland, Claverhouse became chiefly conspicuous. When the ill-fated king withdrew to Rochester, he endeavoured to persuade his departure from the kingdom; "Give me your majesty's commission to raise ten thousand of the disbanded soldiers," said the gallant and sanguine Dundee, "and marching through England with the royal standard at our head, we will drive the Dutch invader at the point of the sword into the sea*." This counsel proving ineffective, Graham proceeded with his dragoons to Stirling, and there dispersed a parliament of the friends of the abdicated monarch. The convention sent a party to apprehend him; but he retired into Lochabar, and summoning a general rendezvous of the clans, raised upwards of two thousand men. With these he marched to Blair, in Athol, and Mackay, King William's general, advancing with four thousand foot and two troops of horse, they met at the pass of Killicranky, on the 17th June, 1689. Mackay drew up his men in order of battle, and wished to bring on the engagement without delay; but the Scottish Commander well knowing that night would be of advantage to the Highlanders, whether successful or defeated, delayed the attack until half an hour before sunset; at that moment he ordered his troops to rush down from their station, and begin the conflict in a series of small columns on the wings of the enemy, calculating that this manœuvre was most likely to bring on action hand to hand, in which he was certain of the superiority of his clansmen. Such had been the disposition of Dundee's kinsman and model, the gallant Marquis of Montrose, at the battle of Aldearne. The enthusiastic and impetuous charge of the Scotch proved irresistible; Mackay fled, defeated, with the loss of two thousand men, and escaped to Stirling, apprehensive of the pursuit of Dundee. But the gallant Graham was no more. After a desperate conflict with the enemy's artillery, he returned to cut off the retreat; but at the moment that his arm was extended to his troops, he received a shot through an opening in his armour,† and dropped from his horseback as he attempted to ride off the field. He survived,

* At a subsequent period, Dundee unsuccessfully conjured the royal master, who was wasting time and means in Ireland, to embark, with a part of his army, for Scotland, where his presence would fix the wavering and intimidate the timid, and where bands of shepherds would start up warriors at the first wave of his banner on their mountains."

† The last coat Dundee wore at Killicranky is still preserved in Penicuik House, the seat of Sir George Clerk, Bart., and the hole which it made in under the arm-pit.—Miscellany of the Bannatyne Club.

however, to write a concise and dignified account of his success to James.*

We have a very full account of the ancient family of Cosby; and of the patriarch of the family, Francis Cosby, a man famed for personal courage as well as civil and military talents, Mr. Burke says,—

"When young he served in the wars of Henry VIII. in the Low Countries, and was not undistinguished. His abandonment of his native soil arose from the downfall of the Protector Somerset, whose daughter Mary, widow of Sir Henry Payton, knt. he had married. Deeming the disgrace and death of that once potent nobleman a sentence of exclusion from place and preferment in England, against his immediate connexions at least, Cosbie (Mary Saymour, his first wife, being then dead) emigrated to Ireland, taking with him his second wife, Elizabeth Paulmes, and the two surviving sons of the first. Here, in the land of his adoption, he soon found the opportunity of establishing a reputation, which he despaired of effecting in the land of his birth. He became an active defender of the Pale against the inroads of the Irish; and his vigilance, zeal, and success attracting the observation of government, he was appointed by Queen Mary, under her Majesty's sign manual, dated 14th February, 1558, General of the Kern, a post of great trust and importance in those times. In 1559 he represented the borough of Thomastown in Parliament, when he was constituted by Queen Elizabeth sheriff of the county of Kildare, being denominated in his patent (dated 24th Jan., in the first year of her Majesty's reign), "of Evan," now "Munster Evan," which place he held under an old grant from the crown, and was invested at the same time with the extraordinary and unenviable privilege of exercising martial law under his own authority solely, and of dealing out such punishments, even the most penal, as he should deem meet. Arbitrary power has rarely consorted with justice or mercy, and few have passed through the fiery ordeal of its unhallowed possession with reputation unscathed, for few have been found virtuous or firm enough to withstand the temptation of persecuting their fellows. Unhappily for the memory of Francis Cosbie, his name may not be written down amongst the merciful; but in his day, and in the wretched land over which he became a ruler, oppression and cruelty were of such frequent occurrence as to become familiar to men's minds, and to be stripped of more than a moiety of the horror that tyranny usually inspires. Cosbie, in furtherance of his commission, caused a gallows to be erected in the immediate vicinity of his own residence, on a spot still bearing the name of Gallows-hill, and there he is accused of having committed the most atrocious excesses. One practice is recorded, that of hanging his victim alive in chains, and placing within view a loaf of bread, in order to aggravate the excruciating tortures of hunger; his conduct, however, received the high commendation of the lord-deputy, Sidney, who, in the state papers, represents the district over which General Cosbie so ruthlessly presided to be in such profound tranquillity under that officer's government, that it was almost useless to make the country shire ground. Cosbie ultimately fell at the battle of Glendillough, at the head of the Kern, which he valiantly led to the charge, although then seventy years of age."

Of the ancient Scotch family, the Frasers, of Lovat, we have also most interesting details. On the breaking out of the rebellion in 1745, Simon Fraser, Lord Lovat, who had signed the association to join Charles Edward, from whom he accepted the commission of Lieutenant-General and General of the Highlands, with a patent creating him Duke of Fraser, sent his eldest son and clansmen to join the standard of the chevalier, but remained at home himself. We will conclude with the following account of the execution of this nobleman:—

"When all was over he was taken into custody, 1746, conveyed to London, and put upon his trial for high treason before the House of Lords, on the 7th of March, 1747, convicted on the 10th of the same month, and decapitated on Tower-hill the 9th of April following, in the 80th year of his age. The proceedings against his lordship began in Westminster Hall on Monday, the 9th of May, and continued on the 10th, 11th, 13th, 16th, 18th, and 19th days of the same month, when the doom of a traitor was pronounced upon him. His lordship called no witnesses, but spoke at considerable length in defence, making a great merit of his exertions in 1715, and grievous complaints for the disbanding of his company. From the moment of his condemnation, the unhappy nobleman behaved with dignified composure. When the warrant came down for his execution, he cheerfully exclaimed, "God's will be done!" and, taking the messenger by the hand, drank his health and thanked him kindly for the favour, as he called it, assuring him he would not change places with any prince in Europe. His last care was to write a letter to his son, replete with the tenderest sentiments. When the hour of execution approached, he conversed in a cheerful and easy

* King William hearing that the express dispatched to Edinburgh with the account of the defeat had been detained a day on the road, exclaimed, "Dundee must certainly have fallen, otherwise he would have been there before it could have arrived." At a later period, William being urged to reinforce the troops in Scotland, replied, 'It is needless; the war ends with Dundee.'" tions with those about him, saying, he died "as a Highland chieftain should die—not in his bed." On mounting the steps of the scaffold, the vast crowd extorted an expression of surprise: "God save us! what a bustle there is about taking off an old grey head that cannot get up three steps without two men to support it." He then kneeled down to the block, and his head, at one blow, was severed from his body*."

There are still many Commoners of ancient descent to be introduced in this work, and we shall, therefore, look to the completion of the fourth volume with some degree of anxiety. We have every confidence in Mr. Burke's researches.

* His lordship had a grotesque and singular appearance, but his portrait by Hogarth supersedes any description."

The Devoted. By the Authoress of "The Disinherited," "Flirtation," &c. 3 vols. R. Bentley.

The literary works of Lady Charlotte Bury are her own in the strictest sense of the word. Her talent is by turns brilliant, contemplative, picturesque, satirical; she is now animated, witty, even humourous, and anon her pathos moves one to tears, while her reflections and her moral truths excite that mood in the reader by which his understanding cannot fail to be enlarged. In the construction of her fables—in that art which stimulates curiosity, but holds it in suspense till the last chapter, the present novelist possesses even more than the ordinary felicity of female writers; and in the development of character her tact is truly dramatic. The new story, "The Devoted," forcibly illustrates these remarks. It is a novel of which the scene is laid chiefly in the houses of the great; but though the writer's love for her "order" is sufficiently apparent, it is curious to see with what complacency she detects the exclusiveness, the pride, the weakness, the follies, (may we not add the vices?) of the aristocracy, and how happy she is to seize every opportunity to exalt those in humbler stations of life, to whom, if she has no sympathy with them, she is, nevertheless, resolved to do the fullest justice. This, it will be admitted, furnishes evidence of a remarkable mind. One of the principal characters in the story before us is Lord Altamont, an elaborate delineation of a weak, ambitious, pompous peer, the very slave of etiquette. His daughter, the Lady Elizabeth is even more happily developed. Her playing at "fast and loose" with all her lovers (and they are many), is well imagined, exceedingly diverting to the reader, and involves herself in endless embarrassments. The other principal personages of the tale are, Mr. St. Aubyn the young clergyman, whose devotions are shared by love and religion; Delamere, the visionary and ambitious statesman; Ethel, his moody, but enthusiastic sister; Dampier, the wit about town; and Lord Dolomine, the roué. These are all finished delineations, put into most effective action. We do not much admire the incident at the widow Brown's inn, near London—the simplicity aimed at becomes weakness; but we repeat that when the writer treats of her own sphere, she manifests infinite spirit and power. "The Devoted" is the best of Lady Charlotte Bury's novels we have met with.

The Theory and Science of Naval Architecture, &c. &c. &c. By Isaac Blackburn. Longman and Co.

Facts and Observations relative to the Present State of British Naval Architecture. Westley and Davis.

Mr. Blackburn's pamphlet gives a more familiar explanation of what he terms "The Theory and Science of Naval Architecture" than we have hitherto met with. He has arranged his subject methodically, and treated it scientifically in separate sections; and although he does not pretend to the discovery of any new features in the noble art, he has certainly done more to elucidate and explain the advantages which are available to the shipbuilder from the various sciences, than the generality of writers upon this subject, who overload their works with abstruse definitions and intricate problems, which are incomprehensible to the majority of persons desirous of information on this point.

The other pamphlet appears to be one of the periodical productions of the School, the old materials hashed up, and the same interminable argument which has appeared under various forms again repeated, enlivened a little with some partial statements of the trial between the Pique and Castor. Here we have republished the list of the ships built, building, and intended to be built upon Capt. Symonds's principle, with a formidable display of pounds, shillings, and pence, all which our readers have already encountered in pamphlets and newspapers; or it is their own fault—with the joint-stock wood cut which has figured in so many works, and its accompanying calculations to prove the want of stability in the Surveyor's ships, or rather, as it is expressed—"Captain Symonds's notions of stability, opposed to physical principles," and "other defects of his form as affecting the stability." It is unfortunate for our philosophers who have taken such pains to elucidate this point, that it has been universally admitted in practice that the ships in question do possess stability in an eminent degree. A the end we arrive at the cream of the matter, the object of these periodical ebullitions, namely, the formation of a Board of Construction, to be constituted of course of the proprietors of the aforesaid wood cut, and joint authors of the "Apology," &c., to the rejection of all such as have not taken their degrees in the art of ship-building at the Naval School of Architecture. We know not which to admire most, the perseverance and pretensions of these gentlemen, or the equanimity of the Surveyor, who does not appear to consider them worth his notice, or surely so great a breach of discipline could not be permitted as for the inferiors of a department to exercise every possible means to bring the measures of their superior into disrepute and contempt.

Spain Revisited. By the author of "A Year in Spain." 2 vols. Richard Bentley.

THE first work of this author on Spain "won golden opinions from all sorts of men," and the present is fully equal to its predecessor. In order to give a complete picture of this most interesting of modern countries, the writer travelled to Madrid and back, by a totally different route to that which he adopted in his first visit, and consequently saw many towns and districts which, lying out of the beaten track, possess more of the primitive and peculiar character of Spain than those in the direct roads. We know nothing more romantically graphic than the sketches here given of the manners and customs of the peninsula—that mixture of Moorish and Castilian observances which so strikingly distinguishes Spain from the rest of Europe, and which, in its long endurance, has given to the country something of the unchanging aspect of the East. In reading the work before us, we were constantly reminded of the incidents and descriptions in Don Quixote and Gil Blas. In what other western land should we seek, in its present condition, for illustrations of works written so long ago? The author's curiosity was alive to everything; and though his path was constantly beset by the hostile bands of Carlists and Christinos, his attention was not so much attracted by them, as by the antiquities, the scenery, and the people, especially as the character of the last was modified by religion, habit, and education. How quaint and curious are his pictures of the Spanish inns! How spirited his sketches of that singular race, the muleteers! How fascinating are his descriptions of the women, whether undulating along the Prado, threading the mazes of the bolero, or absorbed in the devotions of the church! With what a Ribera-like pencil does he place before our eyes the cowled friars, and other religious functionaries of that priest-ridden country? And how fantastic, and yet how true, are his outlines of the motley groups to be seen, morning, noon, and night, in the great squares of the different towns! This indeed is the author to whose writings those should turn who desire to become acquainted with the Spanish country and the Spanish people.

COAST GUARD SERVICE. (LETTER VI.)

SIR,—My preceding letter, in reference to Inspecting Commanders, pointed out the difficulties they have to contend against in acquiring a correct knowledge of their duty, and the rebuffs and vexations they are made subject to. As regards what is absolutely required of them, the appointment will be found anything but a sinecure. The officers immediately under their inspection are allowed no fixed relative position, hence they are required to do duties absolutely not their own, and are thereby invested with an unnatural and irresponsible power with respect to the officers and men generally, which no Captain of a man-of-war ever possessed; such, indeed, is the order of things in this proverbially ill-regulated service, that a Lieutenant sitter of a station, may be said to stand in the relation to them of A COXSWAIN OF A BOAT, but not allowed by the Board of Customs to possess quite so much intelligence and honesty; however, this is in strict keeping with the original formation of the service, for we have seen what description of man was selected for the appointment in the first instance; and in proof that the Board of Customs do not think a tittle better of the Lieutenant "Sitters" than they did of former ones, their very journals are to this day made as significant to them as caution-boards to thieves. In large and legible characters will be found printed on the front page of each Coast Guard Journal, so that every inferior officer and man may see it, the following order:—"The chief officers are strictly to attend to their journals, and frequently to read the several articles of their instructions relative thereto, as any omission will be punished by a fine!!!"

Yes, Sir, a fine to be levied on a Lieutenant of the Royal Navy. Query—Would a Lieutenant in the service be found tame enough to submit to such a degradation, though he were superseded forthwith?

The Commander of a cruiser stands now but little different to his brother officer, the Lieutenant "Sitter." The Inspecting Commander is "the servant of all work." If a boy is to be rated from a second to a first class on board a cutter, he is directed to do it; if an estimate be required at a station for the repair of a pistol, he must procure it; and he is enjoined to all those petty interferences in the internal regulations of cruisers and stations most annoying and humiliating to the respective Commanding Officers, and certainly most subversive of good discipline, inasmuch as that the inferior officers and men, seeing the limited power such Commanding Officers possess, readily conceive the the service to be a sort of commonalty, with no responsible person in it but an Inspecting Commander; hence they are very naturally disposed to pay indifferent respect to those that actually, by the rules of the service, command them, and in many instances they fly directly to the Inspecting Commander for all they wish and want.

In the Board's printed Instructions it will be found, under the article of "crews and cruisers," that the Commanders of such cruisers, and the Commanders only, have the privilege of filling up all vacancies for mariners, ordinary mariners, first and second class boys. This is as it should be, for who can be a better judge as to what persons are qualified to fill these situations? as the safety of his vessel, himself, his officers and crew depend entirely upon the efficiency of the latter; besides, does not this wholesome power tend most materially to keep up that discipline and authority over those subordinate to him, with which, for the best interests of the service, he ought to be invested, and which, for those cogent reasons, ought never to have been wrested from him?—but I regret to say it has been in very, very many cases; and mariners and boys have been entered on board by orders from head-quarters, which, upon trial—and fair trial, too—the Commanders have (and I believe I am correct in saying so) been compelled to direct to quit. The sooner this is put a stop to the better, for it must naturally engender very unpleasant feelings on all sides.

The duty of an Inspecting Commander, if he be a right-minded and good officer, must be extremely irksome. If he be a disciplinarian, he must feel and know that discipline is a certain science; that it must be produced by invariable and given rules; that it is respect to authority, which is only induced by making authority respected; and that, by destroying the authority of the inferior grade in this or any other service, he weakens his own authority, and sinks his own situation. Nor can he conceive his appointment a very respectable one when he sees the Board of Customs, by every order of theirs, implies a suspicion of the officers under his inspection, and merely recognises them as men without sufficient character and intelligence to be entrusted with the duties of the situation they profess to entrust to them.

It will be seen that the Inspecting Commander is, indirectly, the only recognised officer in a district; that Commanders of cruisers and "chief officers" of stations, although professedly placed in separate commands, are not, as they would be in the Navy, supported in them. There is no line of demarcation which the Inspecting Commander may not step over without being in any manner responsible for unofficerlike conduct. He may, if he be an unprincipled man, with the greatest impunity first insult, and to a certain extent degrade, an officer, and then write his own garbled report, turning the offence against the injured!

It is to this day a disputed point whether a Commander of a cutter, or "chief officer" of a station, has the right to address a communication to the Comptroller-General, sending it, open, through the Inspecting Commander. Some Inspecting Commanders insist that all communications, whatever their purport or bearing, be addressed to them only, and that it is then discretional with them to communicate their contents to the Comptroller-General or not. This principle once established, what a system of tyranny and injustice may be practised!

Any officer in the Royal Navy may address the Commander-in-Chief, or the Lords of the Admiralty, by sending his letter through his immediate Commanding Officer; but, in the Coast Guard, I have known letters suppressed, and their contents never conveyed to the Comptroller-General, because they were addressed to him, although sent in the manner the practices of the Navy point out as respectful and proper.

There is yet another power which the Inspecting Commanders seem to possess, and which they can only exercise by a stretch of the authority they presume to be conceded to them by the Commissioners of Customs. This power is obviously illegal—I allude to the power of deciding who are or who are not entitled to seizure rewards. I could adduce a case where an Inspecting Commander decided against a party, although that party was on the spot when a seizure was effected, and ostensibly secured it from rescue (another party had, I will admit, first got up, but were beaten off by the smugglers); and merely because he had, previously to ascertaining the facts of the case, written his report to the Comptroller-General, giving the latter party all the credit, and which statement could not be attended to without changing the whole features of the affair, and of putting it into a more questionable shape as to where the credit was really due.

By every regulation of the Coast Guard, this was a joint seizure, and ought to have been divided into equal shares to the persons present. But no, the simple statement of this Inspecting Commander decided against law and justice, the party I have first named were deprived of their undoubted right, without a hearing from the Inspecting Commander, or being allowed to adduce the proofs they had that without their aid the seizure could not have been secured. In fact, they were absolutely spurned, point blank! and refused any sort of redress. And now, Sir, to show the caprice with which these cases are decided. In another instance, where the assistance rendered was proved to be doubtful, this said Inspecting Commander decided in favour of the claim, thus vacillating, as seemed best suited to meet his views: it might be his interest, but evidently doing a prejudice to the service by destroying all active co-operation and good-will amongst the parties, and undoubtedly inflicting a wrong upon some of them.

Looking carefully at the Act of Parliament 3 and 4 W. IV. cap. 53, sec. 67, it will be seen that the Commissioners of Customs alone have the power to cause to be paid to the person or persons making a seizure, the amount of reward pointed out therein. By the 70th section of the same act the Commissioners of Customs may, under certain circumstances, reward persons not present; but I can discover no law to deprive persons present, and manfully doing their duty, of a proportion of the reward allowed. This, however, has been done by an Inspecting Commander; but in a new time that power was withdrawn. Where there is a disputed claim, the deposition of all parties should be taken without partiality or bias, and submitted to the Solicitor of Customs for his decision, as he, of course, must be best acquainted with the law of the case, and is most likely to be strictly impartial. A man's right to seizure reward in the Coast Guard is an immunity secured to him by the legislature, and this right ought to be considered as sacred as any other privilege an Englishman is entitled to.

But again to revert to the duty required of an Inspecting Commander. He is strictly enjoined to visit the Coast Guard stations in his district four times in each month; two of these visits to be by day, and two by night—half the night visits to be after midnight. There are, general, seven stations in a district. The districts vary from little more than 20 miles in length to 120 and upwards. Reference is seldom had to length of district, nor whether there are cutters in it. The same amount of duty seen always to be expected, whether practicable or not. The result is that in long and tedious districts the duty must be very badly perfectly performed, and officers put to miserable subterfuges to keep up the appearance of doing what is required of them. As to night visits on the part of Inspecting Commanders, they are generally useless, because it is impossible on most districts, to perform them with any effect. In many instances he is absolutely dependent upon the "Chief Officer" of the station for shelter, after riding, perhaps, 25 or 30 miles, there being no hotel or public-house near, and even if there be one it is closed at a particular hour at night. Then, again, there are the peculiar localities of stations to be considered: on some he can only pass by at a certain time of tide; on others, as the men are necessarily placed on cliffs and inequalities of ground, he cannot well approach them, and they are of necessity obliged to have some indirect intimation given them that the Inspecting Commander will visit the station, in order that they may be seen, and not thus improperly, be enabled to make up his night duty. The officers and men soon become acquainted with this fact, and circumstances he must necessarily avail himself of, and his visits are exactly anticipated. This is, perhaps, doing the duty to the letter, but not to the spirit. However, I confidently say, that were Inspecting Commanders not to economise their time and their resources, their allowance would not, on some districts, half pay their expences; and the Commissioners of Customs are egregiously mistaken if they conceive that Naval officers generally look upon the service in any light than as one of pounds, shillings, and pence. What folly, then, is it to insist upon a duty of real benefit arising from the impracticability of performing it; and what is yet not a little insulting, an Inspecting Commander will occasionally find that after he has used almost exertions, some underling in office has turned out a real economist upon him, and, with a holy zeal, wiped off his travelling allowances for Sundays, although he was there absolutely, and of necessity, out, and actually upon duty the time stated. Every man's honour seems doubted in this service; at all events, every officer is capriciously dealt with, for it must be known there is no other extent to which Inspecting Commanders are not to do duty on Sundays. Where there are cutters, and which vessels always cause an immense correspondence, what with this, and their duties of the respective Commanders, every day of the time is absolutely taken up.

Before I conclude this letter, I must [illegible] complain of the infinite injustice that [illegible] officers in the service, and many more [illegible] species of favouritism shown to [illegible] continued in the service, [illegible] ple. I simply, in this instance [illegible] ing Commanders. [illegible] at Leith from the [illegible] most easy [illegible] Commanders Morgan [illegible]

Appleby, and Shores, have held their appointments since 1831. Commanders Morgan, Hellard, Barton, and Appleby, took their several districts on the Coast of Kent and Sussex immediately the blockade vacated, and the pretence for continuing them was, that these officers had to organise the service. But how can this apply to Commander Shorer? for he was removed from Lymington some years afterwards. Thus, Sir, we find some officers privileged to hold their appointments for an indefinite period, whilst others are scrupulously superseded at the expiration of three years. The officers on the coasts of Kent and Sussex have had resources to prevent smuggling which no other officers ever have had, and yet they have not better succeeded than those officers on the coasts of Suffolk and Norfolk, both notoriously smuggling counties, with less than one-fourth the force, and much larger districts. This undue partiality is manifest, and has created a feeling of disgust; and if, as generally thought, that these favourite few are to be lingered on till they are all promoted, then, Sir, adieu to all zeal and activity to other officers; and it will be found that this last act of injustice will create that sullen discontent in the service generally which must be highly prejudicial to its best interests.

BALL PRACTICE AMMUNITION.

SIR,—There is still an improvement which (through the medium of your very useful paper) I should wish to recommend to the notice of the authorities who have the power to adopt it, if they should see the matter in the light in which it appears to me. I mean an alteration in the present expenditure of the Ball Practice Ammunition. If the adoption of my idea should at the outset be attended with a trifling expense, the outlay will eventually be repaid twofold—1st, in the saving of balls; 2ndly, in the undoubted improvement of the soldiers' firing. We all know that to each effective soldier 50 rounds of ball practice ammunition is allowed annually, which when once, as at present, consumed, renders no return, neither does the practice improve the soldier as intended; and it is to these two points I wish to draw your attention. It is now customary to expend the allowance by company practice, firing on each occasion, in some open situation, ten or more rounds. After two, or perhaps three rounds are fired with care and attention, the superintending officer becomes tired of the amusement as well as the men, and he, to get over the business, commences firing by files, sections, subdivisions, and company, till all is consumed, without, in fact, any improvement to the soldier. The remedy I should wish to propose is, to have built in every barrack a shooting gallery (you may give it any name you think more appropriate) of brick or stone; the end against which is to be placed the target, to be faced with lead of sufficient thickness to preserve the brick-work, to prevent the rebound of the ball, and to collect (which I suppose it would do) the whole of the balls, to be afterwards remoulded and made use of, confining the expenditure to the powder alone. The advantage I propose of having a shooting gallery within the barracks would be, that every morning 5 or 6 rounds, under careful superintendence, might be fired by 5 or six men—standing, kneeling, lying; and as this would be more a pleasant recreation than a labour, excellence in firing, I am willing to believe, is more likely to be attained. The difficulty frequently experienced (I might say always) of hitting upon a suitable place for this practice, often renders it a toil instead of a pleasure, from the distance men are obliged to march before they reach the ground.

Although the present target is very good, I should imagine, after a certain degree of excellence is attained, one of the size, shape, and appearance of a soldier would be the best practice for good shots; and, as a stimulus to such, two or three medals in each company for the best shots would, I think, have a desirable effect—the medals to be contested for annually, and on no better day (being a fighting one, and tending to keep it in remembrance) than the anniversary of Waterloo. All the brave men who fought, and who subsequently gained the proud distinction of a medal, are fast disappearing from the army, and on this ground (though not having the honour to be so decorated) I am anxious, even through this simple means, to perpetuate the glory of the British troops.

THE NEW DISTRIBUTION OF NAVAL PRIZE MONEY.

SIR,—In illustration of the remark made in your leading article of the 13th inst. "that by the recent arrangements for lowering the condition of the seamen, the Captains have won the sole officers," I request a statement by which to show how the Captain's or Commander's share of prize or bounty money is affected by the new proclamation for the distribution of 1837. The Captain, although [illegible] is not the only sufferer—the Admirals experience a reduction of half their former interest. This, however, appears the most equitable part of the alteration. [illegible] In large ships also, all the superior officers will experience a great reduction as compared with the former mode of sharing. Whether by that mode the disproportion were too great was fair subject for discussion; but it may as fairly be questioned whether the alterations now made be not too much on the other side, and that they may have so important effect hereafter upon those who bear all the responsibility, and also upon the officers commanding small ships, whose active and (as it may happen) voluntary co-operation, in the presence of larger ships, may be of importance; but who will thus experience the invidious distinction of only receiving one quarter of the already reduced share of a capture made even by his own ship, if in presence of a line-of-battle ship. Finally, it may justly be observed that, to this, as in most others of the recent naval alterations, our friend Tristram is but too correct in saying that they betray a want of due deliberation, and of inquiry into practical results.

Suppose the sum to be distributed is 4,000*l.*:—

UNITED SERVICE MUSEUM.

SIR,—The annual farce at the Thatched House Tavern, called a "Meeting of the Members of the United Service Museum," having taken place, and no sign of improvement being manifested by the self-elected council, it becomes necessary to address a few words to the subscribers generally, to point out how grossly the affairs of the institution are mismanaged, its interests neglected, and its funds misapplied. It is now, Sir, five years since the United Service Museum was founded, for the express purpose of disseminating professional knowledge among the officers of both Services, and during the last two years not one step has been taken in advance towards the attainment of those objects; a detailed account of the different acts of mismanagement would exceed the limits of this paper; they will be treated by abler pens than mine. Nevertheless there are one or two acts of so serious a character and so injurious to the interests of the society that I cannot suffer them to pass unnoticed. It has been publicly stated that an essential, and in my opinion a most invidious distinction has been made by the Council (and that I submit without sufficient authority) between those members who have subscribed 6*l.* at once and those who pay 10*s.* annually; it appears the Council have determined to invest the former class of subscriptions in Government securities for the benefit, not of the institution, but of the individual subscriber, the interest of which (amounting only to 4*s.*) going to the support of the institution, while the principal is reserved for the use of that class of subscribers, whereas those who pay ten shillings annually possess no such advantage, notwithstanding their subscriptions amount to the interest upon 15*l.*, which being all expended for the institution the advantages are enjoyed equally by both. Now, Mr. Editor, so arrangement carrying such flagrant injustice upon the face of it could hardly be the result of mistake; no, Sir, we must look for the cause a little deeper. It is manifestly a most unfair attempt on the part of the Council to force an accumulation of these said 6*l.* subscriptions, for what purpose is best known to themselves. It certainly cannot be for the interests of the institution, because the effect of such a measure would be the decreasing of revenue more than one half! We wish not to impute motives, but it certainly has a most suspicious appearance. There is another point, Mr. Editor, that requires to be cleared up; it may be in the recollection of members that on the examination of the Directors before the Committee of the House of Commons it was stated that the different articles in the Museum and model-room of the Institution were the property of individuals, but in the abstract of the account for 1834 it appears that upwards of 200*l.* is charged for stuffing birds. Will you, Mr. Editor, or some of your readers be so good as to inform us whether the birds so stuffed at the expense of the Institution still remain private property? It is high time, Sir, the members of the United Service bestir themselves, nor allow an institution possessing the elements of so much usefulness to be perverted to any other ends than those for which it was established. X.

THE STARVATION SYSTEM AT ADDISCOMBE.

SIR,—In reply to the complaints of your correspondent C. M. R. in your number of last week, I beg to offer the following observations upon the system of diet established at the Military Seminary, Addiscombe. For most of the following details you will recognise a scale of supply which has long existed and been found to answer well at the Royal Military College of Sandhurst. For Breakfast—1 pint of new milk, bread. Dinner—1 pound meat (beef or mutton, (best on beef, best weather mutton, prime piece); 1 pint of table beer (not small), puddings, potatoes, bread. Evening Meal—Tea and sugar, butter (one ounce each Cadet) bread. At Sandhurst the three former articles for the evening meal are, if required, paid for separately, while at Addiscombe they are included in the table of diet. Of bread and vegetables the quantity is unlimited. I am unable to offer any consolation for the loss of the sugar on the one side of the plum puddings, satisfied that the complaint is merely superficial! The allowance of meat throughout the British Army is per man three quarters of a pound daily. A pound, therefore, for a very young man may be presumed enough; more, in fact, if eaten, could only be eaten wastefully. By a wise and prudent attention to economy, from Addiscombe may, in all probability, be averted the impending fate of the sister establishment at Hertford. These are not days when the national sympathies are to be enlisted in the support of even useful public institutions. On their own resources (such is the spirit of the age) they must rely for existence, to render which durable every economical arrangement consistent with comfort must be scrupulously enforced. That the charge to the Cadets' friends (less now than at Sandhurst) should not be increased a shilling beyond what was necessary a strict revision of the domestic arrangements became necessary, by which superfluities have been retrenched, improvidence diminished, and comfort duly secured. Since the year 1832-3, Sandhurst has been independent of Parliamentary aid; and it is supposed that Addiscombe prospectively should, in the altered circumstances of the Company, be likewise independent of support from the Indian finances. In the present state of society, there can be little doubt that candidates for admission will be found with better claims than such as are excited by charitable institutions. T.

London, 14th March, 1836.

SIR,—Though not an habitual reader of your paper I was struck by some clever remarks in the last number upon the system of victualling pursued at Addiscombe. The writer is evidently a young author, but I think he deserves credit for the piquante and good-humoured sketch he has given of the grievance. He has, however, confined his remarks wholly to the hardships he and his comrades suffer, which, in my opinion, certainly deserve some consideration by the higher powers; at the same time he has forgotten the old and trite proverb, "love me, love my dog,"—I allude to the system now pursued towards the domestics of the Institution. I have myself been an eye-witness of the facts, and can state the amount of food supplied them daily. These men, who have the charge of the barrack-rooms, who wait in the dining-hall, and of whom a portion are attached to the Band, come to their work at six o'clock in the morning; they are employed in cleaning the rooms, lighting fires, making beds, &c., from that hour till nine, when they receive two ounces of cheese and one pint of small beer, this constitutes their breakfast. In the halcyon days of plenty, they were allowed lunch at eleven in the forenoon, but this is abolished, and from nine till two they subsist, chameleon-like, upon air. At two (the dinner hour) they have one pound of meat, and this is the only substance or meal throughout the day; at the same time remember, he has all the disadvantages of which your former correspondent has all the disadvantages of which your former correspondent complains with respect to that of the gentlemen Cadets. After this meal they fast from two till nine (7 hours!) at which hour they receive the same paltry pittance of cheese and swipes as in the morning. Only consider the hard labour these men undergo, from 6 o'clock A.M. to 9 P.M.; that, unlike the mental fatigue of the gentlemen for whom they wait, they earn their bread "by the sweat of their brow," and you must feel with me it is a hard case. I am not myself a sufferer, but having heard so much upon the subject, I really feel that your correspondent has done an act of injustice in omitting to mention this among other grievances of the "starvation system;" he may not be aware of it, and I doubt not that some others which might render the path more smooth are no less so. With the hope that these remarks may reach the eye of some one of them, I have committed them to paper for your consideration, and the insertion will be hailed with gratitude by the sufferers, and with every sense of obligation by

NEW SHIP TONNAGE MEASUREMENT.

SIR,—Whether the Committee, on whose report the Tonnage Measurement Act was constructed, employed themselves for five years, or only for five months, in preparing it, seems to have little connexion with its merits, of which the only criteria are the simplicity of its process, the clearness of its details, and the accuracy of its results. These points can only be determined by fair investigation or by repeated experiment, and not by such gratuitous assertions as those of your correspondent N., in your journal of the 12th inst.

If his object be to confute the statements of the Committee, in order to convince the legislature, and to enlighten the public, let him send to your journal the names of the vessels to which he alludes, and the ports to which they belong, together with those data or dimensions on which the calculations depend, as well as the authority on which he gives their real tonnage, and then we shall be able to appreciate the value of Mr. N.'s criticism. ## SATURDAY MARCH, 19, 1836.

Five Ships of the Line have been commissioned this week (see Appointments), and orders issued, to enter Seamen at the different sea-ports throughout the United Kingdom, the men being allowed either to engage for general service, or to make their selection of particular ships; and when the various advantages which the King's Service holds out considered, it may be reasonably assumed that there will be no great difficulty in raising the number of men required. The following ships are now in a state of forwardness, and will be commissioned if needed:—St. Vincent, Princess Charlotte, Bellerophon, and Gengel, of the Line; Pique and Madagascar, frigates at Portsmouth; Camperdown, Powerful, and Hercules, of the Line; Seringapatam, frigate, at Sheerness; and Impregnable, of the Line, at Plymouth. Captains Berkeley, Maitland, and Pigot, are spoken of for the next appointments; and it is currently reported that Vice-Admiral Sir C. E. Fleming, the present Port Admiral at Sheerness, will have the command of the ships composing the Squadron to be formed, although nothing has, we believe, been definitively determined on this head. We shall offer some observations upon the appointments, which appear to have been made with great impartiality and judgment, in our next.

It has never been our wish, nor is it now, to find fault with any order or regulation which emanates from the authorities governing the Army; on the contrary, we have always felt it our duty to bow to them with all due deference; but when we know that the very best intentioned persons sometimes err, we cannot but look upon a recent regulation (dated Office of Ordnance, August 12th, and published in our paper, No. 140) "in regard to Regimental Officers retaining their rooms in barracks while they live in lodgings," as bordering a little on the side of error, inasmuch as (even without benefiting one) it presses heavily upon a particular class of Officers, we mean the junior married Officers of the Army. We all know that none but married Officers live in lodgings, "at their own request," and do so very often much against their inclination, and simply as a relief from the want of accommodation, a single room being indeed far from comfortable; if an Officer, so situated, should be compelled to go to lodgings, it is, in our humble opinion, cruel to deprive him of the scanty allowance of coals and candles, granted to those only (by this regulation) residing in barracks, and adding the purchase of these articles to that of lodging, which is rarely to be had under 15*s.* per week; you may as well, and with a greater show of justice, deprive an Officer of his pay while on leave of absence.

We feel quite assured, if this order were respectfully brought to the consideration of the Master-General (of whose private worth, as well as Military experience, many Officers of the Army can bear ample testimony) a remedy would be applied. We ought here, in justice to Sir Hussey Vivian, to state, that the order in question is, though of a later date, of the same tenor with an order of long standing in force in the United Kingdom, but not always acted upon, and is now, we suppose, to ensure regularity, for the first time published to the Army.

If instead of saying to an Officer, obliged to live in lodgings, "you are not to be considered as having claim to the usual issues of coals and candles," that you are not only entitled to fuel and candles while in lodgings, but also entitled to give up your barrack accommodation to a married brother Officer, there would be some show of consideration. We cannot, in point of justice, see any reason why this should not be allowed, nor that married Officers should not be permitted to accommodate each other in a way which has in many instances heretofore occurred, viz. that the married Officer going into lodgings receiving from the married Officer remaining in barracks, for the extra accommodation thus afforded to him, a weekly sum equal to the lodging money which the Officer going into lodgings would be entitled to, if in lodgings at the public expense. We are not here advocating the cause of the married Field Officers of the Army, because they are abundantly provided for, having almost always three rooms (never less than two), with the advantages of kitchens, servants' rooms, and double allowance of coals and candles; but the interest of those who, whatever may be the number of their family or their limited means, are subject to be poked into one room, without even the use of a kitchen. We may be told by those, who never think or care for any person but themselves, that Officers have no business to marry; our answer is, that this has nothing to do with the subject, as we are not expressing a wish to take anything from the single Officers; we are only endeavouring to point out where the junior married Officers may be benefited without injury to the service or expense to the public.

There are a great many upright and well-judging persons in the Ordnance and other Departments of the State, who only require to have respectfully pointed out to them how and where they may do good, (without putting the public to expence) to secure their good offices; with this impression we will, without apology, say, that the following rules, if acted upon, would add to the comfort and respectability of the parties whom they are intended to benefit, viz:—

1. Married (or single) Officers, going into lodgings at their own expence, shall have the power to transfer their right of barrack accommodation to another married Officer residing in barracks.

2 Extra barrack accommodation shall, as a matter of course (so far as one room goes), be at the disposal of married Officers residing in barracks, seniority taking precedence; and should there be an excess beyond one extra room each, then Field Officers, if they wish it, shall be the first to lay claim. Upon any of the rooms that occupied being required, the junior Officer having extra accommodation shall be the first to vacate.

3. In every barracks there shall be one or two buildings erected with one flue, and four small kitchens to each, for married Officers, and, as there will be a present expense to Government, a rent shall be fixed upon each kitchen to be paid weekly by the married Officers occupying them, the amount of rent to be such as in ten years will pay off the first expense, and keep them afterwards in a perfect state of repair. Occupants of course being liable to barrack damage; in addition to such rent as may be fixed upon them.

Barrack-Masters alone to have the allotment of quarters, kitchens, &c. &c., to prevent the possibility of Commanding Officers providing for their own immediate favourites, to the certain introduction of bad feeling amongst Officers of a corps.

We shall, in conclusion, solicit the attention of that excellent Officer, the Master-General of the Ordnance, to a measure which we propose as a relief to a very deserving class of His Majesty's lieges, and certainly without disadvantage to any other.

We this day publish the sixth of a series of letters which have appeared in this journal, upon the subject of the Coast Guard Service, under the signature of Numa.

The statements set forth by our correspondent seem to have produced considerable sensation in the Naval Service, and we have received some scores of remonstrences, suggestions, &c., as regards this matter, which plainly proves that the feelings of Officers are sufficiently alive to the injury which the respectability of an honourable profession is hourly incurring from the degrading effects that our correspondent has exposed.

It has been inferred, that the Commissioners of Customs are to blame for continuing the regulations, and imposing others united to the condition of the persons previously employed on this service, after the duty had been undertaken by Naval Officers; that the Lords of the Admiralty, in whose keeping the honour of the Navy is reposed should not have permitted the acceptance of appointments, without taking care that nothing was exacted incompatible with the respectability of the Service; and, lastly, that the Officers themselves ought not to have held those appointments under the conditions imposed, but tendered their resignations, respectfully stating their reasons for so doing.

When the patronage, which the various appointments that the Coast Guard Service possesses, was surrendered by the Treasury, and transferred to the Admiralty, the Commissioners, who probably under such circumstances, had no very good feeling to the change, were not inclined to make any regulation in favour of appointments under the new arrangement, and, as the superior Officers were content to act along with them, the same observances, which were required from the class of persons in the situation of sitters of boats, of the character described by our intelligent correspondent, have been continued as regards commissioned officers occupying their berths. The Admiralty, no doubt, gladly availed themselves of the means of employing a considerable number of persons who were importunate for appointments, and also of keeping a large number of seamen available for contingencies, under the eye of their own officers

The intention was, therefore, a good one, and we have reason to believe that their Lordships have never been aware of the degradations to which those officers employed upon the Coast Guard Service have been exposed; and, from the continual applications for employment therein, it was impossible for them to imagine that the service was unpalatable.

We must, however, join in the opinion expressed in nine-tenths of the communications we have received on this subject, that the principal blame is with the officers themselves; who have held, and are now holding, appointments; because it is the duty of every member of an honourable profession to take care that the reputation of such suffers no injury in his individual person; and he should, when called upon to perform any act, which he considered derogatory to his rank, take means either to have the objectionable matter remedied, or to remove himself from the chance of its recurrence. In fact, officers should not apply for, or accept of these appointments until every objectionable condition was removed. That the whole system of the Coast Guard must now undergo enquiry and, (if Naval Officers are longer to continue in that service,) considerable revision is imperative. For our own parts, we have never been friendly to the employment of the Navy in guarding the revenue, and, as the intention of forming a reserve of seamen, available on emergencies, in the Coast Guard appears to be now abandoned, and the necessity for Naval Officers commanding them therefore diminished, it would give us infinite pleasure to hear that the whole concern had reverted to the Treasury, and that those officers of the Navy, who obtained employment therein, held their situations as civilians, without any reference to their Naval rank. We have been tempted to express ourselves strongly upon the ridiculous parade which has been exacted, as regards saluting, &c., but we cannot bring ourselves to treat such puerile pomposity with seriousness; neither are we aware of any authority which requires officers in this service to appear in the uniform of the Navy. It is pitiable to find those belonging to the profession lending themselves to any means which may tend to degrade it in the eyes of others, for the sake of a display of vanity which only calls for derision:—

We shall return to this subject when we have completed the publication of Numa's letters.

Considerable interest was excited in the House of Commons on the discussion of the Army Estimates for the current year; particularly that part which related to the motion of Sir William Molesworth (founded on our notice of the article in the London Review) "That the Foot Guards be placed on the same footing as the Troops of the Line." Our readers are already in possession of our sentiments respecting the praises so justly due to this portion of his Majesty's Forces; we hope, therefore, not to be misunderstood in saying that, in the arguments advanced by many of the Members, there did appear to us ample grounds for the introduction of some measures for the better regulation of the duties and privileges of the Foot Guards with reference to the Troops of the Line. When we consider the high character of the latter, —what they have achieved, the expatriation they sometimes suffer, and the toils, dangers, and vicissitudes in which they are exposed in the various climates of our extensive Colonies, it is impossible conscientiously to uphold a system that preponderates so much in favour of the one to the manifest injustice of the other.

Far be it from our wish to see the Monarch deprived of that state due to the Sovereign of these realms; neither would we desire to deprive the Guards of any advantages they may derive from the exercise of certain rights, provided such be confined to themselves; but when these extend to monopolies that affect the Army at large,—when it is known that "the Guards, consisting of 10,000 men, supply 70 Lieutenant-Colonels to the Army, and the Regiments of the Line, amounting to 90,000 men, do not supply more than 126,"—when, as in the present times, there are no Brevets except for the Guards and Artillery, and the proportion of Field and General Officers from the former exceed in number those from the Line, and when so many commands are filled by Officers from the Guards, it certainly does appear invidious that such undue preference should be given.

If it were feasible to put into execution the idea of the Honourable Member for Finsbury, we should recommend the elevation of the Line to the level of the Guards; or if it be deemed necessary that the Guards should enjoy extraordinary privileges, let them, like the Artillery, confine promotions and commands to their own body.

It has been observed that an Officer entering the Service does so with a full understanding of the advantages and disadvantages of the particular branch in which he engages; but surely it cannot be contended for, that because a system is vicious, it ought to be persevered in? Many a young man enters the Army from necessity, or by the express desire of his friends; and notwithstanding he is aware of the abuses that exist, naturally looks forward to a period when a more liberal and enlightened policy will correct them. And as for the argument that it would be unjust to deprive him of the privileges for which he virtually stipulated when selecting the Service in which he was wishful to engage, it is, in our opinion, rather too general and too much strained for the occasion; besides, it must be remembered that the motion of the Honourable Baronet went to recommend a compensation to the individuals thus circumstanced. But, as we have said before, we are not advocates for ultra measures, or excessive reductions; we would desire to see the privileges of the Guards confined within themselves, and, where it cannot be effected otherwise, a gradual and prospective change.

Upon the very extraordinary assertion of some Members that no jealousy exists between the Line and the Guards, an assertion so much at variance with the opinion of the Army in general, it is scarcely necessary for us to make an observation, otherwise than to express regret that a fact so notorious should have been at all alluded to, and surprise that, having been mentioned, it should have been so positively denied.

We will, in conclusion, submit the following statements from the debate:—

"After deducting interest at 4 per cent. for the price of his Commission, a Captain and Lieutenant-Colonel in the Guards receives only 180*l.* per annum!!! A Lieutenant and Captain, 50*l.*!!" These calculations are amusing enough to the initiated.

Great praise is due to Lord Howick for his fair and explicit statement of the Estimates, and the views of his Majesty's Government in regard to the Army.

Whilst the appointment of a new Commander-in-Chief at Madras is still pending, we avail ourselves of the opportunity of again urging the claims of the Company's Officers. It has long been a theme of complaint by King's Officers that they are excluded from the Staff of the Army in India, and we have always considered their complaints well grounded; but whilst we acknowledge their claims, we must not forget those of the Company's Officers, which we consider to be paramount in the disabilities under which they labour, and most especially so by their exclusion from a situation to which, in all Services, it is the pride of every Officer to aspire, viz. to COMMAND; and this, we consider, more than counterbalances the injustice inflicted on King's Officers. Let us, however, investigate the respective claims of each, and we will leave it to the impartiality of our readers to decide on them.

The Indian Army is composed of upwards of 220,000 Company's troops, and about 20,000 King's troops, as auxiliaries. The Staff of Divisions and Stations, as well as Political Appointment held by Military men, are reserved exclusively for Officers of the Company's Service, and of this it is that King's Officers complain. As the two are doing the same duties together, draw the same pay, and fight in the same cause, we cannot see the justice of withholding from them a fair proportion of those situations, under the restrictions necessary for a proper performance of the duties,—a knowledge of the castes, religious prejudices, customs, manners, and languages of the Natives being indispensable.

We acknowledge the hardship of this, but, on the other hand, in the three most honourable and lucrative appointments belonging to the Indian Army (viz. the commands of the Bengal, Madras, and Bombay Armies), a due proportion of the Head-Quarter Staff, and an undue proportion in the commands of Divisions and Stations, are given to King's Officers.

Which, we ask, has the most reason to complain? although the majority of Company's troops is as eleven to one, the three Armies are commanded by King's Officers, and they have an equal number of Generals on the Staff with those of the Company's Service at the Madras and Bombay Presidencies. Considering, too, that to know how to command and secure the confidence of Sepoys, an Officer must, by previous service with them, be familiarised with their characters, and that none can have had such good opportunities and long experience as Company's Officers! considering also that they belong to the Army of the State by which they are employed and paid, and the degradation Officers must feel in being considered ineligible to command troops of their own Service, and the injury that Service suffers in not being commanded by its own Officers;—we must confess that not only the Officers but the soldiers of the Company's Army have by far the worst of it.

We shall be glad to see these barriers by which both Services are rendered dissatisfied withdrawn, and a fair concession made to each in the several appointments, by which justice would be done to all, and great benefit conferred on the efficiency of the Indian Armies. The present is a most cr asl time; tbe Officers nnd soldiers of tha Indian rmy are in an alerming state of excitemaat and istrost; and the Native population bave suf- iiontly evinced thet this is not the time to trifle ith their feeliugs (eithar ia the Civil or Militery ministration of the oountry), by the assassina- ns that have but receatly been attempted, and two instances perpetrated, which should be re- ived by tho authorities at home as e warning ainst the dangeroas policy of making the most portant posts connacted with the Goverament the country avaaues of Ministerial patronage privata fevour.

We have heard several Officers named fur the csant command ot Madras, and amongst others r T. Raynell and Sir J. Nicholls. These Officers ving served as Gaaerals of Divisions witb the dien Army, we should he glad to see eitber of om nominated were there aot Officers nf the mpeny'a Army equally distinguisbed, whuse g service with that Army renders their claims ester, and fitness less dispatable.

Sir John Doveton, of tho Madras Cavalry, has, hear, been proposed by tbe Court of Directors iose appointmont, we are confideat, would giva ueral sotisfaction both to the Army and the ate.

Some communications have of late beea made to from Plymouth, on the subject of the system irsued towards the Marines who ore taken ill in e Marino Barracks at Stonehouse, nnd who, stead of being sent immediately to tho Naval ospital, whicb is bat two or three hundred thoms distent, are first placed ia what is styled tbe Infirmary" in the barracks, where they are ept until the disease with whicb they are afflicted ecomes daugerous, and then, at the eleventh hour, hen death seems to he inevitable, the poor fel- ws are, it is etnted, hurried uff in the most in- man meuner to tbe Navol Hospital, in order, as is believed, to sava the repntation of tbe Marine firmary, thet ie, tbat it may he said that no men ve died there within such and such a period! If is be the fact, as it has been represented to us sitively tu be, we consider that the Lords of the lmiralty shonld, without e day's delay, cause a orough investigasion into all the circumstances; l as one positive case is worth a huadred ime- nary onee, we will name that which occurred on e 8th instant, to which nur nttention has been re particularly drawn, when aa uohsppy man s conveyed into the Hospital from the Marine firmary at about mid-day, then, evidently, to eli no saw him, in a dying state, end he breetbed his t before five o'clock that evening. There appears nething so cruel end so unnaturel is removing human being from a bed of sickaess, when tha ness under which he is suffering has nearly ached its fatal termination, that we are auraitouly quires to he thus alluded to to put au end to so stly complained of n practice; and as wa would t, on any consideration, be guilty of misrepre- nting even the most trifling fnct, we would ear- stly suggest that the Surgeons of tbe Royal aval Hospital at Plymouth should he immedietely lled upon to state whether that which we bave ow assorted be true or false. If tbe svocatious of e Surgeon of the Marine Infirmary at Plymouth bligo him ta spend a large part of his time sewhere, in a distant town, as we have beea told is e case, sure the Assistaut-Surgeon ought to take care that the patients under his treatment are sent to the Naval Hospital at an early stage of thair diseasas, if they ba sent at all; and, moreovar, that he should himself accompany each patient there, is ordar to state fully snd clearly tbe matter of the complaint, as is uniformly done with seamea from our ships of war. This remark leads us to put a few queries, and which we hape their Lordships at the Admiralty Board will command to be fully and satisfactorily answered by all the parties concerned, as well tbose holouging to the Mariae Infirmary as the Officers end Attaadants also of the Naval Hospital, who saw the unfortunate man to whom we have alluded, un Tuesday the 8th instant.

First, thea, we would ask

How long had this patient been ill? And had tbe Surgeon of the Marines seen him daily during the period of his being in the Infirmary? or, How often hnd he seen him?

Secondly; By whose order was this men conveyed to the Naval Hospital, and did tbe Surgeon see him himself on that day, the 8tb instant? or when did he last see him?

Thirdly; Did the Assistant Surgoon see thie patient on tbo day of his removel to tbe Naval Hospital? and how often was he accustomed to visit him in the Infirmary during his illness? and, further, why did he not accompany this man to the hospital, in urder to etate the particulars of his disease?

Lastly; Who wrote "the case" which was sent with this sick man, on the 8th instant, to the Nnval Hospital? Was it written by tbe Surgeon, by the Assistant-Surgeon, or was it, in point of fact, as has been represented to us, writtan by a Serjeant!!

These queries wo consider must he fully aad distinctly answered, or this question may become the subject of Parliamentary inquiry.

For humanity's sake, as well as fur economy, we tbink somo better erraagement should forthwith be effected as regarde the Marines, who may be taken ill in the barrecks of each of our ports, and that they should at once he sent to the Naval Hospital, whore far more accommodatioa caa be afforded than in a barrack infirmary.

Our sole object ia submitting these remarke is, with the hope uf effecting a public goud, for as we are wholly unknown to aach and all of the parties alluded to, we cannot possibly bave the slightest personal feeling in the metter; aud, if we ehauld aaintentionally have been led into any errors in the statement which we hava made, we shall gladly hasten to correct them; but, relying as we do on the strict impartiality of the correapoadent, who has furnished us with the principal points on this question, we must conaluda our pbservations by repeating, thet we hope and believe the Admiralty will at once, on learning tha facts, cause a thorough investigation ia to every circumstance connected with this affair.

Lieutenant-General Sir James Lyon, than whom a more gellant, respected, or deserving Officer is not to he found in tha British Army, has, for the FOURTH time, been appointed to a Command. This is another of the instanaes of exclusivism,—tha system we noticed in a recent number, and whiah is so reasonably depreaated by the whole Service. It would be invidious in us to single from tho list of General Officers one or many of equal competency and equal claims to this command, but to all who have any knowledge of the services of the Generals of the British Army, it is too evident this appointment is an injury to several meritorious Officers who are constantly petitioning for employ. With all our respect for the gallant and amiable Nobleman at tha head of tbe Army, we cannot forego these comments. Lord Hill wa earnestly hope will look to a more general distribution of future appointments.

We have not room for the Report of the Committee on Corporal Punisbment in the Army; it recommends what we have always advocated, that Soldiers should be encouraged by distinctions and rewards, and that no expense within reasonable bonads should stand in the way of providing for the Soldier's comfort, or of awarding him sufficient pension for good conduct. The Committee are unanimous in opinion, that there is no adequate substitute for the present practice of corporal punisbmsat in tbe British Army.

We can only this week call attention to a letter in our columns, respecting the mismanagement of the affairs of tbe "United Service Museum." Why do not the Subscribers convene a meeting, snd put an end to the absurditles of this ill directed institution. It might be rendered of great advantage to tha service, whereas it is now contamptible.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has announced the intention of Government to consolidate the collection of the Stamp Acts into one systematic code, effecting great reductions, and substituting an ad valorem duty for the present system, which presses unequally upon the less wealthy classes of the community. But the most important announcement was that respecting the reduction contemplated on tbe stamp duty on newspapers. The reduction of this tax to one penny, allowing newspapers to circulate as now, free of postage, is the mode proposed by Government. It is clear, that were the tax entirely repealed a postage must be substituted. Tbe discussion was postponed till the financial statement of the year shall be laid before the public, when it was intimated that the sense of the House would be taken upon the question of the reduction or total abolition of this duty.

The Benevolent Society of St. Patrick.—On Thursday afternoon a very numerous company of the patrons of this society dined at the Freemasons' Tavern, in celebration of the fifty-third anniversary of its institution. The Earl De Grey acted as president on the occasion.

The New Groats.—The fourpenny silver pieces have been issued to the bankers, and are getting into circulation. The coin is neatly executed, and will be useful in preventing the incumbrance af halfpence. The obverse of the coin bears the head of his Majesty, and the reverse the figure of Britannia.

At Bow-street on Tuesday, James Barnes, one of the Superintendents at the General Post Office, was committed to take his trial on six different charges—the first for stealing two letters, found in his possession when taken into custody, and the other charges relating to the embezzlement of various letters and small sums of money received by him, as postage upon letters sent by mistake to the Foreign Office, instead of being forwarded for inland delivery.

Col. Sir John Harvey, the newly appointed Governor of Prince Edward's Island, has been presented with a splendid piece of plate by the constabulary magistrates and officers of Ulster. No successor will be appointed to Sir John, as it is expected the new bill will come into effect on 1st July, when Col. Shaw will be sole Inspector General of Ireland, with Majors Warburton and Miller as Deputies.

The Imaum of Muscat.—The magnificent present made by this Indian Prince to our Sovereign of a ship of war, carrying 74 guns, is a circumstance too remarkable not to make all the details relating to it acceptable to the public. This vessel, which is to be called the Imaum, at the King's express desire, was in the first instance named the Liverpool, and, according to the description of nautical men, is one of the most splendid sea boats ever constructed. Her burden is 1,052 tons, and she was built at Bombay in 1826, by the E. India Company's builders, of the best teak, and in all respects on a similar scale to the same class of vessels in the R. Navy. She was brought to England with her entire masts and yards by Capt. Cargan, six officers, 35 European seamen, and 180 Lascars. The report of these officers states that she sails remarkably well, and possesses every good quality that can be expected from a ship of that class. Besides the vessel itself, and all its equipment, the Imaum has presented to the King two horses and two mares of the finest Arabian breed. One of the horses is perfectly black, without a single white hair, and the other is as pure a white or cream colour. The black Arabian has the property, it is said, of going without water for 12 or 15 days, which is considered the greatest proof by the Arabs of pure blood. One of the mares foaled early on the voyage, and the colt of course became the pet and plaything of the sailors during the remainder of it. The account given of the Imaum himself is, that he is a very handsome and fair man, about 42 years of age. He has been 24 years at the head of his government, to which he succeeded on the death of his uncle, and has managed, by judicious measures, to consolidate his power. He has a standing army of 20,000 men to defend his territories in Arabia and Africa, and has twelve sail of ships of war, from 64 to 10 guns. He has been constant in his attachment to the British, and in person accompanied both our expeditions to the Persian Gulf against the pirate states in that quarter, on which occasions Sir W. Keir Grant and Sir L. Smith, who commanded those expeditions, received great assistance from him. His liberality to the British nation is unbounded; for on the arrival of any British ship of war at his port of Muscat, he supplies them with water and fuel gratis, or any other refreshment that there may be a difficulty in procuring. He is extremely popular with his subjects, who consider his rule very mild, though highly energetic in his intercourse with other States. He gives much of his time to his Navy, and expends the greater part of his revenue on that branch of the Service. His Majesty has expressed himself much gratified with this present. It appears that she entered Portsmouth harbour on the 5th inst., when, the moment she anchored, the Britannia saluted the Imaum's flag with 21 guns, which the Liverpool immediately returned; and at 8 o'clock on Sunday morning, the British ensign was hoisted on board the Liverpool, and the ship delivered over by Capt. Cargan to Sir F. Maitland, and by his Majesty's commands (in compliment to his Highness of Muscat) she is named the Imaum. It may be a circumstance worthy of notice that the Liverpool is the first ship of war belonging to an Indian Prince that ever rounded the Cape of Good Hope; and is an event that may be regarded as opening the door to an extensive commercial intercourse with his Highness's dominions in Arabia, Africa, and Persia, which, strange to say, is little known or appreciated by this country, but of which the Americans are not so ignorant, as most appear from the fact of there being, on 9th Nov. last, two American frigates in Bombay harbour, where they had just arrived from Muscat, after endeavouring to establish a commercial treaty with his Highness the Imaum.

Plymouth, March 12.—The citadel has been visited by one of the most awful dispensations of Providence that ever befel the town or neighbourhood. The house of the Fort Major, Watson, was last night consumed by fire, and the Major, with two of his daughters, have perished in the flames. The family, consisting of the Major, his two sons, three daughters, Mr. Pode (a friend), and a servant, retired to bed about one o'clock. The first alarm was given by the maid servant, who had escaped from the burning house about five in the morning, and was standing outside the house calling to her master to follow her. The eldest son, Mr. John Watson (who is blind), and Mr. Henry, escaped by dropping from their bedroom windows. Mr. Pode assisted Miss Watson to escape the same way, and then followed himself. It is supposed that on hearing the alarm the Major went to the window, which he must have discovered in flames, and [illegible] his bed room he found that in the same way. The two daughters who were burnt slept in the bed room on the second floor. One was 22 and the other 16. By half-past 7 the house was thoroughly consumed, nothing but the bare walls and fire-places remaining. Every particle of the household furniture is destroyed. Speedy measures were adopted to discover the remains of the Major and his two daughters. The bodies were found in the underground cellar, and it is supposed that the fire had previously made such havoc in the flooring of the ground and first story, that the Major must have been precipitated with little interruption from his bed room into the cellar. The bodies are mere shapeless cinders; the heads are consumed. It is said that the fire was caused by the servant having put some wood to dry on the hobs of the parlour-grate before she went to bed. Major Watson was of Scotch origin, about 70 years of age, of strong muscular frame, and very tall, being more than six feet high. He had sat in company with Burns, the poet, in the Highlands, and with his present Majesty when in the West Indies. He was of a kind, amiable, and affable disposition, and having resided in the town between twenty and thirty years, his blandness of manner had endeared him to numerous friends. His loss, and that of his daughters, in a way so sudden and lamentable, has thrown a gloom over the town, equalled only by the visitation of some national calamity.

Henin, the brave fisherman of Boulogne, who made himself so remarkable on the occasion of the wreck of the Amphitrite, has recently distinguished himself by a fresh instance of extraordinary courage. On the night of 27th Feb last, perceiving that his boat would inevitably be dashed to pieces on the rocks of Ambleteuse, he threw himself into the sea, bearing with him one of his fellow sailors, whom he safely landed. Touched by the prayers of two others, who implored his assistance, he again braved the danger of the tempest, and succeeded in bringing off a second. Nor would he abandon the third to certain death. He again plunged into the waves, strove with increased energy, and reached the vessel at the moment she was sinking. For the third time he was successful! The Société des Naufrages, in Paris, have opened a subscription in his favour.

The Marquis of Conyngham (the Lord Chamberlain) has granted a license to Mr. Rayner for the Strand Theatre, similar to those enjoyed by the Adelphi and Olympic.

Col. Le Marchant (a Major in the British Army), serving as Adjutant-General in the Auxiliary Legion in Spain, has written a letter, dated Vittoria, March 4, on the subject of the reports respecting the conduct of those troops. We have only space for some extracts. "The troops as they landed at Santander were at once thrown into convents, when the ill-advised measure of giving each man his 2*l.* bounty was first put in trial. All who know English soldiers, and those who have served in our own army, where system and order is brought to such admirable perfection, well know the difficulties of restraining men when they have money at command. How much greater must it not, then, have been for us, without experienced officers of companies, and with still more inexperienced non-commissioned officers, to stem the torrent of dissipation. Yet such was effected; and after the lapse of a week order and regularity were established. Since that period we have had embarkations, marches, and, I believe, as many trials to contend against as any army of late years can speak of. Yet have I invariably seen the character of the British soldier as fully marked by our young recruits as it is to be found in any of his Majesty's regiments; and so far from the cat being seen going at all times, and poor wretches, as so pitifully described by our writing friends, to be seen reeling under the unmerciful lash, I have no hesitation in saying that the amount of crime and punishment in the Legion has been considerably less than I have known in garrisons in England, composed of two or three thousand men; not ten general Courts-Martial have been held in the Legion; not one man has suffered death; and in not one of these instances were more than 200 lashes inflicted. The Legion, on the 16th, repulsed the enemy; and on that evening, with those of the 17th and 18th, bivouacked on the heights of Arbulo under as severe a frost as is experienced in England in the month of January. Yet, notwithstanding the extreme cold and privation to which the troops were exposed, not a murmur was heard, and I most unhesitatingly advance, that during the week's operation, before the enemy, the conduct of the soldiers of the Legion, both before the enemy and under severe privations, was well worthy of emulation to armies that can boast of a longer existence than nine months, as is the case with the British Auxiliary Legion, who, though often and severely pressed by sickness and other painful causes, yet remain to show what may be done by men who, stigmatised as mercenaries, will in the field remember what is due to the name of England."

On Thursday Prince Ferdinand of Portugal arrived at Kensington Palace. His Royal Highness was accompanied by his father and brother, the Princes Ferdinand and Augustus of Saxe Coburg and the Prince of Leiningen. At four o'clock the Duchess of Kent and the Princess Victoria left Kensington for Windsor Castle. In the carriage with their Royal Highnesses were the Prince of Portugal and Prince Ferdinand. They were followed by the Prince Augustus and the Prince of Leiningen, the Portuguese Minister, and the rest of the suites. A grand dinner was given by his Majesty to the Royal party, and in the evening there was a very numerous and splendid party. The entertainment was given in St. George's Hall.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, 14th March.—The Marquis of LONDONDERRY adverted to the Spanish correspondence respecting which he had given notice of a motion. The document which the Noble Viscount had stated on a former day was lost, had since been supplied. Under all the circumstances he wished to withdraw his motion for the present, and fix it for a future day. Lord MELBOURNE had never heard a more insufficient ground assigned for the postponement of a motion. The Duke of WELLINGTON wished the Noble Marquis to state specifically the object of his motion. The question he had raised affected him (the Duke of Wellington) and his colleagues of last year as much as it did the present Government. The Marquis of LONDONDERRY had only meant to complain of the present Government that it had not followed up the policy of his noble friend; he meant to cast no imputation on the late government, and withdrew his notice.

TUESDAY, 15th March.—The Bishop of EXETER moved that a select committee be appointed to inquire what progress the new system of education in Ireland has made towards effecting the main purpose for which it was established. Lord MELBOURNE resisted the motion, as he could not see that any good was likely to result from the appointment of the proposed committee. The Earl of HARROWBY supported it. Lord PLUNKET opposed it. The Earl of WINCHELSEA spoke in favour of the motion, and considered the course pursued by Government was subverting the Protestant interest, in fulfilment of certain conditions made with an individual elsewhere, to obtain his support. Lord MELBOURNE most distinctly denied the existence of any of the supposed conditions with the eminent individual alluded to. The Bishop of EXETER expressed extreme satisfaction at hearing this statement, and withdrew his motion.

THURSDAY, 17th March.—Lord LYNDHURST brought in two Bills—the one for amending the laws relating to the transfer of real property, the other a Bill for amending the laws respecting executors and administrators.

FRIDAY, 18th March.—Royal assent was given by commission to several Bills.—The Earl of ABERDEEN brought forward the subject of the war in Spain, and moved that there be laid on the table copies or extracts of the correspondence with his Majesty's Minister at Madrid, showing the endeavours the Government had made to put an end to the sanguinary atrocities now going on in Spain, and of the remonstrances which had been made to her Catholic Majesty for that purpose. Lord MELBOURNE agreed to the production of the correspondence.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 14th March.—The Bridlington Pier Bill was lost by a majority of 23.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL announced that a Bill for the abolition of imprisonment for debt similar to that of last year would shortly be brought forward in the House of Lords.—The House went into committee on the Municipal Reform Bill. The first 41 clauses were agreed to after some discussion. The 42d was postponed, and the House resumed.—The Better Stealing Bill (for Scotland) was read a third time and passed.—Mr. POULETT THOMSON obtained leave to bring in a Bill to amend the Factory Act.—Lord PALMERSTON said a tariff had been issued by the Portuguese government which would prove very injurious to our trade. Negociations were pending for a new treaty of commerce with Portugal. Should these fail, it would be for Ministers to consider the expediency of withholding commercial advantages from any power which that power would not concede to us in return.—The Slave Trade (Spanish) Bill was read a third time after some discussion.

TUESDAY, 15th March.—The Great Northern Railway Bill was read a second time.—Sir J. HOBHOUSE brought up the report of the committee on Mr. Barry's plan for the New Houses of Parliament. Mr. HAWES objected to the course pursued, as he considered it the final selection of a particular plan. Sir J. HOBHOUSE said it had only been decided that an estimate should be formed of the expense Mr. Barry's plan would occasion. Sir R. PEEL warmly approved Mr. Barry's plan, both for its external beauty and its internal convenience. The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER declared that the commissioners, till the seal of the letter which accompanied Mr. Barry's plan was broken, and which was after their decision had been come to, were not aware whose plan it was. An address to his Majesty, praying him to direct inquiries in conformity with the report was then agreed to.—Lord MAHON inquired whether the negociations between Spain and her former colonies had been broken off. Lord PALMERSTON had reason to hope they would be brought to a satisfactory termination.—Sir R. PEEL wished to know if it was true that the wife or mother of Cabrera, an officer in the service of Don Carlos, had been shot by order of an officer in the pay and commission of the Spanish government. Lord PALMERSTON feared the account was correct. The act was stated to have been committed by way of retaliation, in consequence of the wives of four officers of the Queen's army having been put to death.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER opened at length his statement of a measure which has been prepared for consolidating the stamp laws, which at present are dispersed in 150 different statutes, into one Act. Various changes and reductions are proposed. The newspaper stamp duty is to be reduced to one penny. Mr. E. L. BULWER, though he could have wished the newspaper stamp duty taken off altogether, accepted the liberal reduction proposed. Mr. WAKLEY was not satisfied with it, nor did he think it would satisfy his constituents. A resolution, moved by the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER on the subject, was agreed to.—Mr. HANDLEY brought forward a resolution to repeal the Excise duty on soap, and to augment the Customs' duties on foreign tallow. The motion was supported by Col. Sibthorp, Mr. Hawes, and Mr. Pelham; but opposed by Mr. P. Thomson, Mr. F. Baring, Mr. Warburton, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir R. Peel, and Mr. Curteis. On a division it was lost by a majority of 70.

THURSDAY, 17th March.—The Medway Navigation Bill was read a second time, there being a majority of 9 in its favour on a division.—The third reading of the Macclesfield Small Debts Bill was carried by a majority of 61. After this a new conversation arose on some of its provisions. A number of divisions took place on motions for an adjournment of the question, and in the end one was carried for an adjournment of the House, which in consequence rose before 8 o'clock.

FRIDAY, 18th March.—The Metropolitan Horseferry Suspension Bridge Bill was read a second time, after a long debate and a division.—Lord STANLEY moved that the Macclesfield Small Debts Bill do now pass. After a long discussion the House divided, when there appeared, for the motion, 203; against it, 56, majority, 147.—Mr. HARDY gave notice that on Tuesday he should call the attention of the House to the Carlow Election affair.—Mr. S. CANNING called the attention of the House to the military occupation of Cracow, which he complained of as an outrageous violation of an existing treaty. It called forth the strongest reprobation from every part of the House. Sir H. Verney, Mr. O'Connell, Mr. Hume, and Lord D. Stuart, severely commented on the conduct of "the protecting Powers." "The plundering protectors," Mr. O'Connell remarked, "was their proper title." Lord J. RUSSELL did not consider a strong expression of the opinion of the House ought to be made on the subject, unless it was intended to follow up that expression with something more than words.—Lord HEWICK, in answer to a question from Mr. Hume, stated that it was his intention to bring forward a motion founded on the report of the committee on the subject of flogging in the Army, on the first Wednesday after the Easter recess.

ADMIRALS SIR SIDNEY SMITH, SIR GRAHAM MOORE, AND SIR DAVID MILNE.

[WE take the following from the Courier, and upon which we have only time and space to remark that it will hasten our promised digest and commentary upon the Bath and Guelphic Orders.—ED.]

SIR SIDNEY SMITH.—1777 to 1781—Midshipman in the Sandwich and Greyhound. 1781—Lieut. in the Aloide, Adm. Graves's flag ship in his action with De Grasse off the Chesapeake. 1782—Lieut. in Lord Rodney's victory; and made Commander in the Fury sloop. 1783—Post Capt., commanding Nemesis, paid off at the peace. 1788—In service of Sweden, greatly distinguished in battles with Russian fleet; received from Gustavus, Grand Cross of Order of the Sword. Knighted by George III. 1793—Serving as a volunteer in Turkish navy, and on the commencement of British war with France, brought off a number of English seamen from Smyrna, and with them joined British fleet at Toulon. Lord Hood, the Commander-in-Chief, having accepted his offer to burn the French fleet and arsenal at Toulon, he accomplished this hazardous undertaking notwithstanding obstacles of the most discouraging nature, and the treachery of the Spaniards. 1794—Returned to England with Lord Hood's despatches of the evacuation of Toulon. Appointed to Diamond frigate. 1795—Eminently distinguished under Sir J. B. Warren, in enterprises on the French coast—destroyed a French frigate. 1796—Engaged in reconnoitring expeditions on the French coast; taken prisoner in one of his boats off Havre, and strictly confined in the tower of the Temple at Paris. 1798—Escaped after a series of romantic adventures. In the autumn appointed to Le Tigre, 80 guns, and appointed, with his brother, joint Plenipotentiary at Constantinople, to counteract the operations of Buonaparte against the Turkish government. 1799—Arrived in Le Tigre off Alexandria, and proceeded to St. Jean d'Acre, where he landed with the crews of the ships under his command, and successfully defended the breach, though practicable for fifty men a-breast, and forced Buonaparte to retreat. Sir S. Smith's despatches relating the details, are the best written and the most interesting in the language. The Grand Seignior presented Sir Sidney with an aigrette and sable worth 25,000 piastres and conferred on him the Order of the Crescent. Sir S. Smith's heroic conduct was noticed in the King's Speech from the throne. The thanks of the Legislature were voted to him, and pension of 1,000*l.* per ann. The city of London presented him with its freedom. 1800—Sir Sidney acceded to the Convention between the French Gen. Kleber, and the Grand Vizier, for the evacuation of Egypt, which was not carried into effect. 1801—Commanded a detachment of seamen and marines in battle of Alexandria, and was wounded, and his horse shot under him. Sir Sidney returned to England with the despatches of the campaign. 1803—Commanded the Antelope as Commodore of a squadron on the French coast. 1804—Col. of Marines. 1805—R.-Adm. 1806—Commanded the Pompee and a squadron off Palermo. Dislodged French garrison from Capri, and received Grand Cross of the Order of St. Ferdinand and Merit from the reigning Queen. 1807—Accompanied V.-Adm. Duckworth on the expedition to Constantinople and in forcing the passage of the Dardanelles. Returned to England and appointed to command a squadron off the Tagus, blockading the coast. Proceeded in the Foudroyant to South America to assume chief command. 1808—Created a Knight Grand Cross of the Tower and Sword of Portugal. 1809—Returned to England in the Diana frigate, and promoted to be V.-Admiral. 1812-13-14—In the Tremendous, second in command of the fleet in the Mediterranean; afterwards in the Hibernia. 1814—Returned to England. 1815—Invested as K.C.B. at the Elisee Bourbon, at Paris, by the Duke of Wellington.

SIR GRAHAM MOORE.—1790—A Lieut. 1793—Commanded sloop of war. 1794—Post Capt., commanding Syren in North Sea. 1795—Assisted at capture of ten vessels escorted by armed brig and lugger, protected under a battery. 1796—Commanded Melampus frigate of 42 guns, destroyed corvette of 18 guns, and captured Cormorant of 20 guns. 1798—Captured French corvette of 22 guns, and off coast of Ireland, without resistance, the Resolute of 40 guns. 1803—Commanded Indefatigable of 46 guns, ordered before declaration of war to cruize for the Spanish treasure ships from South America, and with Medusa, Amphion, and Lively, captured them—great prize money. 1807—Detached in the Marlborough from the fleet off Lisbon, to escort Royal Family of Portugal to Brazil; invested by Prince Regent of Portugal with the Order of the Tower and Sword. 1809—Employed in Marlborough under Sir R. Strachan at Flushing, and charged with destruction of basin and arsenal at Walcheren. 1811—Com. Royal Sovereign yacht. 1812—Appointed to the Chatham, 74, and subsequently served as Captain of the Channel fleet—promoted to be Rear-Admiral. 1815—K.C.B. 1818—One of the Lords of the Admiralty. 1820—Commanded the Rochfort, and assumed the command in the Mediterranean—promoted to be Vice-Admiral.

Comment upon the details of the professional career of these gallant officers, which have now been fairly laid before our readers, is unnecessary. We have no desire to underrate the valuable services of Sir G. Moore, who has claims to the Grand Cross of the Bath far better founded than those of many of the officers who have already obtained that decoration. But we maintain that Sir G. Moore's services neither entitle him to pass over Sir Sidney Smith, nor many other officers whom we could name, and whom accident probably led to be placed in situations where they had opportunities of distinguishing themselves more remarkably than fell to the lot of Sir G. Moore. That we may not be suspected of writing at random, we may be permitted, in two words, to allude to Sir David Milne as an officer who ought to have been promoted to the first class before many officers whose names appear on it, had merit alone been attended to. "Pelmam qui meruit ferat."

Sir D. Milne was in the Canada in Lord Rodney's great action in 1782. He was Lieut. in the Blenheim in Capt. Faulkner's famous action with La [illegible] in 1795, and immediately made Commander. In [illegible] he was promoted to be Post-Captain, and [illegible] to the Alarm frigate. In 1796 he [illegible] Pique frigate, and, in company with the Jason [illegible] took La Seine, of 42 guns, and 310 men, [illegible] 170 re killed, and 100 wounded. Being appointed to La ine, he, in 1800, captured the Vengeance, French gate, of 52 guns and 326 men. The action lasted for o days, and was considered by naval men the most lliantly fought, during the war, between single ships. ding advanced to the rank of Rear-Admiral, in 1814, was appointed second in command at the battle of giers, in 1816, and sustained the brunt of the action, nself wounded, and 210 men killed and wounded—the eatest loss ever sustained on board a British man-of- r. Lord Exmouth was created a Viscount on ac- unt of the success which attended the attack. He sent me his despatch by Sir David Milne, "from whom I ve" (he wrote) "received during the whole service en- sted to me, the most cordial and honourable support. rust I have obtained from him his esteem and regard, d I regret I had not sooner been known to him."

THE LATE CHARLES DIBDIN.

THE anniversary of the birth-day of this distinguished autical Lyrist, was celebrated at the British Coffee- use, on Tuesday last, when it was stated that Dibdin s born at Southampton, on the 15th, 1745. "On is day of the month, then, 91 years ago," said the hairman (Mr. T. Williams, son of the late Capt. R. W., o was with Lord Rodney on the celebrated 12th of pril), "Providence thought fit to send into the world a eat extraordinary genius, who, for the space of nearly lf a century (for Dibdin began to write sea songs at s age of 16), continued to amuse and delight the Eng- h nation by the sole efforts of his unrivalled muse! entlemen (said Mr. W.), you have often heard me ex- ess my opinion as regards the songs of Dibdin; but ey speak for themselves; they abound in moral senti- ent; they are, in fact, little sermons, calculated to ften and humanise the heart, and, to quote the language one of his biographers, 'Many of them contain ntal prescriptions, which, if the reader will follow henever his disorder reqoires it, he will bless the day imbibed their precepts, and call the fee for such ad- ce a treasure laid up in Heaven!' Gentlemen, the oductions of Dibdin, whether nautical, martial, or mestic, are composed of such solid materials, as will ar the brunt of ages, and will live in the remembrance Englishmen when the gaudy patchwork finery of substantial foreign ornament,—the Italian brovura, e Venetian barcarolle, &c., &c., which folly for o time akes fashionable, will be remembered no longer (hear). k the true British sailor what heartfelt consolation at he, 'Poor Jack,' has not felt in these inspiring lays; d as long as the British navy exists, as long as Bri- nnia shall 'rule the waves,' will she ever forget the me of her favourite poet! (Cheers and cries of ever'),

'Never let the hardy tar despair,
Tho' rolling seas run mountains high;
All things are built with equal care,
First-rate or wherry, man or fly.
If there's a Power that never errs,
(And certainty 'tis so);
For honest hearts what comforts drop,
As well as kings and emperors!
Why cot take in tow
Little Ben, who keeps his watch of the main top!'

"This is only one excellent specimen out of hundreds at might be quoted. And, gentlemen, when we con- der that Charles Dibdin, unlike other lyrists, composed e music as well as the words to ALL his songs, invaria- ly making the sound a faithful echo of the sense, this ngular and peculiar capacity, I think, sheds a tenfold stre on the genius of this most extraordinary man!" Cheers).

"THE MEMORY OF THE LATE CHARLES DIBDIN," as then drunk in solemn and respectful silence!

Mr. Thomas Dibdin was present, and on his health eing drank, he expressed his gratitude, and reverted to he days of his late revered father with much pathos and eeling. Mr. D. then sung the following song, which e had expressly written for the occasion.

Tune—"The Jolly Young Waterman"

I.

Ye votaries of national lyrical pleasure,
Who meet to upbuild the renown of a bard,
Whose verses are manly, whose notes are a treasure,
Whose toil, in your smiles, meets its brightest reward.
His loss to relieve, though fate has left us,
A cheering reflection,
Your kind recollection,
Supplies in lieu of what fate has bereft us;
While Truth will, when naming
This club, be proclaiming,
That next to the poet we lov'd while on earth,
We value the friends who forget not his worth!

II.

In this [illegible] heroes, palaces,
When [illegible] their coffee and cambrics sip;
When [illegible] of tars, grog, or tobacco!
[illegible] of a thing like a ship,
[illegible] nation;
[illegible]
But like [illegible], still [illegible] sing,
Our hearts, wooden walls, and our TRUE SAILOR KING!

III.

And isn't our NAVY right fond of her poet,
Whom moderns, a mere ballad-singer hays styl'd;
Tho' on each of his National Songs, and they know it,
Nature's stamp she impress'd, while in triumph she smil'd.
All her glee, frolic, and fancy,
She laughingly traces,
In manners and faces,
Of Will and his Mary, of Tom and his Nancy:
Of Cocknified Dasher,
And Varmer Thrasher;
Of "High mettled racers," and Kickaraboo;
To character just, and to Nature as true!

IV.

But Fashion, "The Lads of the Village" sends shopping
For "Portrait Charmants," and "L'Amour," sweet and soft;
While "Anne, Nan, and Nancy," and poor "Meg of Wapping,"
May sleep with "The Cherub that sits up aloft."
They've closed the log of sea simplicity,
Broken the bottle,
Of poor "Captain Wattle;"
Stopp'd the grog and eccentricity,
Of "Jack at the Windlass;"
Laid up "Fancy's fleet," and paid off all her crew,
Who now owe their only existence to you!

V.

Though my song is too long, yet for once I had rather A postscript intrude, ere to bore ye I've done;
To thank you all round, in the name of my father,
For kindness shown here to himself and his son.
"Blow high, blow low," care's gales, why let it.
While luck, with hard measure,
"Locks up all her treasure,"
The mirth of to-night,—I shall never forget it!
Or you who delighted
The guest you invited;
And Time shall forget on the Dial his track,
Ere "Poor Tom," your kind zeal for the bard of "Poor Jack!"

Mr. Dibdin was frequently interrupted in the course of his song with the most hearty and genuine applause, which continued for some time after he had finished it. It was stated in the room that this veteran chip of the old block (Mr. D. is upwards of sixty-five), author of "The Cabinet," "The English Fleet," "Of Age To-Morrow," &c. &c. intended shortly to take a benefit at one of the theatres.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The Chamber of Deputies have concurred in opinion with the Minister of Justice that the question of granting an amnesty to the captives of Ham and to other political prisoners belongs, as a measure of mercy, exclusively to the Crown. M. Thiers, the better to procure this concurrence, has hinted very plainly that the merciful privilege may speedily be exercised by Louis Philippe. The report of the Committee on the question of the Five per Cents. recommends that the plan of M. Gouin be adopted next year.

SPAIN.—The Madrid Gazette of 10th inst. contains the decree for the suppression of all the houses belonging to the monastic orders of both sexes in Spain, the islands adjacent thereunto, and the Spanish possessions in Africa. This decree extends also to the establishments of the four military orders of St. John of Jerusalem.—The elections continue to be favourable to the Ministry. Martinez de la Rosa and Toreno have both been thrown out; on the other hand, Mendizabel has been elected for six different places.

Vittoria, March 4.—Evans left Vittoria to-day, with four battalions of the Legion, to meet Cordova at a pass near Trevino, who had twelve battalions; and it was generally believed that as this great force could not be accommodated at Vittoria, they would move towards Bilboa. At Vittoria sickness still prevailed, and the troops were subjected to great privations. The Legion cannot be kept up without an immediate supply of money. Brig.-Gen. Evans was serving as Aide-de-Camp to Gen. Evans. Col. De Lancey has returned from the Army in consequence of the reduction.

RUSSIA.—St. Petersburg, Feb. 27.—On Tuesday last the Emperor laid the keel of a ship of the line of 120 guns, to be called the Russia. This ship, the first built in the covered dock-yards of the new Admiralty, will be 200 feet long, 57 feet broad, and 54 feet in height; she will carry 48 pounders and some mortars of large calibre.

TURKEY.—Constantinople, Feb. 17*th*.—The Sultan's choice of a son-in-law was promulgated at the mosque of St. Sophie last Friday, and a steamer has been despatched to the Dardanelles for the bridegroom, by name Seyd Pache. He is esteemed as a man of talent and intelligence, and is a general favourite at Court from his agreeable manners and person.

JAMAICA.—By accounts received this week, it appears that fresh differences had arisen between the House of Assembly and the Marquis of Sligo.

CANADA.—Montreal papers to the 18th, and Quebec to the 16th ult., have arrived. In the latter, it is stated that Lord Glenelg's despatch to Sir F. Head was laid before the House, with various other documents. A motion was made that these documents be entered on the journals of the House; which, after a very lengthy discussion, was carried by a majority of 35, and the documents referred to a committee.

Theatres.

KING'S.—There has been no novelty since our last, but the performance will be varied this evening.

COVENT GARDEN.—Herold's opera of Zampa, or the Merble Bride, was produced on Saturday last, after (we are informed) only four rehearsals. The performers, considering the short time they had to prepare themselves, deserve great praise, although there was not one among them who was quite perfect, either in the music or the dialogue. With respect to the music of this opera, it is by no means equal to other operas of Herold's. Several pieces introduced were from the opera of Marie, and one of these, sung by Miss Romer, "Indeed, 'tis very strange," received a flattering encore. The scena, "Before yon shrine," and rondo, "Oh, ne'er since beauty," which follows, is by far the best composition in the opera, and is also by far too difficult for Collins—he was occasionally out of tune. Miss Turpin, as Camilla, sang two or three airs in a style which proved her a good musician, although her songs were far from effective. At the end of the opera, Collins came forward to announce it for repetition: he was assailed from all parts of the theatre with marks of disapprobation for endeavouring to force so imperfect an opera on the public. An operatic drama, The Fate of War followed, which proved a total failure.

QUARTETT CONCERTS.—A taste for what is really refined and classical in music, is rapidly becoming more apparent among us. The above series of performances (of which the first took place at the Hanover-square Rooms on Thursday last) is instituted for the purpose of familiarising the public with the chamber music of the great masters, who seem to have bestowed on this branch of their art some of their finest thoughts, clothed in the subtlest resources of the science. The selection on Thursday evening was made from the works of Onslow, Beethoven, Mozart, and Haydn, and each separate production was given with the most perfect effect by the instrumentalists into whose hands they were confided. Blagrove, the first violin, though a young artist, has already established himself in the highest rank of his profession, and he was fortunate, on the present occasion, in the three other performers who completed the quartetts. It is not often that a second part is taken by so admirable a musician and energetic and finished player as Gattie; while nothing could more happily accomplish the ensemble than the effective execution of Dando and Lucas, on the viola and violoncello.

Both the winter theatres will close their season in Passion Week, and commence a new series of performances at Easter. The Olympic, Adelphi, and St. James's are about to close; at the latter Jenny Vertpre is to lead a French company on Monday and Friday evenings.

The 19th anniversary Festival of the Drury Lane Theatrical Fund was celebrated on Wednesday in Freemasons' Hall. The chair was taken by Sir E. Codrington.

The Duke of Wellington occasionally dines at the Senior United Service Club, quite alone, and merely from the joint. His Grace is most abstemious in his habit, and although the hospitality at his own house is peculiar for its magnificence, the Duke, in his diet, is one of the most simple men in England.

The Queen of Louis XV. was immoderately fond of cards, and was never perhaps more delighted than when M. de Meurepas, on the occasion of the death of a monarch in alliance with France, declared to her Majesty that "Piquet was not obliged to go into mourning."

Etiquette.—The Queen-wife of Charles the Second on one occasion was dragged about the Palace Court at Madrid in danger of her life, and no one dared come to her aid, as it was punishable with death to touch the Queen's foot, which was entangled in the stirrup of the horse she was riding.

At the time of Napoleon's coronation, some of the sticklers for etiquette among the ancient regime would not at first allow their ladies to hold up the train of the

Empress; but Napoleon met this promptly by an order, issued in his own hand-writing, that "he would allow no one to be sick on the day of his coronation."

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 134, Oxford-street, near Hollis-street, established in 1836, than through the adoption of any other method whatever; as Domestics, with good characters, are in waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock.

Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for Hiring Servants; but if the Servant possess a good character, it certainly is perfect nonsense to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a Situation.

N.B. It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. HOWARD, Surgeon Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, continues to supply DEFICIENCIES of the TEETH, on his improved principle, at the same moderate terms, whether arising from neglect, diseases of the gums, or age (from a single Tooth to a complete set), without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, and in every case restoring perfect articulation and mastication. An inspection of Mr. Howard's method will immediately convince those at all acquainted with the subject of its superiority.

Decayed and decayed Teeth cured and effectually preserved from decay.—At home from ten till five.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—INJUNCTIONS.

CAUTION.—It having been represented to Messrs. DELCROIX and Co. Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, that frequent disappointments were occurring to the Nobility and Gentry, in purchasing from shops having the appearance of respectability, counterfeit articles, bearing not only similar labels to their own, but even their name and address, Messrs. Delcroix and Co. have taken necessary steps to enable them to expose the parties so acting, and they have the pleasure of informing their patrons and friends that injunctions have been granted by the above Court, against Messrs. JOHN GOSNELL & Co. (late Price and Gosnell), of Regent-street, and 3 Kings' Court, Lombard-street,

Mr. JOHN COLLAS, Perfumer, Bishopsgate-street Within, and Mr. ROBERT HOVENDEN, wholesale Perfumer, Crown-street, Finsbury-square; restraining them from vending imitations of Messrs. Delcroix and Co.'s much esteemed Esprit de Lavende aux Millefleurs. And the trade and others are hereby cautioned against similar practices, as Messrs. Purchasers are requested to be careful to notice that their Esprit de Lavende aux Millefleurs and Vegetable Extract, will in future bear the signature of J. Delcroix on the labels, and the name and address "Delcroix, 158, New Bond-street," on the back of the Bottles.

I am, Gentlemen, your obedient servant, HENRY TAYLOR." "Those made for Sir Herbert Taylor answer extremely well, and he will recommend them generally. Windsor Castle."—"Hall and Co's. TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labeling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose;) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated in all its branches, from the most simple to the first style of elegance. A rich variety of new patterns on show.

CARVING AND GILDING IN ALL ITS BRANCHES.

PAPER HANGING, AND INTERIOR DECORATIONS

IN THE UPHOLSTERY ARRANGEMENT,

the greatest attention is paid to unite elegance with economy in character for the drawing-room, boudoir, dining-room, library, and bed-chambers, from the most quiet to the most costly styles. In the various articles of chintzes, moreens, damasks, silks, &c. A great variety of the most splendid and novel styles are constantly on view of those qualities which can alone insure permanent satisfaction; the extreme disparity in prices in these articles mainly arises from the inferiority of the fabric.

CABINET, CHAIR, AND SOFA WORK

manufactured of the most seasoned materials. In the finish of Chairs, Sofas, &c., much depends on the quality of the materials used, and the workmanship. It may not be unworthy of remark that a similar effect may be produced at a saving of nearly one half, but which in the wear must eventually prove a serious disappointment to the purchaser. This applies also to the manufacture of Cabinet Goods, which, from being made of unseasoned materials and unsound work (that cannot be detected by the casual observer), can never be of that service and durability so essential. H. L. C. begs to add that he manufactures them on his own premises, and has always on hand a large stock of well-seasoned materials, which enables him to produce work at the lowest possible rate and of a superior quality.

STEAM and SAILING VESSELS promptly fitted up with CABIN FURNITURE and PASSENGERS' REQUISITES.

SOLID and PORTABLE Furniture, Bedding, Musquito Hangers, &c., for Foreign Climates. Families going abroad will receive every information respecting the articles best adapted for their particular destinations.

Merchants, Captains, and Dealers, supplied with the utmost despatch, on the most liberal terms.

CARPETING

of the fabric especially made for the first Upholstery Houses, viz. Brussels, Kidderminster, and Venetian; also a few of the much-admired velvet pile carpets, hearth rugs, druggets, baize, floor-cloth, &c.

BEDDING, BLANKETS, &c.

well-seasoned, real Dantzic feathers, also equally prepared light downy feathers for second and third rate beds, elastic spring, hair, and wool mattresses; real Witney, 4/4 Bath and York blankets; Marseilles quilts and counterpanes. In the article of bedding, blankets, &c., so essentially important to all, H. L. C. is determined that no trader shall supply them on better terms.

FUNERALS FURNISHED, with the greatest propriety, and with every consistent regard to economy.

Families in the country may command the most approved taste by being waited on at home with patterns and designs made on the spot, calculated to harmonise with the plans, proportions, and decorations of the rooms; and their orders delivered and fixed on terms forming a very small addition to the first cost, by the system adopted by this concern.

With this short enumeration of the leading articles of his trade, and the very favourable terms on which he undertakes to supply them, HENRY L. COOPER appeals to all classes for a continuance of that flattering preference hitherto afforded his house, 20, Lamb's Conduit-street, Holborn; 24, Dishopsgate-street Within; Western Branch, 57, Conduit-street, nine doors from Regent-street.

N. B. H. L. C. begs respectfully to solicit particular attention to this Address. Also, that any article will be exchanged should a just objection arise, thus securing the Public from imposition.

TO the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public.—Families of distinction and Visitors to the Metropolis at this Season, who frequently experience great difficulty in suiting themselves with FURNISHED or UNFURNISHED HOUSES, owing to the great demand, are respectfully informed every attention will be afforded in the House and Estate Agency Department of HENRY L. COOPER, in obtaining or disposing of the same, or in the Selling, Letting, or Valuing, any description of property in Town or Country.

From the central situations of the Establishments in their respective commanding localities, every facility is rendered to families honouring his house with their instructions, and offering the advantage of a double register usually replete with eligible properties.

The general introduction of PLATE GLASS for Windows, Carriages, Conservatories, Internal Decorations, &c., has induced H. L. C. to annex a Tariff of Rates, adapted to those uses, with Prices exceedingly moderate, but of a quality not to be excelled; also is added an outline of his general business, comprising the Cabinet, Upholstery, and Decorative Departments, in each of which the most careful attention is paid both to quality and cost.

HENRY L. COOPER, Plate Glass and Furniture Warehouses, No. 20, Dishopsgate-street Within, and Western Branch, 57, Conduit-street, nine doors from Regent-street, left hand side.

Among the variety of Articles above referred to, will be found LOOKING GLASSES of every denomination and size, varying from one foot to eighty feet and upwards; plate glass for windows, carriages, &c., which possess great advantages over crown, and when required for exportation, a considerable drawback obtained. Annexed are the Prices of Current Sizes of Plate Glass for Sashes, &c.

ANGLING.—J. CHEEK, Fishing-Rod and Tackle Maker, No. 52, Strand, begs leave most respectfully to acquaint the Nobility, Gentry, and Anglers generally, that he has the largest assortment in London of the very best articles for trout, salmon, and other rods; patent fly and trolling-lines, winches, tackle-cases, &c.; 200 gross of superior trout and salmon flies, from 2s. 4d. per dozen. ## YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION is the most wonderful Medicine ever discovered by man, for the cure of GONORRHŒA, GLEETS, STRICTURES, WHITES, Pains in the Loins, Affections of the Kidneys, Gravel, Irritation of the Urethra or Bladder, and for all Urinary Diseases in both sexes.—This Medicine is patronised, prescribed, recommended, and sanctioned by the Most Eminent of the Faculty, not only in England but on the Continent; and stated by them, from experience, to be the only Medicine that can be relied on for the cure of these complaints, and they invariably resort to it when their own remedies fail.

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION cures both sexes at all times sooner than any other known remedy, with the most triumphant success, after every Medicine of the present day has proved ineffectual, so that this justly celebrated specific has arrived at the acme of perfection, surpassing every thing of the kind that ever bore the name of medicine, frequently curing some of these serious diseases in a few hours. Those who have suffered from any of the above diseases for many years (such as strictures, &c.) will find upon taking this medicine for a short time, that, if not entirely cured, they will no longer feel inconvenience from the trifling complaint that remains.

Admiralty, Somerset-Place, March 25th 1836.

HALF-PAY and RETIRED-PAY to NAVAL OFFICERS and OFFICERS of the ROYAL MARINES.—Notice is hereby given, That on the receipt in the Wages Department, at the Admiralty Office, Somerset-Place, of the Declaration or Certificate of Identity required from each officer by his Majesty's Orders in Council, a Bill for the amount of the half-pay or retired pay due will be made out in this Department, which will be payable by the Treasurer of his Majesty's Navy, on the following days, viz.—

On the 11th and 12th April, to Masters, Surgeons, and Pursers, and their Attorneys.

On the 13th, 14th, and 15th April, to Lieutenants at 5s. and under, and their Attorneys.

On the 16th and 18th of April, to Lieutenants at 7s. and 6s. a day, and Chaplains, and their Attorneys.

On the 20th, 21st, and 22nd of April, to Admirals, Lieutenant-Generals, Major-Generals, Colonels, Lieutenant-Colonels, Majors, Captains, Commanders, and Retired Commanders, and their Attorneys.

Great inconvenience having been experienced by the claims of officers, who have not chosen to receive their half-pay or retired-pay on the days fixed for their rank, being brought forward on the days appointed for the payment of half-pay and retired pay to officers of different ranks, notice is hereby given that no such claims can in future be attended to on the days not appointed for officers of those ranks; but for the accommodation of such officers, and also for the convenience of those who may not have transmitted their Declarations or Certificates sufficiently early to admit of payment on the above-mentioned days, a reral will take place on the 25th and 26th of April; after which the half-pay and retired-pay will be payable on the first and third Wednesdays in every Month, excepting during the general payment.

Officers residing in or near London, and wishing to receive their half-pay or retired-pay in person, are requested to deliver their Declarations or Certificates into the Wages Office, at the Admiralty, Somerset Place, or transmit them to the Secretary of the Admiralty, immediately on the expiration of each quarter; and those employing agents, are also requested to furnish their agents with their Declarations or Certificates, with the same dispatch, for unless such documents are delivered into this Office early, delay in the payment must unavoidably ensue.

As it sometimes happens that officers apply, personally, for their half-pay or retired pay, without having previously sent in their Declarations or Certificates as required by the usual advertisement, any delay or inconvenience to which they might be subject by this oversight it is in the power of the officers themselves to prevent, by an adherence to the existing regulations.

Under the authority of the statutes relating to the pay of the Navy (besides the above mentioned modes), officers may receive their half-pay or retired pay in any of the following ways, viz.—

1st. By drawing a bill for the amount, in which case they are to give notice thereof by letter to the Secretary of the Admiralty, marked in the corner "Half-Pay or Retired-Pay Accountant-General," and thereupon a proper form of a Bill of Exchange will be sent to them. 2d. By a Remittance Bill or permanent Remittance Bill, payable to them at or in the neighbourhood of their residence by the Collector of Customs or Excise. 3d. By extract, at a Dock-Yard, where there is an establishment of Pay Clerks.

In either of which two latter cases they must give alike notice to the Secretary of the Admiralty marked in the same manner, and a Remittance Bill or Extract will thereupon be made out and transmitted to them. In all cases, the officer signifying his desire of payment is to state at the foot of his letter his Christian and Surnames, his rank, and a full description of his residence.

Mem.—Bills of Exchange drawn under or by virtue of the Act 2 Geo. 4, cap. 20, are not liable to the Stamp Duty.

No persons residing out of his Majesty's dominions are entitled to the privileges of this Act.

Prussian Artillery.—The greatest activity prevails in the Prussian army. The artillery are undergoing great reforms; in future every man will be armed with a [illegible]. The experience acquired at the battle of Ulm has led to this alteration, the French Lancers at that time having penetrated the ranks of the Prussian artillery cut the traces and harness of the horses, and effected other damage, which took a month to repair. Had the men been then armed as they will henceforward be, the Lancers must have been repulsed with great loss.

Sir Andrew Halliday, Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals, has been tried by Court Martial at Demerara, for having caused issues of fresh meat to be made to the troops, and thereby caused a heavy public expense, upon frivolous and futile grounds; also for having made himself a party to the industrious circulation of calumny against the Governor of Demerara; and for having calumniated a Mr. [illegible], planter of the name of Armstrong, to whom he admitted the calumny, coupling the admission with an abject apology whereby he compromised his honour as an officer and a gentleman." The Court acquitted Sir Andrew of all the charges except a portion of the fourth, and they found "that he is guilty of so much of the fourth charge as accuses him of having addressed certain letters to Mr. [illegible] son, and holding out a promise of personal advantage to him, and of suggesting and advising him to an unworthy proceeding, as the medium of communicating the desired information." During the progress of this trial, the Lieut.-Governor, Sir J. C. Smyth, was examined. It appears that while in the Court he was called upon by the Deputy Judge Advocate to answer some particular question, which was requested by that officer in a very peremptory manner to do so standing. His Excellency, conceiving that he was addressed by the Judge-Advocate in a manner unbecoming his rank, rejected with warmth the insult he conceived he had offered him, and addressed the next day a letter to the Court, stating it to be his intention to represent the conduct of the Major-General commanding the Forces, by whom he has not a doubt Captain Harpur, 67th regt., will be arrested as is the respect due by all military men, but especially by officers on his Excellency's staff, to Her Majesty's representative in this colony. [illegible] ished with the whole of the Minutes of this Court-Martial, but cannot find space for them.—Ed.]—Sir Andrew has received instructions to proceed forthwith to England.

Mortality of Troops in Jamaica.—The 50th and 92d regs. lost in 1819 to 1826 (eight years) 1,409, or 88 per year per reg. The 33d and 91st regs. lost in 1822 to 1829 (eight years) 1,036, or 65 per year per reg. The 77th reg. lost in 1824 to 1829 (5 years) 433, or 72 per year per reg. The 22d and 84th regs. lost in 1826 to 1828 (three years) 501, or 84 per year per reg. The first four regs. lost in the first two years of service 943, or 118 per year per reg. Do. in the next three years, 669, or 69 per do. Do. in the last three years, 672, or 56 per do. Making a total of 2,445, or 76 per year per reg. The seven regs. lost in the first two years of service 1,643, or 117 per year per reg. Do. after two years, 1,736, or 56 per do. Confining attention to the four regiments which served their full time in Jamaica, and assuming the average strength of each reg. to be 550, in February, which is the time when new regiments arrive and recruits join, the average annual mortality is 14 out of every 100 beginning the year. In the first two years of service, the mortality is 50 per cent. above the average; in the last three years it is 30 per cent. less than the average. In Jamaica the most unhealthy months of the year are August and Nov.—the most healthy months are May and June. In the former months the mortality is four times as great as in the latter months. Dividing the year into two equal parts, the "healthy" season may be considered as exteeding from Feb. to July; the "unhealthy" season from Aug. to Jan. The deaths in these two seasons are as 10 to 27. The "seasoning," or period of severe mortality, generally occurs in the latter half of the year in which the reg. arrives. In the case of the 77th reg. the "seasoning" took place in the second year from their arrival. In the case of the 33d and 91st regs. the "seasoning" took place in that part of the first year which is usually healthy. Of the total troops in Jamaica, without distinction of regs., during the nine years 1819 to 1827, the average numbers living were—officers 123, men 2,704, women 277, children 348. The average annual deaths per cent. were, officers 10·2, men 15·6, women 10·7, children 88. During the last sixteen years, 1812 to 1827, the average number of men living was 2,324; the average annual deaths were 11·8 per cent.; the invalided were 1·7 per cent. of the living; and for every hundred men there were 172 cases of sickness in the year, that is, each men was on the sick list once every seven months.

Charges have been preferred, by Brig. Gen. Wilson, commanding ceded districts, Madras, against Lieut. Edw. Molloy, 55th regt., for having caused to be inserted, in the Madras Standard newspaper, three letters, under signature of "Schoolmaster abroad," calling in question the general order of the Commander in Chief, dated 8th Aug. 1835, and exposing his Commander, Brig. Gen. F. Wilson, to personal obloquy among the troops under his command.

The Horse Guards have determined on compelling officers of short service abroad to commute their half-pay, or join corps in the colonies. Many half-pay Officers have consequently, within the last fortnight, been called upon to know whether they are willing to serve.

It will be seen by the Gazette of last night, that Lord Brudenell is appointed to the Lieut.-Colonelcy of the 11th Light Dragoons. Agreeing with Lord Brougham, that this nobleman was harshly used, and a victim to the prejudice of the moment, we take no small pleasure in his restoration to active employ. His Lordship is a very talented officer, and devoted to a military life. The 11th Dragoons is in the East Indies, and Lord Brudenell will join and take the command.

There is some intention apparent of removing Sir Edward Blakeney from the command of the forces in Ireland.

In China, guns were used as early as A.D. 85, and powder had been invented ages previously. Friar Bacon, who wrote 100 years before Schwarz discovery, supposes that by an explosive composition of this kind, Gideon defeated the Midianites with his 300 men. Judges VII. —Wilkinson's Egypt.

D'Orsay, dining in company with Lord Alvanley, soon after the duel with Morgan O'Connell, was complimenting his noble friend on having stood fire so well:—"One shot—two shots—why you are quite Shooter's Hill."—"Very right, mon ami," said the same wit to the proprietor of the balloon that was to go to France, as he was complaining, almost in the words of the old nursery song,

"Here we go up, up, up,
And here we go down, down, down—"

Portsmouth, Mar. 25.—(From our own Correspondent.)—V.-Adm. Sir P. Halkett sailed in the Melville on Saturday last, to assume the W. Indie command; he proceeds first to Bermuda. Orders were received on Sunday for the Portsmouth division to furnish detachments of Marines for the Minden and Cornwallis, and the Messenger st. having arrived from Woolwich the following were embarked in her, and she proceeded with them to Plymouth on Wednesday morning:—Capt. D. Campbell, 1st. Lieut. Clendon, 2nd Lieut. Timpson, 3 Serjts., 3 Corps., 2 Drummers, 114 Privates, to Minden; Capt. W. L. Dawes, 1st Lieut. W. H. Stergeoe, 2ed Lieut. Fortant, 3 Serjts., 3 Corporals, 2 Drummers, 114 Privates, to Cornwallis. Capt. R. Mercer, 1st Lieut. Topham, 2nd Lieuts. Shewer and White, were embarked with the Vanguard's detachment of Marines. The Lightning Admiralty steamer arrived on Tuesday to attend Prince Ferdinand of Portugal to Lisbon. The vessel is alongside the dockyard completing her coals; a Serjeant's party of Marines have embarked in her. The Speedy cutter, Lieut. Douglas, is ordered to Leith to open a rendezvous for seamen. Orders have arrived authorising the Captains to open rendezvous at any port they may think proper, and despatch officers. Lieut. Escourt of the Vanguard has gone to Liverpool. The Bellerophon will be taken in dock on Wednesday. The Victory is to be the ship for the Capt. Superintendent of the Ordinary. The Arab, transport, Lieut. Lugg, arrived this afternoon from Antigua with invalid troops and women. A corvette is standing into St. Helen's, supposed to be the Larne. Ships in port—Braganza and Esperanza schooner, Spithead. In harbour—Britannia, Vanguard, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Pantaloon, Speedy, Lightning, Manchester, Portuguese steamer.

Milford Haven, March 24th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Shortly after the arrival here, on Thursday last, of the Aladdin, post-office steam-packet, with the mails from Waterford, a fire broke out in her starboard coal-hole which threatened her destruction. A signal of distress being hoisted, assistance was quickly afforded from the Skylark revenue cutter, then at anchor in the roadstead, by means of which she was quickly run into Hakin Pill, where after considerable exertion, and the deck being ripped up by shipwrights, the fire was extinguished. Two or three of the main beams were so destroyed, that they were replaced by new ones. Other parts adjacent were also considerably injured. The defects are being made good with all possible dispatch, so much so, indeed, that the extensive forge of Mr. Thomas Stephens, with all his hands, was in full employ all day on Sunday last. It is expected she will be fit for sea in the course of the week. The cause of the accident is supposed to have been the extreme heat of the main steam pipe, which, from its contiguity to the coal-box, must have ignited the spare coals. It was blowing half a gale of wind at the time, and had she not been run into the Pill for shelter, it is probable she must have been wholly destroyed. An entry of men and boys has been directed at Pembroke in common with the other ports, for the different ships now commissioning. They are to be placed on board the Royal Sovereign, Capt. Sir C. Bullen, until opportunities occur by dockyard craft, of forwarding them to Portsmouth or Plymouth. Report now says that the Marines at the dockyard are to relieved by a detachment of Sappers from Woolwich, under command of a Field Officer. From the work performing in the yard being so much in their line, and from the plan of occupying the leisure time of the force employed to guard the arsenal in carrying on the improvements of that establishment, proving so economical and beneficial to the country, this is a very probable arrangement. The only barrier to it is, that as the Marine department is so entirely under the control of the Admiralty that Board would, perhaps, not like to have any other force employed in those services. Would it not, then, be more advisable that the depot be opened as a recruiting station for the corps? The men could be drilled there, and sent to the divisions by dockyard lighters, constantly plying at little or no expense, and without the long and fatiguing march they have now to encounter. On Friday last a fine brig sloop called the Harlequin, pierced to carry 16 guns, was launched from Pembroke yard. She went off the ways in great style, amidst the hearty cheers of a numerous assembly. The following are her dimensions:—

| | As per Drawings. | | As built |
|---|---|---|---|
| Length between the perpendiculars | 100 | 6 | 100 |
| of the keel for tonnage | 76 | 9½ | 78 |
| Breadth extreme | 32 | 4 | 32 |
| for tonnage | 32 | 0 | 32 |
| moulded | 31 | 6 | 31 |
| Depth in hold | 14 | 10 | 15 |
| Burthen in tons | 428 | 0⅔ | 433 |
| Poppets forward and Bilgeways on | | | All |
| Draught of water forward | 8 | 0 | 8 |
| aft | 12 | 10 | 13 |

The Dido, a superb corvette, will follow the Harlequin in the course of a fortnight. The latter vessel was docked on Monday to be coppered, &c. Sailed the Skylark revenue cutter, Diligence naval transport, and Tortoise and Gowill lighters, the later for Falmouth, the two other dockyard craft for Plymouth.

Plymouth, March 24.—The Cornwallis, Talavera and Minden, the 74's that have been commissioned at this port, will each take a complement of 620 seamen and marines. Partridge, brig, will be commissioned in a few days for the purpose of conveying men from the various out-ports, where rendezvous are established, to join the ships recently commissioned. She was docked to be examined on Tuesday. Star, packet, has had the remainder of her masts taken out, and was docked on Tuesday. She will be in future fitted as a brig, and not as a barque. Spitfire, steamer, Lieut. Kennedy, arrived here from Woolwich on Monday; she proceeds to-morrow to Falmouth to take out the next Mediterranean mail. Phœnix, steamer, started on Friday for Spain with 100 marines on board. Harpy, brig, Lieut. Hon. C. Clements, put in here on Thursday, on her way down Channel from Torbay, where she had been driven by the violence of the gales, and sailed again on Saturday for the West Indies. The boatswains and carpenters of the Talavera and Minden, are now to the ordinary depot, and will be replaced by others of a higher class.

A transport is to be immediately taken up in lieu of the Hope, discharged; and it is expected Lieut. Spencer, late of the latter, will be agent thereof.

The Spitfire steamer, Lieut. Kennedy, sailed on Saturday from Woolwich for Plymouth, to take out a Mediterranean mail.

The Surveyor of the Navy, attended by Capt. Corgan (who brought home the Liverpool from the Imaum of Muscat), visited Deptford dockyard this week, and inspected the Prince Regent, royal yacht. It is reported this yacht will be fitted as a present to the Imaum of Muscat, and suitably fitted for the use of this enlightened and liberal monarch.

On Tuesday the Deptford Rl. Marine guard were relieved, and Capt. Prett, Lieuts. James and Dwyer, are attached to the new guard, in lieu of an equal number of officers gone to head-quarters Woolwich.

On Wednesday the Royal Sovereign transport, Lieut. Ward, R.N., Agent, arrived at Deptford to fit for service.

The Numa transport, for the Mediterranean, as also the Parmelia, Prince Regent, and Royal Sovereign remain at Deptford. The Numa will proceed in about a month.

By a Parliamentary return, it appears that the Corporation of the Trinity House distributes annually 23,833*l.* among 8556 pensioners, designated as masters and mates of over-sea traders, colliers, and coasters, boatswains, gunners, carpenters, petty officers, and seamen, children of some of these pensioners, and children of the widows of former pensioners and orphans; and on 4th Feb. last they had 3966 eligible petitioners on their books.

The average number of convicts employed at Portsmouth and in the Eastern Yards, in the six months ending July, 1835, was 2788; in the six months ending January in the present year, the number was reduced to 2186, of whom 814 were in Portsmouth Harbour, and the remainder at Woolwich and Chatham. The expense for the last half year upon these convicts is called 18,318*l.*, and their earnings are set down at 12,796*l.*—The number of convicts at Bermuda is 1038, the expense of whom, for the six months ending 30th June last, was 13,403*l.*, while their earnings for the same period is called 16,869*l.*; nothing, however, is taken into account for expense of military guards, or the wear and tear of the ships they live in.

Lieut. C. Miller, of the Rl. Marines, at Chatham, gave a bachelor's ball and supper, on a very extensive scale, and in a truly elegant style, on Friday evening last, 18th inst., in the regimental mess-room of his corps, to a very very large and fashionable company, in celebration of the marriage of his brother, an officer of the Madras cavalry, to a daughter of the late General Sir Murry Mac Gregor.

Royal Marines.—A party from the Serpent, 16, Com. Nepean, have joined the Woolwich division, she having been paid off. Capt. Richardson's company, and a draft, making 114 men, expect to leave Woolwich on Monday next, to join the Hercules, 74, fitting at Chatham, and 120 more will shortly embark to reinforce the ships in the Mediterranean.

Spitfire st. v., Lieut. A. Kennedy, went down the river from Woolwich, on the 18th, to try her engines, and burst one of her boilers by the great exertions of her engineers; a plate was put on, and she left Woolwich again on the 19th, for the westward.

Hermes st. v., Lieut. Blount, is to be supplied with new wheels, under the old patent. She is expected to be ready for sea in a fortnight. The Harmes conveyed Armstrong, alias Robinson, a sailor belonging to the Sapphire, from Corfu to Malta, who confessed being a principal in the murder of Mr. Fairles, a magistrate of South Shields.

Carron st. v., Lieut. Dew, was hauled into the basin, on the 18th, at Woolwich, to complete her equipment, and is in want of hands to make up her complement.

Firefly st. v. has not been re-commissioned, as reported, by Lieut. Baldock, but has gone up to Mr. Buller's, off Blackwall, to get her engines.

There is no truth in the report that Capt. Sulivan has declined the Talavera; that gallant officer has proceeded to join his ship.

An interesting trial took place between the Express packet, lately commissioned by Lieut. Croke, and the American liner St. James's, in beating down Channel. After a hard contest, in which the Express weathered more than three miles upon her antagonist, and considerably more upon a revenue cutter in company, the vessels came to an anchor under Dungeness; but the passengers on board the American vessel not liking that uneasy roadstead, she returned to the Downs. The Captain of the St James's asserts that this is the first time his vessel has been matched, having previously beaten every thing he encountered with great ease.

Intelligence has been received from the West Indies of the loss of the Pike schooner, Lieut. Com. Brooking, on the Pelican reef, on the night of the 4th ult.—crew saved.

The following officers went with the party of Marines that have been sent from Plymouth to the Coast of Spain: Capt. Mallock, Capt. Edwards, 1st Lieut. Watson, 2nd Lieuts. Molesworth, Drench, and Hockings.

COAST GUARD SERVICE.—(LETTER VII.)

Sir,—I presume it is not generally known that this Service costs the country between 500,000*l.* and 600,000*l.* a-year. A very large item of this expense is occasioned by the revenue cruisers. By the Navy List, there appear to be forty-three of them, but there are others that appear upon no list, besides an almost interminable number of Coast Guard tenders, alias Coast Guard yachts. The average expense of each cutter per annum is somewhat about 2,500*l.*, and it is to be regretted that they are rendered incapable of performing a duty commensurate with the immense expenditure of money necessary to keep them up. We know what they were when formerly under the control of the Customs, and that Board acknowledged its inability to conduct them properly, by readily giving them over to the Admiralty. Under their Lordships' directions they became efficient and active, and it is a matter of surprise they should have been again transferred to the Customs. Nothing, however, is more certain than that they have, since the transfer, deteriorated in all respects; that they are daily becoming more useless, and that, unless they are re-organised, and put under the control of some authority more competent than the Board of Customs to conduct such a Marine, it would be better to pay them all off and save the country their expense, I have said they were efficient under the control of the Admiralty. They were then, Sir, well officered and manned; each had an affection for his vessel and the service upon which he was employed, and there was a heartfelt cordiality and co-operation amongst officers and men, which gave to their united exertions an energy and zeal highly beneficial to the public service, and most gratifying to their respective Commanders. In proof of this, it is an incontrovertible fact that the revenue cruisers swept the seas of nearly all those large and beautiful cutters and luggers which the smugglers then used, compelling them to resort to another mode of getting their contraband goods into this country. This mode is concealment on board unsuspected vessels, and which is now, and has been for years, carried on to an immense extent.

As soon as the Customs again got the cutters, they set about what they considered improving the Service; for instance, they sold and otherwise disposed of many of their finest vessels, viz. the Stag, Stork, Swallow, Rose, &c., substituting in lieu thereof ill-built, crazy, smuggling vessels, which lasted only for a few years, and building other fragile gimcrack things, all professedly to fly when there were no longer flying smugglers to be caught, but cunning, crafty, concealing fellows, who carried on their practices, as I have just stated, on an altered plan. They continue, as occasion suits, to banish those useful and substantial vessels they have remaining, and to build upon this flying and feather-like principle, without reference to the future, or the amount of expense such things must constantly occasion; in fact, they, in one instance, actually bought, at a cost, I believe, of 3,000*l.*, a nobleman's yacht, the Secret, after purchase named the Swallow—and a pretty secret they were let into, for she had THE DRY ROT, and, consequently, before she could be made at all available to the Service, she had to undergo such a repair as cost the country an immense additional sum. So much for foresight, and a proper husbanding of the public money. And what results from such a system? why, the country is put to totally unnecessary expense in keeping the description of vessels I have named in anything like repair.

I recollect when the new Stork arrived at Portsmouth from Hastings, where she was built; it was found necessary to alter her fitment, at a considerable expense, before she could be sent to sea; this is not, however, a solitary instance of such jobs, and John Bull is made to pay the piper whoever may reap the harvest; in fact, I have been informed that both her and the Adelaide (also built at Hastings) were actually obliged to undergo most extensive repairs not very long after being launched.

I am not so much prejudiced in favour of the old cutters as to suppose they could not be improved on as far as model went, had the necessity existed of changing them, but this was obviously not the case; they answered every purpose under the Admiralty, and would have done so now. However, as new cutters were to be substituted, two considerations were necessary to be kept in view with respect to them. The first,—good construction, with good materials. The second, capability of being armed when necessary; for these vessels ought to be made available, in the event of war, to protect the trade and to carry despatches. The present description of new cutters have not strength to carry guns; indeed, the concussion of a broadside from their six-pounders would pretty well shake them to pieces; and although, Sir, their keels may serve them in chase, they cannot protect a convoy, and it will surely not be said to redound to the credit of old England if British officers and British seamen, in such vessels, are obliged to show their sterns to every two-gun privateer.

Having shown the anxiety of the Board of Customs to introduce a new class of vessels, and the description of vessel they have adopted, I will next explain to you, Sir, how they have crippled the cutters, within the focus of my knowledge, as regards their crews. When they were under the Admiralty, a classification of them took place, and they were manned nearly as follows:—

2d Class, 100 tons and under 140—6 Officers, 24 Able Seamen, 4 Boys—34 in number.

The smaller, or 3*d Class*, had a complement of 21.

The Board of Customs has reduced the complement of able Seamen to 17 in a 1st class cutter, and 14 in a 2d class, giving them in lieu thereof 4 additional helpless boys, and filling up the remaining vacancies with what it (the Board) in its wisdom is pleased to term ordinary mariners, but what every sailor would denominate a sort of amphibious, non-descript animal, betwixt lavish boys and what we should employ as ministers on board a ship of war, they being equally as useless in the active duties of a seaman, and only fit, as in a man-of-war, to sweep and swab between decks. The consequence is, and I say it without fear of contradiction, that good seamen have no affection for this service; and what with the interference of the Board in the manning of these vessels, together with the casualties of sickness which the men are subject to, and the continual changes from men leaving the service, ordered to other cruisers, they are generally short of complement, and are absolutely the worst manned vessels under the Crown.

All who know anything of cutter sailing will allow that, in moderate weather, they are the most easily worked vessels on the seas, but that, in boisterous and squally weather, they are difficult and dangerous, on account of the small division of canvas and the immense size of the mainsail. Put a bad helmsman to steer a cutter when running large, or before the wind, under a press of sail, and he will most probably carry away her mast by jibing; hence, in all such cases, and especially in stormy weather, the entire labour and duty devolves upon the few good seamen on board, the boys and ordinary mariners being almost useless, in fact generally sea-sick. The cutters may well, indeed, as you have so forcibly observed, be "signal beacons on the coast for the smugglers;" for what can they do, in gales of wind, when so manned, but seek for shelter and safety in the nearest harbour or roadstead? They are in themselves, from the causes I have described, ineffective; the few good men cannot be harassed to death, and the Commanders have no stimulus to exertion. Under the Admiralty they possessed, and never had taken from them, the wholesome power of entering their crews themselves, and the men came exclusively dependent upon their character and proficiency in seamanship, the consequence was, their vessels were always efficient and fit for any service upon which they might be required.

The Commanders were likewise thought fit and proper persons by their Lordships to exercise some little discretion as to the proper times for proceeding to, and keeping the sea; but they are now, in this respect also, mere ciphers, or at least men having a highly responsible charge, but stripped of any corresponding power or authority to induce them to an active and zealous discharge of their duty, and to keep up the proper discipline of their cutters.

It must be obvious to every one that it is to the interest of the Commanders of cutters, their officers and crews, to make prize-money if they can, to effect which very desirable end, as well as effectually to frustrate any infraction of the law by the "free trader," it is necessary for the Commanders to be allowed to avail themselves of times, tides, winds, moons, weather, the movements of the smugglers, and the departure from the coast of their vessels and boats. This discretionary power, I have every reason to believe, it is the intention of the Comptroller-General should be delegated to them; but such intention is in many, if not most, instances, contravened by the Inspecting Commanders of the districts where cutters are stationed, who take upon themselves the entire arrangement of these vessels going into port to victuel, and they generally manage this matter so sagaciously as to have them in for this purpose at certain fixed or stated periods, of which circumstance the cunning smuggler is perfectly aware, and makes his arrangements accordingly. Add to this, the cutters are driven out to sea, blow high, blow low, be landings of contraband goods impracticable or not, and the winds, tides, &c. what they may; and I think the picture is complete, although it may have been very feebly and imperfectly sketched.

I wish it to be distinctly understood it is the system, and not individuals that I war against, and I think, before I have concluded the series of letters I am writing upon the management, or rather mis-management of this department, it will be apparent to every one that I am endeavouring, first to point out its abuses, and then to submit a remedy, with the hope of correcting them, and thus to better the situations of ALL the officers, as well as the men, in it.

Naval Club, 10th March, 1836. Numa.

[In the first sentence of the fourth paragraph of Letter V. the compositor has transposed the words.]

Sir,—I have been most sorry to observe by your remarks in your number of the 19th, that you have changed your opinions relative to the making the seamen employed in the Coast Guard service a reserve for manning our Navy with the avent of aa emergency. In my humble judgment, s is the only excuse for keeping up so large and so costly establishment, that of heving none but active seamen in who should, when necessary, be called upon to serve in r ships of wai for months, or even for one or more years, bsolutely required, from nur not being able to get men ewhere. Nothing less than this considerstion should, or ght, to cause the outlay of n*bove six hundred thousnnd unds* per annum, for a sarvice which, as at present con- tuted, those who are best acquainted with its real utility, d with all its meritt, style a NUMEUO! CLAUDIUS.

[Our opiniou on this subject is not altered, but so long as perience proves that seamen will not eogage in the Coast usrd, nor even accept of situations therein when recom- ended foi such hy their Captsins, on paying off ships, wa nnot advocate a continuence of the system oo that score, place aay reliance upon this as a source for manning tbo et, when the men caonot he appropriated for that purpose less they volonteer. As ragards expense, it appears to us st whilst naval officers will cootinue to perform the duous end responsible duties nf this service for the pittaoce sy receive, there must bo a saving under that head, and so ng as it is necessary for the pretaction of the revenue to ard the coast, no chenper mode could probably be adopted. e shall bave much to say oo this subject when the letters Numa are concluded. In the mean time our columns c open to any counter statemants, convinced that out nf e discussion we shall elicit truth.—ED.]

HE STARVATION SYSTEM AT ADDISCOMBE.

SIR,—It would be doing an act of injustice to your cor- spondent C. M. B., who has so ably advorsted the cause the aterving Cadets at Addiscombe, were the letter sigoed ., published last week in the Nnval and Military axette, allowed to pass unnoticed. I cannot but think at the explsostion of this worthy geotleman would have ommanded more respect and attention, had he confined mself strictly to facts; but he has oot done so. He ap- ars to dwell much upon the diet of the Cadets of this miotary being on the seme scale as that of the Royal ilitary College at Sandhurst, but I am totally unable to sgine where he could heve obtsined his informatiun, for ost positive assurances bave been received from persons ll qualified to judge, that the food here is neither equal qusatity or quality, to that of the latter establishment. the letter alluded tn above, the meat issued to us is re- esented as the best, the quantity of vegetables unlimited, d the beer NOT small: now I am perfectly certain, that y person eoanected with Addiscombe would give his uo- alified contradiction to this statemant. Your corre- ondeut also observes that butter is allowed in the evenings, a ounce for each cadet. It is true that such is the quan- y which ought to be received, and, till this term, a regu- tion was in force empowering the senior Cadets of the spective messes to see this (our only luxury) weighed, d, of course, every one had his proper share, but now is privilege (or is it not our right?) has been denied, and e consequence is, that we are left entirely to the mercy half-starved servants, and rapacious purveyors. At andhurst (in direct contradiction to your correspondent), utter is served out at the morning meal, besides the Cadets aving the option of milk or tea, whereas here we can only tain the former beverage.

And now, Mr. Editor, I trust you will not imagine that omplaints have been made without foundatioa, and I ink a few words in conclusion, on another branch of the stitution, will not be out place. At the end of each term izes are awarded to those Cadets of the senior classes who stinguish themselves by proficiency in their studies, and eneral good behaviour; these incentives to honourable ertion have been reduced within the last six months to lf the former number, for the paltry consideration of a w pounds from the overflowing coffers of the Hon. Com- any, and, of course, there is not the same diligent applica- on to study, which these rewards formerly excited in the reasts of the competitors. Should you deem these hasty emarks worthy of insertion in your valuable paper, you will reatly oblige D. S.

[Sufficient grounds have been produced for a public in- uiry into this matter, and we therefore hope that those who refers to take an interest in the Institution will be pro- inent in demanding it. We shall not lose sight of the ubject.—ED.]

HE CASE OF COMMISSIONER AYSCOUGH, R.N.

SIR,—The warm, disinterested, and zealous manner in hich you espouse the cause of Naval and Military fficers, induces me to obtrude on your pages a few remarks n a paragraph in your paper of the week before last, re- pecting the unjust supersession of a gallant officer, Capt. yscough, the late Commissioner of the Bermudas, to hose case you have more than once alluded in terms doing onour to your disinterestedness and your love of justice. hesitate not to say it is my firm opinion such gross njustice had never taken place had your invaluable paper een in existence at the time, as it would have called loudly and publicly upon Sir James Graham to state why he had done, not only the gallant officer in question, but the service at large, so great a wrong; for it was a precedant establishing the fact that, in the Naval Service at any rate, there is no security for all that has heretofore been held most sacred—no security even in the myst word—the pstect of the sovemign by which the Commissioner of Ber- muda, in common with all other Commissioners, held his situation; but thet even this solemn pledge can be set aside as a thing nf nought at the will or caprice of any succeeding First Lord—a precedent dangerous to the service at large, and ruinous to the individual. It takes away that protec- tion the officer faithfully and zealously performing his duties has a right to aspect from that Board, appointed by the government of his country to protect his interests and to guard his rights, and where that protection is denied there can no redress be expected, though none can better under- stand than a Board of British officers the injury accruing from a great professional wrong; and an officer thus suffer- ing has no alternative, unhappily for the service, but to wait patiently in the hope of a late justice from some other Board of Admiralty, when it shall happily succeed that establishing the injury. Pity that in so noble a service such things should be allowed! Many, alas! are the pri- vations, the sufferings of our brave naval defenders, and shame be on him who would inflict an unnecessary pang on those who deserve so well of their country. It remained for the Naval Administration of Sir James Graham to insult, in this instance, the patent of his sovereign, and to abuse the high trust of his sovereign by superseding, whilst in the full and honourable discharge nf his official duties, a brave and tried officer, for no other reason than to suit his own caprice, thus establishing a precedent in the British Naval Service, of a wrong, a galling wrong, without a remedy.

A LOVER OF JUSTICE, AND AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

[We again repeat that this is a most grievous affair, and we would now implore Lord Minto and the gallant Naval Lords of the Admiralty Board to give it attention. We have taken up the case repeatedly but though we know Capt. Ayscough to be an officer universally respected and esteemed, we have only dealt with the matter as a question vitally affecting the whole naval service.—ED.]

OUT OF PLACE.

SIR,—By long habit accustomed to society, I cannot dis- pense with it but to a melancholy inconvenience; and having lately made an excursion into a contiguous county, I brought up at a certain town of some note, to break the monotony of travelling, and spent the day with a friend. At night, my rendesvous chanced to be at a "commercial" inn, a sort of caravansary for the resort of traffickers of all kinds, from fustian to broad cloth, or a minikin pin to a sheet anchor, and who, it appears, appropriate a particular room to themselves. When there arrived, Destiny directed me to the door of this sanctum, or "travellers' room;" and entering with becoming suavity, made my obeisance, and greeted the company in a manner which I thought quite au fait; but I was evidently "out of place," for my salutation had the effect only of attracting a general stare of surprise from the convivial assemblage of "bagsmen*," who deigned not to respond to the greeting. Taking a chair, however, nothing abashed, I was resolved to stick to my "bottom," and would have my "go," (the shiboleth of the fraternity, as I found, and meaning a glass of confounded strong grog) whilst I exhaled the fumes of the grateful narcotic, a prac- tice which appeared to pervade among all, and at 11 bore up for bed. On the following morning, came down undismayed from my dormitory, scraping my nails (an habitual practice) with a diminutive pair of pocket scissors kept for the pur- pose, and found the same party, dimly visible through the mists of sundry tea-pots at their morning meal. When behold, the fates smiled propitious! This symbol of in- dustry, the mighty scissors, small in themselves, but potent in their spell, had with magic effect stumpt me, no doubt, as a TAILOR! for I was received with a cordial "good morrow," and a chair pointed out, with an apologetic ex- planation that the "mistakes of the night" had led them to believe me to be "un Militaire," and consequently had precluded my being acknowledged as one of themselves! So that, as knight of the shears, I was heartily welcome, whereas, even the Great Captain himself, hedged as Knight Grand Cross of the Bath, and Commander-in-Chief of His Majesty's Forces to boot, would have been quietly consigned to the borough of Coventry, and the Tailor alone would be "chaired!" Such are the liberal principles of these level- ing days. My fortunes, however, were near being marred by the pertinent question of an inquisitive neighbour, who had just been discussing the merits of long wool and short, "as to the probable cost of a colonial coat, supposing the wool from Australia?" Taken aback for a moment, I was near foundering, when the "sweet little cherub who sits up aloft" happily suggested the response that "the cloth I dealt in was of a different texture, my business being in the canvas and cordage line alone." But whether I sunk or rose by thus getting out of the trammels of the TAILOR I am not prepared to say; suffice it, I passed current for the time, and took my departure by the very next coach.

ROYAL ARTILLERY BAND.

SIR,—Seeing an article headed with the above in your paper of 12th inst., and thinking it was written with a view of injuring the Band in the estimation of both civil and military, I beg to say, in the first place, your correspondent states that, on account of several of the Band refusing to salute officers, there was an inquiry made, and finding that some of them were not sworn in, they were ordered to take the oath or quit the corps. I think he was misinformed. There was an order put in force five or six years since that all soldiers in the Army who had not been sworn in (on account of being children when they enlisted) were either to take the oath then, or their discharge. A great many availed themselves of the latter alternative, and amongst others a few of the Band, who joined other regiments, and were promoted immediately.

It is well known that the men of the Band, however clever and well-behaved, have scarcely any chance of pro- motion, so that the greater part of them have extra pay, and are called musicians, to distinguish them from privates; and on account of playing stringed instruments, &c., (which are not military, and are procured at their own expense) by hard practice and a great expence to themselves they have got up so excellent orchestra, and play concert music, &c., for the amusement of their officers, for which they are al- lowed to play at private parties, and generally go in plain clothes. It seems to gall your correspondent that they are allowed to make money by teaching or playing. Now I am assured that several of them have paid half a guinea a lesson to the first masters to perfect themselves in their several instruments. Let me ask you, is it possible their military pay can support them in that? Your correspond- ent seems to think that they appear too respectable when teaching or playing at private parties—a strange crime. I hope you will excuse me for making these remarks, as I have no connection with the band, but have often been de- lighted at hearing them perform at concerts, &c., equal to some of the first orchestras in town.

BOYS FOR THE BRITISH NAVY.

SIR,—Aware that your excellent periodical is read at the Admiralty, and finding so many of your suggestions a- adopted by the members of that Board, I have been induced to beg the insertion in its pages this week, if possible, the following observations for the purpose of drawing the attention of their Lordships to a circumstance which I opine may prove of utility to the British Navy.

As the Government have determined on increasing the strength of this right arm of our defence, I would beg to suggest that Milford Haven, as being a fishing town of con- siderable importance, and consequently a nursery for sea- faring men, may be made a nursery also for our hitherto unconquerable Navy. This can easily be accomplished by placing a man-of-war on the station (and, indeed, for cogent reasons, in these threatening times, this is an event which should not be overlooked), and making her a receptacle for the admission of youths for the Navy. These could be trained on board, and on becoming efficient, be sent, at no extra expense, to Plymouth by the Dock-yard craft con- stantly plying between the ports, and draughted in such ships as may be fitting for sea at that or any other harbour. From my local knowledge, I may venture to assert a pretty considerable number (as Nathan would say) of boys may thus be annually insured to the fleets of "our home, our native isle."

I had intended, Mr. Editor, the very next time I had an opportunity of addressing you, attempting a return to the eloquent compliment paid me in your last Gazette by your able and convincing correspondent Tristram. But, Sir, so full of poesy was the paragraph respecting the "rose and the thorn," that, after ransacking the most flowery crevices of the most fertile corners of my pericranium, find every effort I can make "so cold and so dull," com- pared with his, that I must e'en give up the attempt; and that too although I called in the aid of Gall and Spur- heim's phrenological powers to find out the bump of com- positiveness, alias composition. Let him then take the will for the deed, and believe that stoical in the extreme must be those feelings which feel not the force of his beautiful simile. Burns says, in one of his beautiful songs—

Wi' lightsome heart I pu'd a rose,
Fu' sweet upon it's thorny tree;
And my fause love has stole my rose,
But, ah! he left the thorn wi' me.

Sincerely hoping neither Tristram nor myself may be doomed to such a fate, in presenting, as he remarks, "a rose to adorn beauty's breast," as that above declared the ploughman poet, I remain, &c. PHILOTHEORUS.

BARRACK REGULATIONS.

[Having only in view the good of the Service, we do not hesitate to publish the following objections to some of suggestions in our last on the order of the 12th of Aug

836, respectfng the issue of coals and candles to officers in arracks.—Ed.]

Sir,—Permit me to call your attention to the conse- uences which would result from the plen of allowing arried or single officers going into lodgings the power of iving up their rooms to another.

1st. It would open a fertile field for difference and dis- ontent amongst the officers. The eldest Captain might elect his room, and then resign it to the youngest Subaltern, nd neither the discipline nor the harmony of a corps would, apprehend, be benefitted by such a proceeding.

2nd. It would open a door to abuse, if an officer entitled om his rank to a good barrack-room were empowered to ive it over to a junior officer. Without meaning the ightest reflection on my brother officers, I hesitate not to ay that out of this would arise clandestine and improper argains, and money might even be given for such exchanges. n fact, calculations would be made between the expense of arrack-rooms with coals and lodgings, and it would become matter of traffic between the married and the unmarried fficer. I need not point out the infinite mischief that would nevitably be the consequence of such a system.

The extra accommodation proposed is granted at all times s far as possible; the Barrack-Masters have the power, t the request of the Commanding Officer, when they have he means; and for many reasons it is better that it should ether rest with the Commanding Officer then with the Barrack-Master, even if at times there is a little favouritism.

A Soldier.

TRISTRAM'S SPEECH BEFORE THE HOUSE OF COMMONS ON THE WRONGS OF THE NAVY.

The Post Captains are not paid according to their seni- ority, but the class of ship which they command. Of H. M.'s ships there are six classes or rates. The first giving 300*l.*, the sixth 349*l.* only per annum; so that an officer of 32 years' standing, Capt. Dunn, in the Curacoa, received but 349*l.*, whilst his very junior officer, Capt. Sparshott, in the Winchester, of 6 years' standing, receives 500*l.*, and if he follows the flag into a first-rate, he will receive 800*l.*, without the expense of a separate table. I am confident, my Lords and Gentlemen, you will not reject my proposal that the rates of payment should be four instead of six: first-rates, as at present, 800*l.*; all two-decked ships, 700*l.*; frigates of 50 guns and upwards, 600*l.*, all under, 500*l.*; sloops, 300*l.*, as at present; small vessels, commanded by Lieutenants, 200*l.*; and a half-year's salary of each rate or class, as a parliamentary grant to each officer for his travel- ling expenses, lodgings, and outfit for cabin furniture on first-commissioning his ship.

To encourage seamen to enter the Navy voluntarily, and to avoid the necessity of impressment to man our fleets in time of need, it has been thought advisable by the legisla- ture to increase their bounties and pensions, and to enact further laws for their general benefit. His Majesty in Council has been graciously pleased to take half of the shares of rewards for the seizure of smugglers and slavers from the Flag Officers, Captains, Commanders, and Com- manding Officers of H.M.'s ships and vessels; and the Ad- miralty, to benefit the Clerk, has taken the purserage from the Lieutenant in separate command, which reduces his in- come to 150*l.* only, whilst his next superior in a sloop-of- war has twice the amount, 300*l.*

These circumstances, submitted with the most profound respect to your generous consideration, I anxiously hope will not fail to touch your benevolent hearts—to open the strings of a grateful nation's purse, deposited in your just hands, liberally, in reward the deserving, faithful servants of the Crown.

An officer's pride and study are to serve his country upon any service, however perilous: he will spend his last shil- ling in his three years' employment to keep up a respectable appearance in dress and at table, to the credit and honour of the British flag, in the most remote habitable part of the globe, and in the purchase of expensive works, chronome- ters, and nautical instruments, without which the ship, the nation's property, he commands, cannot be safely and expe- ditiously navigated; yet, in defiance of his skill, foresight, and experience, if his ship be destroyed by fire or shipwreck —if he miraculously escape naked to a barren rock, or inhospitable strand, as destitute a being as ever the human mind pictured—if chance bring this unfortunate officer home, you will not repay him for his losses; no, you will let him lie incarcerated for the debt of his outfit, destroyed in a moment by the elements. But if a soldier officer be unhappily placed in the same forlorn situation, you instantly make him happy: you have granted to him an immediate and fair remuneration for his losses. In any part of the world a British factor will cash his bill upon his agent for the amount, and once more equipped at the expense of the country he is serving, he forgets his misfortune, and renews his duty in her service with her wonted zeal and energy. Have you forgotten the fate of the Blenheim, Boyne, Ajax, Queen Charlotte, Athenienne, Cato, Royal George, St. George, Defence, Venerable, Hero, Minotaur, Saldanha, and numerous smaller vessels? Is it obliterated from your memories that thousands of your fellow countrymen are in those ships, channelled in the deep? Have you not forgot- ten to pay the widows, parents, or orphans, the fair value of the property irrecoverably lost with their lamented husbands, sons, and fathers? But have you not compensated the widows, the children, the mothers, the sisters, or executors of every land-officer who lost either beg or baggage by the all-swallowing sea or capturing enemy?

To add to these, the hardships and sorrows of the Navy, the administration of 1830 excluded, in many instances, the sea officers' widows from pensions. If a Captain, Com- mander, or Lieutenant, has not been commissioned, or Master or Purser warranted, 10 years, either officer is agonised in his dying moments with the certainty that his wife will soon be unprovided for, although he may have faithfully served his country 30 or more years, whilst his very inferior officer, a second Lieutenant of Marines or Assistant-Surgeon, has the consolation of knowing, before he breathes his last, that his widow will be pensioned, be- cause he has served 10 years only!!! My Lords and Gen- tlemen, place your hands on your Britons' hearts, and say, is this British justice?

If sea officers lose their eyes or limbs in the service of their king and country, why are not their pensions made equal to the pensions of the land officers? Why are not the sea officers' full pay, half pay, remuneration for loss of effects, pensions for services and wounds, pensions for their widows, mothers, children, and sisters, equal in every degree with the land officers of equal rank? The "Why they are not" constitutes the Navy's sorrow—the Navy's wrongs!! In twenty short years the British Navy destroyed the Fleets of Denmark, Holland, France, and Spain; at- tacked the stone fortifications of the metropolis of the Dane, the Algerine, and the Turk; captured or blockaded the confederate fleets of maritime nations, combined for the in- vasion of your native land, the spoliation of your private property, the violation of your cherished homes. In 1814, did not foreign potentates review the British Fleet at Spit- head—the destructress of their fleets, the triumphant mis- tress of the seas, the envy and admiration of the world? Did not the Prince Regent of England welcome and enter- tain, on the quarter-deck of Britannia's ark, Emperors, Kings, and Princes? The standard of England which proudly floated o'er sovereign heads—the many British Unions waving in the breeze—the several convoys, in all 500 merchant ships, freighted with British merchandise and manufactures, which at that happy moment weighed for every part of the globe—the united, loyal, enthusiastic cheers of thousands of British seamen accompanying the saluting broadsides of British thunder—were the proud and grand exhibition of England's majesty, wealth, prosperity, freedom, loyalty, magnificence, power, and dominion. Then shone the brightest day of England's Naval glory!!! Then existed the happiness, the pride, the exultation of the Navy!!!

"But joy's recollection is no longer joy,
When sorrow's memory is a sorrow still."

Twenty years after these glorious days, the Navy's pride is lowered by the intended abolition of the honourable posts of Vice and Rear-Admirals of the United Kingdom, Gene- rals and Colonels of Marines—9 Naval sinecures!!! When you liberally continue to vote annually at least 120,000*l.*, the salaries of about 135 Military sinecures, the Colonel- cies of regiments, and 71,500*l.* to reward 477 land officers with full pay in retirement—a benefit not extended to any ONE sea officer!!!

When Sailors and Marines have boarded the enemy side by side—when the Navy and Army, co-operating in the re- duction of a territory, island, town, or battery, have mingled their blood in each other's support, or shared in victory—is it not heart-rending to the Naval officers, returning to their native shore, to observe their brother victors decorated with honours, ribands, and medals—their wounded companions in arms rewarded with higher pensions than themselves, although equally wounded, victorious, and deserving, of equal rank, and of equal service to their King and country? I pledge my honour the Navy ask not, or expect not, the vote of 120,000*l.* to pay 135 Naval sinecurists, nor 71,500*l.* to retire 477 sea officers on full pay; but it humbly pe- titions that the widows of the sea officers who die 10 years from the date of the certificate of examinations for their respective ranks, may receive pensions, and that the sea officer's pensions for wounds may be made equal to those of the land officers. This is a right to which the Navy is justly and lawfully entitled, as every sea officer, from his boyhood, contributed a monthly subscription to the Widows' Fund Chest of Chatham and Greenwich Hospital, the funds of which, instead of being appropriated to its legiti- mate and benevolent purposes, the pensions of wounded officers, their widows, and their orphans, were diminished at least 300,000*l.* to decorate and repair Windsor Castle!!! But the Navy trusts, and confidently expects, an annual vote of 40,000*l.*, to enable the Admiralty to form a "re- served half-pay list," for the variously unqualified, to in- crease the half-pay of the qualified and the active; to form a "retired list" for the veterans and the wounded, with increased rank and pay; and to increase, in certain cases, the pay of Mates, Sea-Lieutenants, and Post Captains, de- prived of the half of their prize rewards, and continual employment to the young Naval gentlemen. This generous trifle would gladden the heart of the Navy, make the sea officer forget his wounds and his wrongs, his widow her woe and her poverty, and his orphan its hunger and its wretch- edness.

My Lords and Gentlemen,—I beg your acceptance of my most humble apology for intruding on your valuable time, and for not entrusting the sea officers' claims to the advocacy of the Naval M.P's. I appear in your presence by the constitutional right of a freeborn subject of this king- dom, to plead the cause of my brother officers, their widows, and their children, who have here no advocates—no repre- sentatives—no friends!!! The Naval officers, members of your honourable House, represent not the Navy, but coun- ties and boroughs, and are, whilst serving their constituents, estranged from their profession, and regardless of the interest and welfare of their old shipmates and companions —resolute and courageous in the fight—determined and vociferous in command—in the senate, upon the wrongs of the Navy, "nerveless, tame, and mute."

"May freedom—wisdom, mark your laws,
Justice—reason, each act an' clause;
Navy an' Army wi' three huzzas
By sea an' strand,
Proclaim all's just, in either cause,
In Britain's land."

UNITED SERVICE MUSEUM.

Sir,—Had your correspondent X. taken the trouble to read the report of the Council of the United Service Museum, he would have perceived that the 200*l.* he men- tions have been expended in the Model Room and Armoury. I am not far wrong in saying that not more than a dozen birds have been stuffed this year. Why did not X. state the other abuses he alludes to at the General Meeting, when, if such exist, they might have been rectified.

Thanks.

THE SCHOOL OF NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.

Sir,—Having by accident seen a letter, signed Yorick, in No. 161 of your paper, reflecting too generally on the members of the School of Naval Architecture, and perceiv- ing that you have already remarked on the severity of Yorick's previous censures of that body, I am induced to believe that you will not object to allow a few words from one of the accused a place in your Journal. That you and many others may believe that "the opinions of the body were represented by a certain number of them," who are au- thorised to deliver the sentiments of all in pamphlets and paragraphs is probable; that you can be aware of such a circumstance is impossible, since (as far as my knowledge extends) no such compact was ever formed; at least it never was proposed to me, nor did it ever receive my con- currence or consent. To suppose that between twenty and thirty men, disagreeing as much in their opinions on general subjects as they differ in their persons, should have pledged themselves to a particular dogma in early youth, and have all obstinately adhered to the support of it for more than twenty years, (some of the students having left the College so long) in opposition to experience, reason, and conviction, as your correspondent says is the case, is to imagine a thing that never did, and, while human nature remains as it is now constituted, never can occur. Yorick, in saying that there are many of the students who are converts to Capt. Symonds' system, and who concede the full benefit of that plan, but who, as they have committed themselves, still advocate the opposite principles, charges the individuals who could not think but act inversely with a high moral crime. It can be no reproach to a man that his belief is erroneous, but a merited stigma that he defends what he discredits, and ad- vocates what he knows to be wrong.

Finding that these papers, which evidently emanate from some of the members of the School of Naval Architecture were universally supposed to be written for (if not by) the whole body, I became anxious to relieve myself from a portion of this undesired and undeserved responsibility. To effect this object, I long since publicly declared my sen- timents on Capt. Symonds's system of construction, which not even Yorick can appreciate higher than I do. By thus disclaiming any participation in the too comprehensive "we," I have, I believe, given offence to some with whom I have for many years been in habits of friendly intimacy; much as I must regret this, I cannot permit private feeling to overcome public duty.

Do not imagine, Sir, that I have been led to make this statement of my sentiments from the vanity of attaching too much weight to the influence of my individual opinion—my motive for doing so is this:—the writers of the papers alluded to by Yorick have no doubt adopted the vague indefinite edi- torial "we" (which may include any number from two to the whole body) because they believed it to be more influential than their own names appended to the observations. This style of expression has, however, implicated them in the which has been deemed a factious opposition rather than endeavour to establish science; those who have been silent from a wish to avoid controversy, not from an undoubt-udgment. As it is only by a denial on the part of those who dislike to bear burthens which they have not helped to place on their own backs, that they can hope to disentangle themselves from them, on this principle I have now and formarly published my opinions. If there be many of the former students of Naval Architecture (and I see no reason to doubt Yorick's assertion that there are) who admit the correctness of Capt. Symonds's principles of construction—who allow that it is a system which can be theoretically, and has been practically, proved to have made great advancement in the improvement of our Navy, why should they hesitate to range themselves on its side; it is better, and far more honourable, to confess to an error once entertained, than obstinately to persevere, even tacitly, in it, after conviction.

JOHN ALLAN, Naval Architect.

ASSISTANT-SURGEONS OF THE ROYAL NAVY.

SIR,—As you have been kindly pleased to insert in your widely circulated and influential pepor my letter of the 25th ult., detailing a few of the grievances of the Assistant-Surgeons of the Royal Navy, I have again ventured to address you in continuation of the subject, to point out how those grievances may in some measure be redressed, and justice done to that class of officers without any material increase of expence to the country. They unquestionably ought to be put on an equal footing with the Assistant-Surgeons of the Army, by a progressive increase of pay and half-pay according to their length of service (say, after 10 years' service, to 7*s.* 6*d.* full, and 3*s.* 6*d.* half-pay per diem, and to 9*s.* and 4*s.* 6*d.* per diem after 20 years'), and granting them the power of retiring, retaining their half-pay, after 30 years' actual employment. At present, Assistant-Surgeons of 3 years' service have as much pay and half-pay as those of 30; and the medical officers are the only class entitled to half-pay who get no increase according to seniority. In some classes the half-pay increases even although the individuals may never have been employed after obtaining that rank.

In the next place, in giving increase of pay, half-pay, and retirement to Surgeons in the Navy according to services, let all their service time as Assistant-Surgeons be included, as it is in the Army, and not only 3 years of such time as at present. The old but deserving Assistant-Surgeons would thus be placed on a more equal footing with their fortunate but not more deserving brethren even in the Navy who obtained early promotion; and every one who "conducted himself with diligence, attention, and sobriety," would thus be enabled to look forward to the time when, with a decent competence for himself and family, he could retire from the cares and anxieties of a professional life, and the turmoil and privation unavoidable in a naval one. But at present only the fortunate few who are promoted in early life can possibly serve the requisite time (i. e. 27 years as Surgeons) that entitles them to retire. Depriving Assistant-Surgeons of time by the sentence of a Court-Martial would thus also become a real, instead of, as at present (provided such sentence leaves them still 3 years' servitude untouched), only a nominal punishment, as promotion is never obtained by seniority. To balance in some measure the increase of expense thus incurred, appointing Assistant-Surgeons to vessels commanded by Commanders may be discontinued, and also the half-pay of all those under 3 years' servitude. The next grievance to be redressed is their rank. As civilians on board of ship, this may be considered by many as a matter of little consequence; but as it at present stands, have not the Junior Mate and Second Master a prior claim to any accommodation the Service may afford to even the oldest Assistant-Surgeon on the list? and I have frequently known a spare cabin given to a Mate or Second Master when the Assistant-Surgeon, much their senior both in years and in the service, had none. I have also known many instances of Assistant-Surgeons possessing cabins when the Mates and Second Masters were without them; but, it is evident, that was not strictly speaking "the Service," but an arrangement of the Captain's. Whereas if Assistant-Surgeons took precedence with the Mates according to seniority, they could, in most instances, have claimed such indulgence. By not possessing cabins, they have no opportunity of keeping pace with the improvements daily made in their profession, although the serious importance of that profession or of those improvements can be called in question by no one. On board ship, Assistant-Surgeons, like all those with whom they are classed, are allowed only space for a chest and bed; and where, it may justly be asked, can they stow their instruments, and a select number of professional books? without a constant reference to which it is quite impossible to prevent retrograding in their professional knowledge, even granting that the Midshipmen's berth is a fit place for study or reading of any kind. The propriety of admitting Assistant-Surgeons to the Ward-room has long been a subject of warm discussion, and will continue to be so until conceded. It would not only be considered an act of justice to them, but, in the opinion of many competent to judge, the Service, as well as the individuals, would be materially benefitted by extending that privilege to all Mates, Second Masters, Assistant-Surgeons, and Clerks.

Upon what principle the new scale for the distribution of prize money, which classes Assistant-Surgeons with Captains of tops, Coxswains of boats, Boatswains' Mates, Serjeants of Marines, &c., has been constructed, I am perfectly at a loss to discover. Neither rank, pay, responsibility, nor risk can have been laid down as the basis, and acted upon consistently throughout. If Assistant-Surgeons are not considered entitled to share with subalterns of Marines, Mates, Second Masters, and Warrant Officers not ranking with Lieutenants, they surely do not deserve the degradation inseparable from being classed with the working petty officers, but at least should have been put on a separate list, together with the Clerks. Had they even been allotted four shares each, it would have drawn a distinct line of demarcation, and, without much increasing the sum, would have saved them the humiliating reflection that they are looked upon by those in authority in such a degraded light. By these or similar suggestions being adopted, and the medical officers of the Navy thus placed on a better footing, the Service at large would be benefitted, and many talented individuals rescued from a life of idleness, carelessness, and dissipation.

PASSED MIDSHIPMEN AND SMALL CRAFT.

SIR,—In the years 1804 and 5, Lord Melville, then First Lord of the Admiralty, established a rank between a Lieutenant and Midshipman, called Sub-Lieutenants, who were appointed to all vessels where a Lieutenant commanded, which gave general satisfaction to the Service, not only as relieving the Lieut. Commanding in his duties, but giving a step between the rank of Lieut. and Midshipman. This most proper and essential grade, I am sorry to observe, has been suffered to pass into the waters of mighty oblivion; it is much to be regretted, and if the present First Lord were to revive it it would be the means of bringing forward some of the many poor fellows of passed Midshipmen who now see little, if any, hope of promotion, after their long services, and the weary years that have rolled along from the period of passing. There were two Midshipmen allowed in the craft alluded to; one of these of four years' standing, and the other a Master's Mate (having passed for Lieut.) with the rank of Sub-Lieut. This would be a great acquisition to his Majesty's Service, as it would initiate them (all, if made a General Order, for who knows when he may be called upon to take command of such a vessel?) in the management of "small craft," thereby gaining greater experience not only in seamanship, but the most essential part—a knowledge of the channels and shores of the different coasts, as the "small craft" are always stationed in shore, while ships of a superior class are kept at a distance. Midshipmen too frequently serve their whole time in line-of-battle ships and frigates, and are generally made Lieutenants into large ships, and, if possessing interest, are afterwards appointed to gun-brigs, cutters, &c.; the fore and aft mainsail, in a squall, requires the greatest attention, as the vessel frequently broaches too in spite of her helm, and, if a heavy sea on, have often gone down stern foremost. We have sufficiently melancholy proofs that some such measure as I have suggested should be adopted, from the losses we have experienced in the Falmouth Packets since they changed their Commanders to Lieutenants, as nine out of ten are unqualified for that class of vessels. Now, Mr. Editor, lend "a helping hand," for I know, by "a little familiar," that your journal is in repute in the proper quarter, and if you add a hint or two to my humble effort, something may be carried into effect for the young (no, many at least are old) fellows who have been so long looking forward to "hope deferred."

AN OLD LIEUTENANT, well experienced in "Small-craft."

WRONGS OF THE NAVY.

SIR,—In continuation of some remarks upon the above subject, which you did me the favour to insert in your valuable columns of the 20th ult., I was lately forcibly struck with a practical exemplification of my assertion, that the Navy failed in union and esprit de corps, as manifested in the exhibition of the Navy Estimates, when it appeared that only one liberal, dignified, and high-minded officer, of rank and of distinguished services, expressed his dissatisfaction at the illiberal conduct shown to his profession. To use the gallant Admiral's own words:—"No encouragement is given to naval officers, when a Lieutenant is called upon to serve for two shillings[a] a-day, how can it be expected that an officer will leave the bosom of his family for such a pittance?" When a general impression was made upon the house. I state this to show that union is alone wanted to convince the country of our wrongs. An enlightened and reformed Parliament will I trust throw down are long the barrier to our claims, which antiquated prejudices have rendered almost insurmountable. The first opposition to them is said to have taken place at the time it was proposed to give the Lieutenant the pay of his grade, 10*s.* 6*d.*, when Lord Howe opposed it, observing that by keeping them poor they will serve well. In his Lordship's time the country was in comparative ignorance, and the manners of all classes simple and plain, compared with the present day, when a certain necessary appearence is called for to uphold both the credit of the country and profession. Now, what Lord Howe called positive poverty, a virtue peculiarly suited, in his estimation, to uphold a high and dignified spirit, so essential to the well-being of the service, was in fact but a trifle less than the present pay, when money was at least 100 per cent. more valuable; but, as the age became better informed poverty was found to depress rather than to elevate the mind to noble daring. Here, then, was another notable discovery by Lord St. Vincent, that if the officers had rather more than sufficient to meet the ordinary contingencies of his station, he would be urged into the holy bonds of matrimony and be useless to the service. If a man be so grossly imprudent as to involve himself in heavy responsibilities upon 10*s.* 6*d.* a-day, which is not quite the thing to luxuriate upon even in the single state, I do not hesitate to say, that he would do so on 6*s.* 7*d.* a-day, his present pay. In this case the man's imagination is more capacious than his understanding, where hope dawns forth in the mind the brilliant prospects of better days, and in many respects it is perhaps better such a one should marry than be sunk into vices of far more pernicious tendency, to the individual on service. But, Sir, are we really doomed to be cut off from the charities of life as a return for the loss of domestic comfort, and for shedding our blood for the weal of what, in this case, would be a black ungrateful country? If ever Providence visit this country from the forgetfulness of the blessings which he has bestowed upon it by her Navy, by the ravages of a cruel enemy, then would our devotion and services be truly valued. It is said of Themistocles, when his son expressed a wish to pursue the path of military glory, that he pointed out to his son's observation some condemned gallies saying, "when your strength and abilities are exhausted you will be treated in a similar manner." I do still hope that Great Britain will never cause history to defile its pages with the relation of similar black ingratitudes. No, no, Sir, the fault is within ourselves; union and perseverance to exhibit our just claims will doubtless meet from our enlightened and reformed Parliament substantial gratitude. In requesting an early insertion of these few remarks I shall feel much obliged, as I trust your valuable paper will be still further the means of rendering, if not perfect justice to the Navy, at least essential service to it.

Invulnerable Steam Battery.—Mr. Roosevelt, of New York, has invented a formidable machine for warlike purposes, called an "Invulnerable Steam Battery." His method is by making the bows and stern of the vessel quite sharp, and plating them with polished iron armour, with high bulwarks and sharp roof also plated in like manner, with the design of glancing the balls, which can be done if the angle of incidence be sufficiently acute. The means of offence are a torpedo which is made to lower on nearing the enemy and be driven by a mortar into the enemy's side under water, where by a fuse it will explode. There is also a very large cannon at each end of the battery, to use in case circumstances should render an attack by the torpedo impracticable. There are also mortars to throw all kinds of combustibles upon the sails and decks of opponents. The mode of approach is always to keep one of the ends of the battery opposed to the enemy. There are means to prevent balls from reaching any part of the machinery.

Best Receipts for Cooks.—To make a Match.—Catch a young gentleman and lady, the best you can—let the young gentleman be raw, and the young lady quite tender. Set the gentleman at the dinner-table; put in a good quantity of wine, and whilst he is soaking stick in a word or two every now and then about Miss: this will help to make him boil. When getting red in the gills take him out into the drawing-room, set him by the lady, and sop them both with green tea; then set them at the piano and blow the flame till the lady sings. When you hear the gentleman sigh, it is time to take them off, as they are warm enough. Put them by themselves in a corner of the room, or on a sofa, and there let them simper together for the rest of the evening. Repeat this three or four times, taking care to place them side by side at the dinner, and they will be ready for marriage whenever you want them. After marriage great care must be taken, as they are apt to turn sour.

Sugar from Beet-root.—Messrs. Fies and Stanewal of Quedlinburgh, in Westphalia, have discovered a process whereby, in twelve hours, 10 pounds of pure sugar perfectly crystalised, may be extracted from 100lbs. of beet-root. The secret was immediately purchased by M. Brokhuff, of Wisburg, for 20,000 f., with the condition that it should not be used beyond the provinces of the Rhine and Westphalia.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, MARCH 26, 1836.

A PORTION of the Duke of Wellington's Evi-ence before the Commissioners appointed to nquire into Military Punishments will be found our columns. The subject has been repeatedly scussed in all its bearings in this paper, but still e think it right, though pressed for space, to re-ord in the Naval and Military Gazette the opinions f the highest military authority in Europe on Corporal Punishment. No one can possibly read, ithout admiring the clear and manly evidence of is straightforwerd soldier; it should be sufficient o put an end to all silly and idle experiments in egard to the present system of the British Army, system which is proved, by the Report and Evi-ence before us, to be superior to the system of very Army in Europe. However, as the daily apers of this week have so completely surfeited he public mind with this topic, we shall withhold, or the present, the few remarks we still desire to ffer, and now merely call attention to the evidence f the General who commanded for a series of ears the British Army, and led it invariably o victory.

IN our paper of the 12th inst. we took occasion o call the attention of the authorities to the ex-enditure of private means which it becomes ab-olutely necessary for an Officer to incur upon ppointment to the command of a ship, with the ttle hope of reimbursement in time of peace, hen there is no chance of prize-money, and the nly lucrative branch of the Service (namely, eights of specie) is limited to but few of those ips employed, and those of the smaller classes. In the French and American Navies, where, wing to circumstances needless to mention, prize-oney, in time of war, forms no part of the calcu-tion of emolument (the chance of being captured eing much greater than that of capturing), mat-rs are so provided by the Government that the ost or supply of the necessary outfit is always rovided. Indeed, in our own Service, this is done o a certain extent; for a quantity of furniture, eddiag, &c., fitted for the cabins of steam-vessels nd packets is kept in store at Woolwich, and sup-lied in certain cases, upon a charge (we believe) f five per cent. on the value. We think this ay be extended, particularly as regards plate nd furniture, to the whole Navy, with great ad-antage, at a very moderate expense after the irst outlay; and thus our ships would be enabled o make the same display in foreign ports that hose of rival states now do. We have more han once made this suggestion, and the subject as been recalled to our minds just now when canning over and contemplating the appointments announced last week, appointments every one admits to be most impartial, on many accounts, but which we fear must be held at a sacrifice of private means which may be inconvenient to some of the Officers. Surely it is a sad anomaly that an Officer should not only devote his youth and prospects to the toils and privations of an arduous and perilous profession, but, after serving with honour and credit through the subordinate ranks, find himself, when called to the distinguished post of commanding a ship of the line, under the neces-sity of contributing some hundreds of pounds per annum from his private purse for the support of that dignity which the usage of the Service ex-pects the Captain of a King's ship to maintain. Admitting the honour of the command, and the obligation for serving to entitle him to his flag, to be sufficient inducement to enter into the compe-tition with the scions of nobility and men of for-tune for this distinction, it is too much to expect that he shall be a loser for his zeal; yet such must be the case, unless indeed he declines to in-vite his Officers in the usual manner, and keep up that state and dignity so conducive to the respect-ability and the discipline of the Service. Every disposition has been shown on the part of the Le-gislature to hold out inducements to Seamen to enter the British Navy and to serve therein; and perhaps the most considerable of these induce-ments (the most considerable, certainly, in time of war) is the great increase of prize-money to the Petty Officers before the mast and Seamen, which has been made, at the sacrifice of the Captain, by reducing his share. We do not think that were the case fairly stated to Parliament (and no Mem-ber of the House can state a case more clearly or concisely than the present mouth-piece of the Admiralty), a single objection could be made to placing the Commanders of our ships in the same position as to their emoluments as those of the ships of other nations. We trust the Board of Admiralty will take this matter into their consi-deration, and when next the Estimates are framed give directions to their talented Secretary to make out such a case as shall insure a cheerful com-pliance with this reasonable demand, that Officers serving their King and country in honourable commands, shall not be obliged to sacrifice their private fortunes in supporting the dignity of such, to the distress, and probably ruin, of their fami-lies. Let those legislators who are continually contending for the advancement of merit, and the more equal distribution of appointments and pro-motions, first ascertain whether the situations, when attained, are such as are desirable to a great majority of Naval Officers, who have no private fortunes, and who, on many occasions, will rather ruin and embarrass themselves than that the Service should lose any of its dignity in their persons.

THE very judicious system of military patroles, so promptly adopted by Major-General Sir Ed-ward Blakeney, Commanding the Forces in Ire-land, in support of the civil authorities in their endeavours to check the disposition to outrages of an agrarian, not a political nature, which has re-cently manifested itself in the counties of Tip-perary and Roscommon, has been attended with the most beneficial effects. The well disposed are gradually assuming confidence, and a dangerous riot has been checked in the outset, which, had it been allowed to exert its baneful influence but for a short time longer, would have completely disor-ganised the state of society in that part of the country, and would have produced in the counties have mentioned a repetition of the frightful ex-cesses which distinguished the system of terror so successfully established by daring and reckless in-dividuals, in the county of Clare, in the year 1831.

WE are confidently assured, that Lord Elphin-stone, a Captain in the Royal Horse Guards (Blue) and a Lord of the Bedchamber, has been appointed to the important post of Governor of Madras. The age of his Lordship, we believe, is twenty-eight, and we may therefore presume, that neither Lieu-tenant-General Lord Edward Somerset, nor any other old General Officer of the King's Army, will succeed Sir Robert O'Cellaghan as Commander-in-Chief at that Presidency. A slight effort, on the part of the Court of Directors, would, under such peculiar circumstances, obtain the latter ap-pointment for Major-General Sir John Doveton of the Company's Army.

AMONGST the different new arrangements which it is said are about to be carried into execution in the Navy, we trust that the Admiralty mean to include in them one which we heard was some months ago contemplated; we allude to the appel-lation of the Commissioners of our Dock-Yards and Governors of our Naval Hospitals, for of all the titles that could have been devised for these su-perior Officers, that of SUPERINTENDENT was cer-tainly the most degrading and insulting, associ-ating it, as we must do, with the only other perso thus designated in our Dock-Yards—the Superin-tendent of Convicts.

Why or wherefore the old and respected name of Commissioner in our Naval Arsenals and that of Governor in our Naval Hospitals, were meta-morphosed into that of Superintendent in each, we are wholly at a loss to understand, unless the object was to lessen the respectability hitherto attached to these situations. Believing, then, as we sincerely do, that our present Naval rulers will anxiously seek every opportunity of upholding the Naval Service, and of adding to its character in every form, we confidently hope that we shall ere long find that the report, which reached us some time since, is correct, and that the good old title of Commissioner in our Dock-Yards and of Governor of our Naval Hospitals is restored.

THE names of the gallant Officers which we gave in our last number, as having been appointed to command ships, will have shown the Navy that strict justice and impartiality has marked the con-duct of the First Lord of the Admiralty in making these selections. Of the whole of the five Captains thus nominated, one only has had a ship within the last fifteen years, that is to say Captain Bouverie, and he did but, we are told, complete the usual period of three years in the Windsor Castle, which he commissioned in 1828, consequently he was fairly entitled to another ship. As regards the other four, Captains Sharpe and Sullivan are both Companions of the Bath, and were distinguished in the late war; Captain Festing, also, we hear distinguished himself on the East India statio under the late Admiral Lord Exmouth, and he moreover the son of an old and highly meritorious officer; Captain Fisher likewise stands high in the service, and he has not had the fortune of obtaining a command for the last twenty years.

With such facts before us, it is impossible to deny but these appointments are just and fair, and consequently that they do honour to the impartiality of the Earl of Minto.

Since the above was in type, we find three more ships have been commissioned: viz. the Hercules, by Captain Berkeley; the Pembroke, by Captain Sir Thomas Fellowes, C.B., the gallant Commandar of the Dartmouth at the battle of Navarin; and the Bellerephon, by Captain Samuel Jackson, C.B., who, from Coxswain to Sir Richard Keats, was raised, through sheer merit, to be the Flag Captain of that distinguished Admiral. The subordinate appointments are equally unexceptionable.

As we had always predicted, the system of entering men for general service has not been found to answer, because every man naturally likes to know the Captain and officers he is to serve under; and, as in the Army, every soldier chooses the regiment in which he thinks fit to enlist, and from which he cannot be transferred without his own consent, so we consider that our sailors should always, in like manner, be allowed to enter for a particular ship, and to volunteer for any other were it necessary to transfer them. Were it possible to name the station also on which such ship was about to be employed, as well as the period (within a few months) for which they were to be entered, we are assured that it would tend greatly to facilitate the manning of our fleet at all times; for some men prefer one station and some another; hence if they could learn that, on which they were to be sent, we are positive it would cause very many more men to enter our Navy than otherwise would do so. As there cannot, we think, be any important reasons why these facts might not always, unless on some extraordinary occasion, be stated, we hope that we shall find some regulation of this sort has been adopted, as we have heard is likely to be the case.

We have lately heard numerous complaints from officers of the East India Company's service, on the subject of fees demanded from them at the India House on receiving the certificate granting them permission to return to India at the expiration of the period allowed them to remain in England, whether on private affairs or on medical certificate. Without friends with whom they can spend a great portion of their time, Subalterns are miserably off, and must submit to numerous privations, and forego entirely the medical aid required in most cases for the re-establishment of their health, so much impaired from long service and residence in the East, and are consequently compelled to trust entirely to the change of climate for recovery.

The sum of two guineas is taken from a Lieutenant, five guineas from a Captain, ten from a Major, and so in proportion for the other grades of the service. These fees coming suddenly on an officer at the point of equipping himself for his return (for very few are aware they have anything to pay until they receive their certificate) are regarded as a grievous imposition.

The officers of H. M.'s service are not called upon to pay any fees when they proceed to join their regiments stationed in the East Indies. Why then should such an oppressive system be permitted to exist at the India House towards their own officers? or why an exemption in favour of the officers of the King's service? Is this fair? Is it just? We will in charity conceive the Directors are ignorant of this system, and that, on being made acquainted, they will immediately suppress it. There can be no fair pretence for allowing the already liberally paid Secretaries and Clerks in Leadenhall-street thus glaringly to pick the pockets of the less paid and needy servants of the Company, who sacrifice their constitutions and lives in their service. We are told that the average yearly amount of these fees is about three thousand pounds.

At the United Service Museum on Saturday last a Lecture on steam navigation and the effects produced upon the magnetic needle on board iron steam vessels, was given by Professor Ritchie. Fully assured that courses of lectures from that gentleman, and other professors, would tend to save this institution from the wholly useless and very low condition into which it is falling, we have yet reason to think that only two lectures more, gratuitous we suppose, together with an operation on the Stock Exchange, in the purchase of 3 per cents. for the edification of Naval and Military Officers, will bring the scientific and other business of the season to a close. After that the management may devote itself to stuffing and repose, unless the snuggery should be disturbed by a complete withdrawal of the subscribers.

Orders have been issued to the Officers at the several Coast Guard Stations, to enter Seamen for the Royal Navy, either for general service or particular ships. Considering the competition of the spring trade, the men have come forward more freely than most persons surmised, which we must attribute to the appreciation of the advantages of the King's service beginning to be generally understood. Several hundreds of men have already volunteered in London and the Outports, and many more might have been procured, were not the Officers ordered not to accept of landsmen, except in the character of boys, between seventeen and twenty years of age.

British Auxiliaries in Spain.—Extracts of a letter from Gen. The Marquis of Londonderry, I observe, stated in the House of Lords that the men were constantly drunk, and that they had put 200 Carlist prisoners to death in cold blood! In reply to the first, I can say that, in a regiment I lately commanded, altogether composed of Irishmen, drunkenness was nearly unknown, while, in the other regiments, not one man was seen drunk for ten that are in that state in an equal number in a British regiment. My Lord Londonderry's second charge, or accusation, is repelled by the fact that not a single prisoner has ever been put to death, or even ill used, by the soldiers of the Legion. Should the Government redeem the pledges they have given to me, I have no fear of our soon having 5,000 really efficient men in the field, who will, I know, be up to any kind of work under General Evans, to whom I am second in command and Quarter-master-General, the duties of the latter of which I have only lately commenced."

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 21st March.—Lord Duncannon presented a petition from the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council of London, praying the abolition of flogging in the army. His Lordship said he could not support the prayer of it. Lord Stanford could not, in the whole course of his experience, recollect a case in which death had been supposed to result from flogging in the army, till the recent event at Woolwich.

Tuesday, 22nd March.—Several petitions were presented.—On the bringing up of the report of the West India Judicature Bill, some amendments were agreed to.—A Bill regulating the East Suffolk County Courts Bill was read a first time.

Thursday, 24th March.—Lord Duncannon moved the first reading of the Irish Constabulary Bill. After a few remark from Lord Ellenborough, Lord Harrowby, the Earl of Winchelsea, and the Marquis of Lansdowne, it was understood to be arranged that the second reading should be taken on Tuesday.—The Administration of Justice in the West Indies Bill was read a third time.

Friday, 25th March.—The Bankruptcy Court (Ireland) Bill was read a second time, and the Report of the Committee on the Ecclesiastical Leases Bill brought up.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 21st March.—A petition from the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council, praying the abolition of flogging was presented. It was earnestly supported by Mr. Alderman Wood.—Several petitions were presented praying the abolition of the tithe of agistment and for the repeal of the stamp duty on newspapers.—In a Committee of Supply a variety of grants for the service of the Navy were moved and agreed to.—Leave was given to bring in a Bill to relieve Dissenters from the necessity of making certain declarations, and for uniting to the Crown the County Palatine of Durham.

Tuesday, 22nd March.—Numerous petitions were presented, including—for and against several railway speculations; praying for a more minute inspection of vessels before proceeding to sea; against tithes; for corporate reform; in favour of removing the disabilities complained of by Dissenters; complaining of agricultural distress; complaining of grievous surcharges for assessed taxes.—Mr. Hume presented a petition from two persons sent here from the Mauritius to complain of a defective administration of justice. The petition was laid on the table, and Mr. Hume gave notice that he would again bring the subject of it under the consideration of the House.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer stated it was not his intention to make any alteration in the duty on marine insurances. Mr. F. Buxton moved for a committee to inquire into the working of the apprenticeship system in the colonies. Agreed to, after some discussion.—Mr. Borthwick moved for a select committee to inquire into the state of the negro population in the Mauritius, as it affects the claims of that colony to compensation. Sir G. Grey moved, as an amendment, for an Address to the Crown for copies or extracts of any dispatch or document respecting the measures adopted by his Majesty's Government since the report of the Commission of Eastern Inquiry in 1828, on the subject of slavery in the Mauritius. Also for copies or extracts of a correspondence between his Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies and the Governors of the Mauritius upon the subject of Slave Registries in that colony. Amendment carried.—The House went into committee on the Irish Municipal Corporations Bill, when clauses from 82 to 140 were agreed to.

Wednesday, 23rd March.—Sir A. L. Hay complained that the Trinity (North Leith) Harbour Committee had postponed their meetings to the 16th May, in order to subject the parties interested to expense, and to defeat the Bill. He moved that the committee should reassemble this day. Agreed to.—Petitions were presented for a revision of the law respecting parents, in favour of introducing Poor Laws into Ireland, and praying inquiry into the working of the apprentice system in the West Indies.—Mr. Wallace presented a petition from 850 tenants of the Member for Carlow, expressing their high approbation of his conduct, both in his public and private capacity, and their non-concurrence with the statement in the petition of Mr. Vigors. This led to a stormy and personal altercation, in which Col. Bruen, Mr. Hardy, and Col. Perceval threw reflections on Mr. O'Connell, which were replied to by that gentleman. Petition ordered to be printed.—Irish Municipal Corporations Bill was again committed, and the report ordered to be brought up on Friday.—Irish County Boards Bill read a second time and referred to a select committee.—Municipal Corporations Amendment Bill read a third time and passed.—On a motion that the Irish Constabulary Force Bill be read a third time, Mr. Jephson moved a clause to enable grand juries more effectually to control constabulary accounts. Motion was carried by a majority of 36.

Thursday, 24th March.—Several petitions were presented on the subject of Railway Bills.—Mr. Robinson moved a series of resolutions calling for a new system of taxation, the present having been adopted in a state of war, as being, in his judgment, ill adapted to a state of peace. Mr. Spring Rice showed that the system was in the course of progressive improvement. Mr. Hume, though friendly to the principle of a property-tax, opposed the resolutions, which were defective, as they did not comprehend the corn-tax. After some discussion the resolutions were severally negatived.

Friday, 25th March.—Various Bills relating to commercial works and local improvements were forwarded a stage.—After a considerable period taken up in the presentation of petitions, the House proceeded with the consideration of the commutation of tithes (England) Bill, and the first twelve clauses were carried.

Waterloo Bridge, which was estimated at 500,000*l.*, cost nearly 1,200,000*l*, and from which the original subscribers can never hope to receive one farthing. Southwark Bridge, estimated at 360,000*l.*, cost upwards of 700,000*l.*, and, as to profits, the original subscribers are in a similar situation with those of Waterloo. Vauxhall Bridge cost about 265,000*l.*, and the whole dividends received upon each original share, from the time of subscribing, amount to 8*s.* 6*d.* per annum. Hetomersmith Bridge; the shares are selling at less than half price, and the dividends have not exceeded 10*s.* per share.

Theatres.

King's Theatre.—Bellini's opera seria of Beatrice di Tenda was performed at this theatre, for the first time, on Tuesday evening, and was well received by a very full and highly fashionable audience. We are not of opinion that this opera will enjoy an extensive popularity; it is throughout extremely heavy, and lacks the great charm—novelty. There is scarcely a melody in the opera which does not reminds us of an old acquaintance, and the choruses and concerted pieces have little or no variety to recommend them. The libretto is written in better Italian than we generally find in operas, and several of the passages in the recitative are powerful and effective, but the music of the opera is far inferior to any of Bellini's works, Lo Straniera excepted. The story of the opera strongly reminds us of Anna Bolena, but it is neither so clearly nor strongly developed as it might have been. There are several excellent opportunities for the introduction of fine and effective musical composition, which the composer appears to have lost sight of. In the first act, those pieces which pleased us most were, the aria, "Oh! mi divina Agnese," accompanied by the chorus, and the quintette at the conclusion of the first act, "Al tuo core." In the second act, the recitative commencing "Rimorso in lei?" the aria, "No; si resista," and the finale. The Beatrice of Madame Colleoni Corti was a very uneven performance; those parts of the music allotted to her, requiring dignity and energy of expression, were not well executed; while some of the tender passages were given with much truth and feeling. It was evident that she was labouring under the effect of indisposition; but even had she been in perfect health, her voice is not of that quality to do ample justice to many portions of the opera. Signor Cartagenova sustained the part of Philip with considerable ability, and has added to his fame by the clever style in which he executed the aria in the last act, "No; si resista," and that part of the recitative commencing, "Rimorso in lei?" was also given with fine dramatic effect, and was warmly applauded. Signor Winter, as Orombello, was certainly not the most happy lover we have witnessed—he appears to want soul. His singing will at all times please, but he never surprises us by anything particularly brilliant or effective. Mrs. Seguin acquitted herself with great credit in the part of Agnese. The opera has, we should think, been produced with far too much haste, for the chorus singers were miserably deficient on more occasions than one. This is an unpardonable fault. The ballet of La Sylphide followed, in which Mdlle. Varin was the lovely representative of the Sylphide. She looked and danced charmingly, and was frequently warmly applauded for her light and elegant movements. We are glad to observe that Grisi, Rubini, and Lablache are announced to appear in Rossini's opera of La Gazza Ladro on the 5th of the ensuing month.

THEATRICAL AND MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

The Olympic, the Adelphi, and St. James's Theatres close for the season this evening. The present season at the Olympic has been the most profitable on record. Madame Vestris, C. Mathews, James Vining, and Frank Mathews go to Liverpool and Manchester for one month. The Lyceum and Astley's Theatre open on Easter Monday, the former with a new melodrama from the pen of Mr. Attorney Oxenford, the latter with a drama founded on the plague and great fire of London. Mr. and Mrs. Keeley return to the Lyceum; Mr. Planché is engaged; Mrs. Nisbett will also appear soon after Easter, and Mr. Wilson the singer returns in June. The new Easter piece at Covent-Garden Theatre is called Zazezizozu; it is an adaptation from a French piece, in which the dramatis personæ represent a pack of cards, dominoes, drafts, and chess-men: we hope it will be made intelligible to the gods. The concert at the Philharmonic on Monday evening was a treat as regards the instrumental portion. Madame Dulcken, pianist to the Duchess of Kent, performed a difficult piece of Von Weber's, to the delight and satisfaction of all [illegible], including the gentlemen of the orchestra, who pronounced her to be the first pianist of the day. The Queen's Theatre closed on Wednesday evening. There will be a grand concert at the Richmond Theatre on Easter Monday evening, under the patronage of several families of distinction. Part of the band of the King's Theatre will attend, and several leading theatrical and concert singers are engaged for the occasion.

The High Mo'am.—The arrival of that splendid present, the Imaum 74, from the reigning Prince of Muscat to the King of England, at Portsmouth, has given rise to a whimsical appellation in the true nautical style. When moored, the shipwrights were of course anxious to see her build, and, amongst other inquiries, asked her name of the seamen who had navigated her here. They replied that she was called the High Mo'am, in honour of the King's daughter; and by that title she is likely to be known by sailors.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The Paris Journals of Thursday have arrived, but are barren of news. On Tuesday evening, the Chamber of Deputies terminated a two days' debate, by adopting the recommendation of the Committee upon the 5 per cents. question, and postponing what is to be done until next year. Several flags, taken from the Arabs in the Mascara expedition have arrived at Paris, and are suspended in the church of the Hotel des Invalides, by the side of other standards of Africa, which go back to the conquest of Algiers. Trophies proceeding from the Tremecen expedition are also expected.

SPAIN.—One of the most important rumours from Madrid is a revival of the story that M. Isturitz had consented to join the Cabinet as Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mendizabel retaining his post as Finance Minister.

Madrid, March 12.—Gen. Macdongal, the Quartermaster-General of the British Legion, leaves this city to-night, having, in company with Col. Wylde, the British agent with the army of the North, come to Madrid for the purpose of making effectual arrangements for the proper supply of money and other articles necessary for the Legion. That object has been arranged, and Gen. Macdougal proceeds to the Legion in order to carry it into effect.

RUSSIA.—The Emperor Nicholas has asked the hand of the Archduchess Theresa, daughter of the Archduke Charles, for his eldest son Alexander, heir-apparent to the Russian throne, but this proposal, which was already mentioned at Toplitz, meets now with still greater difficulties than at that time.—Messager, March 21.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—A public dinner was given in the Commercial Exchange to the Governor, Sir B. D'Urban, upon his return, after the entire pacification of the frontier. Graham's-town has been visited with a disastrous thunder-storm.

ROYAL NAVAL CLUB OF 1765.

THE fifth general meeting of this convivial, patriotic, and charitable association, took place at the Piazza Tavern on Wednesday last, Commodore Sir Arthur Farquhar in the Chair. After the confirmation, or adoption, of some new regulations proposed by the committee, adapted to remove doubts or difficulties, and to guide rather than coerce or restrain, the Commodore, with Gen. Sir Lewis Grant (a guest), Captains Pym, Mansel, Fisher, Lloyd, M. Sykes, T. Dickinson, D. Hald, M. Campbell, M. Montague, W. Kirby, Burnett, Warren, Sheier, G. G. Marshall, R. Meredith, C. Grope, E. Purcell, C. T. Daly, R. Sanmarez, M'Arthur Low, J. Reeve, Carnac, J. Nies, G. Daniell, D. Foggo, Esq., Secretary, and other members, sat down to a sumptuous dinner. When the usual routine of loyal and other toasts had been drunk, Commodore Farquhar, alluding to the restoration of Capt. Napier (the Portuguese Admiral Count Cape St. Vincent), proposed his health. The toast was enthusiastically received, and drunk with all the honours which the new regulations allowed. This, we believe, may be considered a fair indication of the feeling which pervades the naval service, in accordance with that of the nation at large. Will not Admiral Sartorius be also restored to his former rank of Captain in our navy? The next meeting of this Club will be on Saturday, 2nd of April, to celebrate the victory gained at Copenhagen, on which day the applications of widows and orphans for assistance from the surplus funds will be received.

THE LATE LIEUT.-GEN. SIR ROBERT BOLTON, G.C.H.

WE recorded in our last the death of this officer. He entered the service as Ensign 67th reg. by purchase, 3d Aug. 1782, from which he was removed to a Cornetcy in the 8th Dragoons, 13th Dec. 1783, paying the difference from Infantry to Cavalry. On 28th Feb. 1785, he purchased a Lieutenancy in the same reg.; and 31st March, 1793, a troop. In 1795, he embarked for the West Indies as Major to his reg., and was ordered to North America on a particular service, where he continued until the Spring of 1797, when he returned to his reg., and, 7th June following, was appointed, by purchase, to the Lieut.-Colonelcy of it; he took the command of the reg., and on its arrival from the West Indies in 1798 a mere skeleton, it was recruited in both men and horses in a very short time, and for which he repeatedly received the thanks of the Com.-in-Chief. The 1st Jan. 1805, his Majesty appointed him one of his Aides-de-Camp, with the rank of Colonel; the same year he was ordered to superintend the formation of the Cavalry of the German Legion, for the performance of which duty he also received the approbation of the Prince Regent and the Com.-in-Chief. In 1806, he was appointed Inspector of the German Cavalry, in which situation he was obliged to continue until Sept. 1814, although his desire was to be employed in the Peninsula. He was appointed Brig.-Gen. in 1808; 25th July, 1810, Maj.-Gen; 12th Aug. 1819, Lieut.-Gen.; and 24th Dec. 1822, Col. of 7th Drag. Guards. Sir Robert was a Knight Grand Cross of the Guelphic Order.

East India Intelligence.

WE have received advices to 25th Nov., by the Alice, which contain an account of a distressing calamity which has befallen the city of Canton. On the 22d Nov. a very great fire broke out within the city walls at 7 P.M.; it raged until 6 A.M. next day; 1500 houses were burnt, and the loss estimated at 60 lacs of dollars. The buildings connected with the English factory sustained no damage.

An edict has been issued from the Chinese Government, by which the ships of foreign merchants are permitted by the regulations of the celestial dynasty to come to the open market of Canton. This permission flows only from the celestial favour; but foreigners are not allowed to "take their ships to the coasts of other provinces, wandering about disorderly, planning lucky and extraordinary means of gain." The edict likewise restricts all foreign ships from cruising about the provincial Ports of China, on the pain that all ships of the same nation as the offending "eye," or Commander, being expelled from future trading at Canton.

A meeting took place the 29th Nov., between Capt. J. Smith, 2d Lt. Cavalry, and Capt. C. Taylor, Artillery, when, after an exchange of shots (Capt. Taylor's pistol missing fire), the parties shook hands, and the affair terminated. The above misunderstanding arose out of a letter of Capt. Taylor's, addressed to Major Fryer, regarding a letter which appeared in the Standard of the 26th Nov., under the signature of "Manly Safeguard," reflecting upon Maj. Fryer, the authorship of which Capt. Taylor imputed to Capt. Smith. An apology being demanded, without reference to the above letter, which Capt. Taylor having refused, the parties met.

Sir Andrew Sjungstedt, a native of Sweden, died at Macao on 10th Nov., at the age of 81. He was well acquainted with the languages and manners of most of the countries of Europe. He had resided for the last forty years at Macao.

Mr. Ross having succeeded Mr. Blunt in the government of Agra, and thereby created a vacancy in the Council of India, Mr. Robertson was sworn in, and took his seat as an ordinary member.

The Madras Herald, 28th Nov., gives the following account of the proceedings against the Coomsur Rajah—that he has been driven from his strong hold, and his troops discomfited. Eight guns were taken from the enemy, and ten men wounded on our side. The natural strength of the country is very great, and it has been tough work for our men to force their way through the hills. From the 13th to the 17th they had been under a constant desultory fire—the passage of the river was interrupted by a heavy fire from the jungle; but Lieuts. Taynton and M'Cally, creeping in the rear, soon dislodged them, killing three, and, it is supposed, wounding ten or a dozen. During the march, fifteen of our fighting men were wounded, and about as many camp followers. It is reported that 5,000 rupees have been offered for the Rajah's head, which may prove a temptation too potent to find resistance in the loyalty of his faithful followers.

The monsoon continues as favourable as could be wished. There have been some copious showers, and appearances indicate a continuance of the same: altogether the season has been decidedly the best that has been experienced for some years, and accounts from the interior represent the fields as promising a rich harvest.

We understand that Major-General Hawker has been relieved from the command of the Mysore Division of the Army from 1st Jan., 1836, at his own request.

The Bishop of Calcutta arrived at Quilon on the morning of the 15th Nov. The Bishop purposes to disembark at Goa, and proceeding overland to Bombay, via Darwar and Poona.

A Court-Martial was held at Trinchinopoly on Capt. John Byng, 6th Lt. Cavalry, placed in arrest by order of Major Geo. Sandys, commanding the regt., on the complaint of Capt. John Reid Brown, also of that regt., charged with scandalous and infamous behaviour, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, at Trichinopoly, on 1st Sept., 1835, written under an assumed signature, and despatched to the Standard newspaper an obscene and most improper letter, containing a shamefully indecent attack on the family of Capt. Brown. The Court having most maturely weighed the evidence brought forward in support of the prosecution, as well as what the prisoner, Capt. J. Byng, has urged in his defence, are of opinion that the prisoner is not guilty of the charge; he is therefore released from arrest, and will return to his duty.

The Lahore Ukhbar says that Nasnroyden, the Vakeel of the Russians, and Mirza Khyr Khootro, brother of the King of Persia, are marching, with a large force of Russian and Persian troops, upon Caubul.

JEYPORE.—Capt. Conolly has returned from his laborious examination of the papers seized, from which there is sufficient evidence to leave no doubt that the murder of Mr. Blake was effected through the instigation and agency of Jotaram.

NEEMUCH.—Latest accounts represent the sickness at this station as prevalent as unprecedented. Mortality was not confined to sepoys only, but, amongst the casualties previously reported, Lieut. Hulsh, Artill., and Ens. Nation, are lying dangerously ill.

The installation of the Lord Bishop of Madras took place at St. George's Church, with the usual ceremonies, on the 28th Oct. The church has since received the denomination of the Cathedral Church of St. John.

PLAN OF RETIREMENT FOR POST-CAPTAINS R.N.

To the Right Hon. Earl of Minto.

MY LORD,—As your Lordship is very anxious for the good of our Naval service, I shall not apologise for laying before you the following plan of retirement for Post-Captains, by which they and their families may be benefitted without any additional burden to the nation, and a younger and more active set brought forward for service.

A few years ago the officers of two corps, who gained their rank by rotation (viz. the Artillery and Marines), were permitted to sell their commissions. Now, my Lord, if a certain number of Captains were allowed to sell out to the same number of Commanders, the list would be thinned (from the top) of those who, from age, infirmity, or other reasons, the Admiralty might wish not to include in any future promotions of Admirals; or if through delicacy they should be promoted, in the event of war would not be employed, but only stand in the way of the more active below them. There is no doubt but a number of Captains with large families and small incomes would be glad to sell their commissions for four or five thousand pounds, as the sum would enable them to make a better provision for their families than the widow's pension, which of course would be lost by their retirement. The Commanders wishing to purchase would only be permitted to do so by the Admiralty, so that those only deserving would get the rank of Captain, and, as at present, come in at the bottom of the list. The Commanders might sell also their commissions to deserving Lieutenants for two thousand five hundred pounds; and why should not the Mates gain their commissions also for one thousand pounds? The above would not interfere with the present mode of promotion, nor would the lists of officers be increased. There is also another point to be considered, that those who would sell out would be no loss to the service.

I have, &c.

MILITARY PUNISHMENTS.

Evidence taken before the Commissioners, Saturday, February 20, 1836.

FIELD-MARSHAL THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON was examined as follows:—In what year did your Grace enter the army? In 1787.—Did you continue to do regimental duty for several years afterwards? I did; I was abroad at first for some time after I entered the army, and then I joined the 12th Lt. Dragoons, and I was an A. D. C. to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. I was absent occasionally, but I was generally with my regiment the greatest part of every year; then I was a Captain of the 58th Foot, with which I did duty; and then I was a Captain in the 18th Lt. Drags., in which I did duty; I was then Major in the 33d Regt., and I may say that from the time I became Major in the 33d Regt. until I quitted India I commanded the regiment, for I commanded it even when I was otherwise employed, and even on the staff. In short, I believe I have done as much regimental duty, I was as much and as constantly with the regiment, particularly from the time I became Major in the 33d Regt., as any officer that ever was in his Majesty's service.—And in the command of that regiment? Actually in the command of that regt.; I was otherwise employed on general service, but from the time I became Major in the 33d, I never took my hand off that regiment. I commanded them even while I was on the staff and in the field, sometimes near them and sometimes at a greater distance; but I was in the actual command of that regiment up to the moment at which I left India.

At that time were not corporal punishments much more frequent in the army than they are at present? I cannot exactly say how the thing stands at present, for since I resigned the command of the army, in the year 1828, when I was appointed to be First Lord of the Treasury, and by desire of my colleagues resigned the command of the army, I have not interfered in any regimental concern whatever. I was at that time, and am still, Colonel of the Grenadier Guards, but I never interfere in the detail of the Grenadier Guards. I did not interfere in the detail of the Grenadier Guards, particularly in respect of this matter of punishment, because I know that I differ in opinion upon that subject from the commanding officer of that regiment, Col. Woodford, and, therefore, knowing that the opinion of the public is, that these corporal punishments ought to be discontinued, and knowing, besides, that it was the desire of the Government that they should be discontinued as much as possible, I have considered it my duty to refrain from even giving an opinion upon the subject. I have allowed him to do that which he thought proper for the maintaining the discipline of the regiment, and from the year 1828 downwards I cannot say that I have an official knowledge of any thing. I have the knowledge which everybody has who lives in society, but I have no official knowledge upon the subject. I am inclined to believe that there is less corporal punishment, but then, on the other hand, I am inclined to believe that there is a great deal more crime. I have called upon Col. Woodford repeatedly, more in the way of conversation than officially, but I have called upon him repeatedly to give me a statement of the defaulters' list in the three years that the Grenadier Guards were commanded by Col. Townshend, when I was first appointed their Colonel, as compared with the three years during which they were under his command, and I have never been able to procure that return; I conclude that that return would show that he was wrong in his system. Very likely this commission may have got that return, or may have got some information that I have not got upon that subject; but I have no information from 1828 upon any military point of that description. Up to the year 1828, in the last years previous to that year, I should say that corporal punishment in general had been discontinued to a great degree in the army, in comparison with what it was formerly. A great variety of other punishments have been invented, and I certainly thought that that system had not been very successful. I remember in the papers which I have written upon the subject, which I believe have been before the board, a very curious case is mentioned of an officer commanding a battalion, in which he carried into execution those different modes of punishment, and undoubtedly he contrived to excite a mutiny, and I was obliged to treat him a little harshly upon that subject, for he had inflicted all sorts of punishment, and the affair ended by the battalion firing their buttons upon him. This created a degree of alarm at the time at which the affair came before me at the Horse Guards, and I was obliged to check all those new invented modes of punishment, which harassed the soldiers a great deal. There was no diminution of crime. Crime continued just the same as ever, but there was no alteration of punishment, from corporal punishment to those other new invented modes which certainly did not answer the end of preventing crime.

While your Grace commanded the army, was it your wish, and did you endeavour, to diminish the frequency of corporal punishment as much as you could? As much as possible. From the time I entered the army it has been the desire of every commanding officer that ever I have seen, who knew what his duty was, to diminish corporal punishment as much as possible. There is one very remarkable circumstance, which I beg the board will never lose sight of, that is, that this punishment is always inflicted in public; that supposing the commanding officer himself had no feeling in respect to the punishment which is inflicted on the individual, he must know there are many present who do feel it in a very extraordinary degree—officers and soldiers both, who are excessively annoyed at this punishment. But it is inflicted because it is a matter of necessity. It is done in public, and there is a security that it will not go to any excess.

At the time when your Grace commanded the army, had the punishments of solitary confinement and imprisonment with hard labour been adopted? To a certain degree.

What had been the effect of that substitution? I do not think that it produced any effect. I have seen solitary confinement inflicted in the garrison of Fort William in Bengal—solitary confinement, with what they call "congee," that is, the soldier is fed upon congee, congee being the water in which the rice is boiled. I must say that that punishment never had any effect upon the men at large. The punished soldier was reduced a little in his strength by it, and in all probability he was saved from a fever by being upon this regimen, and kept in confinement and out of the sun for a few days after the irregularity which had occasioned the confinement; but I never knew that it produced any effect upon the men at large, or least to make them more sober. They always got drunk whenever they had an opportunity of doing so.

Is drunkenness the great parent of all crime in the British army, in your opinion? Invariably.

If you could by any means check the practice of drunkenness, are you of opinion that the British soldier would be a difficult person to manage? I should say a difficult person to manage always, to a certain degree, because there are a good number of irregularities besides drunkenness. He has a great number of habits that must be broken through; he joins his reg. excessively undisciplined, with habits of different kinds that certainly must be broken through, and he must be brought to a certain degree of training before you can say that he is a person that you can depend upon, so that he will not misbehave.

Do you imagine that the British soldier would be more difficult to bring into a proper state of discipline, provided that habit of drunkenness could be cured, than the persons that compose the other armies in Europe? I should say yes; because, in the first place, the British soldiers are taken entirely from the lowest orders of society. Other armies are composed of men of all classes; they are drawn by conscription, and men of all classes are liable thereto and are serving in the ranks in the French army, the Prussian army, the Austrian army, and the Russian army—in the Russian army rather less than the others.

Has any mode ever suggested itself to you by which a better class of persons might be induced to enter the army under the present mode of voluntary enlistment? I should say not. The objection to entering into the army, in my opinion, is the severity and regularity of the duty, the regularity of the discipline, and the life which the soldier is obliged to lead, and which you must oblige him to lead, the climates to which he is exposed, and the constancy of the service in those climates. I do not think that a better description of persons would be induced to enlist than at present voluntarily, not even for any bounty, because the amount of the bounty is no consideration. The large bounty would be taken, and they would walk off upon the first opportunity. I do not think any bounty would procure the service of a better description of men than is enlisted at present.

Supposing corporal punishment to be entirely abolished, and that certain civil privileges were given to persons who had served in the army, do you think that might have the effect of producing a better class of persons in the army? I do not think it would. I do not see how you can have an army at all unless you preserve it in a state of discipline, nor how you can have a state of discipline unless you have some punishment. I confess that that is the worst of what I see going forward. There is no punishment which makes an impression upon any body except corporal punishment. You send a man into solitary confinement; nobody sees him in solitary confinement, and nobody knows what he is suffering while he is in solitary confinement; and therefore this punishment is no example to the thousand men who are there upon the parade at the same time. The man may suffer so much in solitary confinement as that he will not be guilty of the offence again; but that is not the principle of punishment, that is not the intention of punishment. The real meaning of punishment, if it mean anything, is example; it is to prevent others, by the example of what they see the criminal suffer, from committing the same or a ilar offance. If that is not the intention of punish-nt, if the intention is to punish or even improve the duct of the individual only, you may find other ishments; but you will have hundreds of others lty of the offence, and you will have the whole iment, by degrees, in a state of punishment. There is ther question again, which is, what is to enforce these ishments? For instance, I understand that, in some of se battalions of Guards, they have 80 or 100 men billed As long as the Commanding Officer can punish by ans of corporal punishment, this billing-up can be enced; but if corporal punishment should be discontinued, o is to enforce the billing-up? It is quite out of the stion; and therefore, I say, if it is intended that punish-nt should be an example, you must have something or er that other men will feel that it is better for them that y should not have inflicted upon them; and also, you st have something which shall be an ultimate resource case they should not submit to the minor description of ishment which circumstances might enable the Comnding Officer to inflict upon them. That is my idea of necessity of corporal punishment. Then there is this her observation (which I entreat the Board to bear in nd), that the regularity, and order, and discipline, of the ps, is not merely a public affair; it is not only that the iment may be fit to do its service for the public, but I that it is a positive breach of faith with the good man if cipline should not be enforced. I will suppose that there 100 men in a company, 80 of whom behave exceedingly l, and submit to all your regulations, and I apprehend t will be found to be pretty nearly the usual proportion; re will be 80 of them who never incur a fault of any cription; they lead a quiet life in the barracks, and do ything that you require from them; but there are 20 o will not do so. What happens? These 20 are con-ntly disturbing the peace and the comfort of the 80, and re is perpetual riot and disorder going on in the barracks ides. These men are perpetually in a state of punish-nt; they are either billed-up, or they are in confinement he guard-house, or they are in confinement in gaol, or ome way or other. The consequence is that those 80 obliged to do their duty for them; so that, by not en-ing your discipline, and not enforcing your own orders, not punishing when those orders are not obeyed, you doing the grossest injustice to those who do obey your ers. That is a view of the case which is not generally en; but it is a true view, and ought to be brought before public.

But supposing that the punishment of solitary confine-nt could be made such a one as to be a terror to the sols in general, might not that be resorted to as an ultimate ishment instead of corporal punishment? There is a t deal to be said about solitary confinement. In the place, I do not believe that it could be enforced as a tary punishment; you must have recourse to the civil er to enforce that punishment. Supposing that you e to build, in all the barracks, a certain number of soli-cells, the men must be watched and guarded in those lary cells by their comrades. The consequence is, that get into constant conversation. That was the course Fort William. The sentry does not do his duty: he s into conversation with the man in the cell: the solitary of the confinement is lost. As a military punishment, do not think it could be carried into execution. And, course, you would soon require something to prevent
, I call the knocking-down system—the knocking down sentry or the non-commissioned officer who is taking the to the place of solitary confinement. All this must be vided for, there must still be something behind as a urce. One officer with whom I am acquainted, who is rest advocate for this description of punishment, had a me of this sort; he proposed that there should be a civil blishment formed, which should have the charge of e military gaols, and not the military officers and troops. object was that, as there must be some further punish-nt in order to keep those in order who should be in the ls, this punishment should be inflicted by the civil, and by the military power; that is the meaning of that pro-sion. I confess that I can not see my way through such stem without incurring such an enormous expense that conceived the public would not entertain the proposi-if it were fairly brought forward; and, after all, there t be, as a final resource, some other system of punish-nt. I am aware that lately, in the gaols of this country eneral, a system of solitary confinement has been adopted silence enforced. I do not know how far this has wered, or what is the resource to be adopted if the man s not submit to the regulations of the prison. I underd that they deprive him of his food, and that in some ances that has been found to answer. That may answer, I understand that in America, for instance, at Sing-Sing, at some other places, the resource in corporal punish-
nt. In some instances stopping the food might answer, others it certainly would not. The consequences of ing such a vast body of men in a state of punishment t not be lost sight of. There are at this moment, in one alion of the Coldstream Guards, I am told, not less a 100 men out of 600 under punishment, which number uld be absent.

Of course a small proportion of those 100 men would be liable to solitary confinement, supposing that solitary confinement to be inflicted only by sentence of a Court-Martial? I cannot say the proportion.

Is it your Grace's opinion that it would be impossible, even in barracks, to erect cells that would be effectual for the purpose of solitary confinement? They must always be under a sentry.

Supposing that sentry to be so placed as to be at such a distance from the solitary cells that no communication could take place between him and the prisoners? I do not mean to say that it is impossible; I only state what I have seen at Calcutta, in the Congee-house, and there it could not be prevented.

Supposing that some scheme should be devised, which should make those punishments of solitary confinement or imprisonment with hard labour, effectual and real punishments, is it still your Grace's opinion that it might not be made to supersede corporal punishment by the lash? There would still be the absence of the example; the battalion would not know that this man was suffering for having committed such an offence; they would know that he was in this solitary confinement, but till the man had been in solitary confinement for a week, or ten days, or a fortnight, he would not know the consequences to himself; and how much he suffered in this solitary confinement, of course, the battalion could not be acquainted with.

Supposing a man to be so solitarily confined, is it your opinion that his representation, when he comes out of that confinement, would not answer the purpose of example to the rest of his comrades? I should think not.

Are you of opinion then that the infliction of a certain number of lashes, after the reading of a Court-Martial in the front of the regiment, would have more effect as an example than any representation he might make of his sufferings in prison? I have no doubt of that whatever.

Have you known instances in which the infliction of corporal punishment has had the immediate effect required, namely, the putting a stop to the prevalence of such crimes as the man was punished for? Certainly.

In cases of insubordinate conduct and refusal to march, and so forth, would it be possible to substitute any other punishment which would be so summary and so effectual as that of the lash? I have no idea of any great effect being produced by anything but the fear of immediate corporal punishment. I must say, that in numbers of instances the very threat of the lash has prevented very serious crimes. It is well known that I have hundreds of times prevented the most serious offences by ordering the men to appear with their side arms. When I found any great disorder going on, the first thing I did, was to order that all the men must appear, if they appeared in the street at all, in their side arms—that was the first thing. I then ordered that the rolls be called every hour; and all these restraints were enforced by the fear of the lash. If it were not for fear of the lash, who would appear in his side arms? Then, after that, if this did not do, I ordered them all under arms, and kept them standing near their arms. It is well known that I have done that very thing frequently. All those things were ordered to prevent the mischief in the first place; and, in the next place, I was quite sure that no man would venture to disobey it, because he knew that if he ventured to disobey it he would come to corporal punishment.

Supposing the power of corporal punishment had not been in your hands at that time, could you by any other means have established that discipline in the army? No, it is out of the question.

You are now speaking of circumstances upon actual service? Yes.

Must not a certain time elapse before corporal punishment can be inflicted, on account of the proceedings of the Court-Martial? There was a very summary proceeding, which is now discontinued, which is called a drum-head Court-Martial; but the man is brought to a Court-Martial as soon as possible. A Court-Martial is ordered; the forms take a certain time, but the man is sure of being tried, and, if convicted, of being punished. But, besides this punishment by Court-Martial, there is in all armies the provost. I do not mean to say that the provost could be used for the purpose of enforcing an order of that description, but the provost is always liable to be used to prevent any irregularity; for instance, if there is a system of plunder going on, the provost is ordered to prevent it, and he punishes those taken in the fact upon the spot.

Are drum-head Courts-Martial upon service entirely discontinued? I do not think they were very common. We did not want them.

Supposing the wish to abolish corporal punishment to be as strong and as general as can be conceived, not only among the public, but among the officers, can you point out any possible means of doing without corporal punishment while the army is in the field? I have not an idea of any possible means. Having had this subject in contemplation for six or seven years, I have turned it over in my mind in every possible way; and I declare that I have not an idea what can be substituted for it. You may have no army without discipline, or you may have no army at all; but if you are to have an army in a state of discipline, and in a state of efficiency, and I must say in a state of decent comfort, I have not a notion how you are to go on without having some punishment that shall make an impression upon the minds of those who are serving. I assure the Board that I have turned my mind to the subject in every possible way, with a view of discovering some mode of solving the difficulty.

Supposing it were found that the punishment of solitary confinement, or imprisonment with hard labour, was effectual for the purposes at home; would it be possible to establish a system of that sort when the army was serving in the field? Absolutely impossible.

Your Grace is aware that, by the regulations of the French army, no man is to be corporally punished or struck. How do the French, when they are in the field and upon service, manage to keep up the discipline of their army? The French soldier is quite a different person from the soldier in the British army; he is enlisted by conscription. There are men of all classes in the French army; the good keep the bad to a certain degree in order: besides that, the whole system of the French army is a good deal more loose than ours ever can be. Their numbers are infinitely greater; they can bear a looseness and want of discipline much better than we can on that account; they can subsist much more easily for that reason; and, besides that, I am rather inclined to believe, that notwithstanding that there is no regulated system of corporal punishment, there is a good deal of severe punishment in the French army, and they put people to death to a much greater degree than we do; and I fancy that among the soldiers themselves they strike a great deal.

Had you an opportunity of ascertaining the fact, that the discipline of the French army is by no means so strict as the discipline of the British army? I should say that it is not so strict, certainly. In the first place, they are entirely a different class of people. The officers of the French army live with the men a great deal more than ours do; they are of the same class of persons to a greater degree than ours are. At different times I have had French guards of honour attending me; and I have sometimes found the officer playing at billiards with the men of the guard, and familiarities of that sort going on that we never heard of in the British service, and could not be allowed. Therefore the whole of the system is much more loose than ours is, on account of the description of men we have for soldiers, and the description of gentlemen we have for the officers, and the relative number of which our army is composed, compared with the armies of the continent.

Upon service, do you conceive that the discipline of the army which you had under your command in the Peninsula was superior to the discipline of the French troops opposed to you? I have not the most distant doubt of it, infinitely superior.

The attention of the members of the Naval and Military professions is called to the following copy of a letter, which has been transmitted to Mr. George Franks, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriar's-road, the proprietor of "Franks' Specific Solution of Copaiba," from R. W. Meade, Esq. late Colonel Com. Rifle Brigade Columbian Service, and formerly Captain in H.M.'s 19th Lt. Dragoons:—"Sir, Having retired from active life, I feel a strong repugnance against appearing before the public in any character, but my reluctance has been overcome by a sense of the duty I owe to my fellow-beings, and the gratitude I feel towards you. Having served many years in H. M.'s army in India, and subsequently in the Columbian Forces, under the gallant but ill requited Bolivar, I contracted in those hot climates a disease, which has for years inflicted on me the most poignant sufferings; since, however, I have been fortunate enough to obtain an introduction to you, and having used your 'Solution of Copaiba' a few times, I have been relieved beyond my most sanguine expectations, and am now entirely free from pain, or the obstructions to which I was so many years a victim.

"Waltham Green, 2nd Dec. 1835."

The attention of our readers is directed to the following communication addressed to Messrs. A. Rowland and Son, No. 20, Hatton Garden:—

"Bruton-street, Jan. 24th, 1836.

"Gentlemen,—When an individual receives a signal benefit from any composition advertised to public notice, I conceive it a duty for him thus to volunteer his testimony; it is due to the public and the proprietors. About two months ago I was driving, in an open gig, from Richmond to London; a bitter north-east wind almost scarified my face, the skin of which is naturally extremely tender and susceptible of irritation. By the advice of a friend I purchased a bottle of your Kalydor, and experienced almost immediate relief from the application. Since then I have persevered in its use. I find that now the sharpest wind does not produce those painful effects from which I so frequently suffered before.

"I am, Gentlemen, your obedient servant,

"PAUL JOHNSTONE."

Rowland's Kalydor removes all cutaneous eruptions, heals chapped hands, lips, &c., and renders the skin delicately clear and soft. Price 4*s.* 6*d.* and 8*s.* 6*d.* per bottle, duty included. Ask for "Rowland's Kalydor." Sold by the Proprietors, as above, and by respectable Perfumers.

Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result; the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them. Greig Thomson, 25, New Bond-street, has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

STIRLING REES' ESSENCE.—Its vast and increasing sale, from the recommendation of the highest Medical characters, as well as those who have experienced its salubrious and beneficial effects, proves its great success and superiority over every other preparation, in being the most safe and effectual remedy ever discovered for the Cure of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Seminal Weakness, Strictures, Fluor Albus, or Whites, Pains in the Loins, Kidneys, Lumbago, Gravel, Irritation of the Bladder, Urethra, and every Disease incident to the Sexual and Urinary Organs, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short space of three or four days. It contains, in a concentrated state, all the efficacious parts of the Cubeb, chemically combined with Sarsaparilla and other choice alteratives, which renders it invaluable to those afflicted with secondary Syphilitic Symptoms, Pains of the Bones, Blears, Pimples, Blotches, Scorbutic Eruptions, Glandular Swellings, and all diseases arising from a tainted and impure state of the blood. In cases of Debility, Want of Power, both Local and General, Tabes Dorsalis, Dimness, Wasting Impotence, and Nervous Depression of Spirits it has been taken with the most decided benefit. A regular perseverance in its use has invariably been found to improve the appetite, assist the digestive powers, and give muscular strength, energy, and vigorous health to the whole system. The most delicate female may take it with perfect safety. It is an excellent restorative after the constitution has been weakened or injured by mercurial or from any other cause.

Prepared only by the Proprietor, J. W. STIRLING, 86, High-street, Whitechapel, from whom it can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London (carriage free), in Bottles, at 4*s.* 6*d.*, 10*s.*, and 20*s.* each.

FISTULÆ, PILES, ABSCESSES, TUMOURS, STRICTURES, &c.—Mr. S. J. VAN BUTCHELL, Accoucheur and Surgeon, for the cure of the above complaints, without cutting, caustic, or confinement in the most dangerous cases, exemplified in a long practice, offers his professional aid to those who may be afflicted, with the fullest confidence of speedily restoring them to health, by his peculiarly successful and expeditious method of eradicating these disorders, even where the usual mode of treatment has failed of remedy or alleviation. Consulted till one daily at his residence, No. 16, Percy-street, Bedford-square.—Persons afflicted may obtain a prospectus gratis, containing a few out of the many cures effected by him on applying to Mr. Cradock, Chemist and Druggist, No. 6, Store-street, Bedford-square.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills; they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs, they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler; E. Edwards; F. Newbery and Sons; W. Sutton and Co.; and A. Willoughby and Co. (late B. Godfrey Windus), 61, Bishopsgate-street Without, London; and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

WEAK LEGS, Knees, and Ankles.—SHUDLDREU and RENWICK, of 34, Jermyn-street, St. James's, beg to announce their NEW-INVENTED PATENT ELASTIC STOCKINGS, knee caps, socks, &c. The particular property of the stocking is to give constant support to the leg in varicose or enlarged veins, weak, swollen, and dropsical affections. The knee cap will be of great use when the knee joint requires support from accident to the pan of the knee, after inflammation, rheumatic or gouty affections. The sock is to give support to the ankle joint after fractures and dislocations, or in any case where, from weakness of the part, support may be necessary. Suffice it to say, wherever common bandages are requisite, the above articles will beneficially supersede their application, inasmuch as they yield an equally diffused pressure over the part affected.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 194, Oxford-STREET, near Hollis-street, established in 1830, than through the adoption of any other method whatever; as Domestics, with good characters, are in waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock.

Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for Hiring Servants; but if the Servant possess a good character it certainly is perfect nonsense to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a situation.

N.B. It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express His Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently, St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1825. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Dedimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is peculiarly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 208 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of this Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. Loudon, Hayles, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Aurist to his Majesty, Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London-bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in Bottles 2*s.* 6*d.*, 4*s.* 6*d.*, 10*s.* 6*d.*, and 21*s.* each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1*s.* and 2*s.* each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose;) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use: in Bottles, 2*s.* and 4*s.*, each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 223, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1828, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Broiled, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 79, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Piccadilly; Hornby, Bowls, Morel, Piccadilly; Yalid, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c. is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere. Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO., Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if not from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally.

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,
sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unadulterated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

ORIENTAL Oil DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

SAPONACEOUS AMBROSIAL CREAM,

NISBET, 69, Wigmore-street, has the honour to announce to the Nobility and Gentry, that he has been appointed, by Mons. Guerlain, Rue Rivoli, à Paris, SOLE AGENT, Wholesale and Retail, for the SALE of the above. An article of the highest repute at the Toilet of Gentlemen throughout Europe, especially for Shaving, as from its emollient qualities it is far superior to the purest Naples Soap. It is also prepared in solid squares for the hands. Also Madame Cavallon's Pomade Melainocome, a highly esteemed preparation for dying the hair, &c.

TO the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public.—

Families of distinction and Visitors to the Metropolis at this Season, who frequently experience great difficulty in suiting themselves with FURNISHED or UNFURNISHED HOUSES, owing to the great demand, are respectfully informed every attention will be afforded in the House and Estate Agency Department of HENRY L. COOPER, in obtaining or disposing of the same, or in the Selling, Letting, or Valuing, any description of property in Town or Country.

From the central situations of the Establishments in their respective commanding localities, every facility is rendered to families honouring his house with their instructions, and offering the advantage of a double register usually replete with eligible properties.

The general introduction of PLATE GLASS for Windows, Carriages, Conservatories, Internal Decorations, &c., has induced H. L. C. to annex a Tariff of Sizes, adapted to those uses, with Prices exceedingly moderate, but of a quality not to be excelled; also is added an outline of his general business, comprising the Cabinet, Upholstery, and Decorative Departments, in each of which the most careful attention is paid both to quality and cost.

HENRY L. COOPER, Plate Glass and Furniture Warehouses, No. 93, Bishopsgate-street Within, and Western Branch, 57, Conduit-street, nine doors from Regent-street, left hand side.

Among the variety of Articles above referred to, will be found LOOKING GLASSES of every denomination and size, varying from one foot to eighty feet and upwards; plate glass for windows, carriages, &c., which possess great advantages over crown, and when required for exportation, a considerable drawback obtained. Annexed are the Prices of Current Sizes of Plate Glass for Sashes, &c.

CARVING AND GILDING IN ALL ITS BRANCHES.

In this department will be found a very elegant and extensive variety of Chimney and Pier Glass Frames, Cornices for Windows, Ornamental Tables and Furniture, and richly mounted Frames in various sizes for Portraits, Paintings, &c. Paintings and Prints mounted, framed, and re-gilt.

PAPER HANGING, AND INTERIOR DECORATIONS

in all its branches, from the most simple to the first style of elegance. A rich variety of new patterns on show.

IN THE UPHOLSTERY ARRANGEMENT,

the greatest attention is paid to unite elegance with economy in character for the drawing-room, boudoir, dining-room, library, and bed-chambers, from the most quiet to the most costly styles. In the various articles of chintzes, moreens, damasks, silks, &c. A great variety of the most splendid and novel styles are constantly on view of those qualities which can alone insure permanent satisfaction; the extreme disparity in prices in these articles mainly arises from the inferiority of the fabric.

CABINET, CHAIR, AND SOFA WORK

manufactured of the most seasoned materials. In the finish of Chairs, Sofas, &c., much depends on the quality of the materials used, and the workmanship. It may not be unworthy of remark that a similar effect may be produced at a saving of nearly one half, but which in the wear must eventually prove a serious disappointment to the purchaser. This applies also to the manufacture of Cabinet Goods, which, from being made of unseasoned materials and unsound work (that cannot be detected by the casual observer), can never bear that service and durability so essential. H. L. C. begs to add that he manufactures them on his own premises, and has always on hand a large stock of well-seasoned materials, which enables him to produce work at the lowest possible rate and of a superior quality.

STEAM and SAILING VESSELS promptly fitted up with CABIN FURNITURE and PASSENGERS' REQUISITES.

SOLID and PORTABLE Furniture, Bedding, Musquito Hangers, &c., for Foreign Climates. Families going abroad will receive every information respecting the articles best adapted for their particular destinations.

Merchants, Captains, and Dealers, supplied with the utmost despatch, on the most liberal terms.

CARPETING

of the fabric especially made for the first Upholstery Houses, viz. Brussels, Kidderminster, and Venetian; also a few of the much-admired velvet pile carpets, hearth rugs, druggets, baize, floorcloth, &c.

BEDDING, BLANKETS, &c.

Well-seasoned, real Dantzic feathers, also equally prepared light down feathers for second and third rate beds, elastic spring, hair, and wool mattresses; real Witney, fine Bath and York blankets; Marseilles quilts and counterpanes. In the article of bedding, blankets, &c., so essentially important to all, H. L. C. is determined that no trader shall supply them on better terms.

FUNERALS FURNISHED,

and conducted with the greatest propriety, and with every consistent regard to economy.

Families in the country may command the most approved taste by being waited on at home with patterns; and designs made on the spot, calculated to harmonise with the plans, proportions, and decorations of the rooms, and their orders delivered and fixed on terms forming a very small addition to the first cost, by the system adopted by this concern.

With this short enumeration of the leading articles of his trade, and the very favourable terms on which he undertakes to supply them, HENRY L. COOPER appeals to all classes for a continuation of that flattering preference hitherto afforded his house, 93, Bishopsgate Street Within; Western Branch, 57, Conduit-street, nine doors from Regent-street.

H. L. C. begs respectfully to solicit particular attention to the Address. Also, that any article will be exchanged should a fair objection arise, thus securing the Public from imposition.

Tackle Maker, No. 88, Strand, begs leave most respectfully to acquaint the Nobility, Gentry, and Anglers generally, that he has the largest assortment in London of the very best articles in trout, salmon, and other rods; patent fly and trolling-lines, winches, tackle-cases, &c.; 200 gross of superior trout and salmon flies, from 2s. 4d. per dozen. ## YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION is the most wonderful Medicine ever discovered by man, for the cure of GONORRHŒA, GLEETS, STRICTURES, WHITES, Pains in the Loins, Affections of the Kidneys, Gravel, Irritation of the Urethre or Bladder, and for all Urinary Diseases in both sexes.—This Medicine is patronised, prescribed, recommended, and sanctioned by the Most Eminent of the Faculty, not only in England but on the Continent: and stated by them, from experience, to be the only Medicine that can be relied on for the cure of these complaints, and they invariably resort to it when their own remedies fail.

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION cures both sexes at all times sooner than any other known remedy, with the most triumphant success, after every Medicine of the present day has proved ineffectual, so that this justly celebrated specific has arrived at the acme of perfection, surpassing every thing of the kind that ever bore the name of medicine, frequently curing some of these serious diseases in a few hours. Those who have suffered from any of the above diseases for many years (such as strictures, &c.) will find upon taking this medicine for a short time, that, if not entirely cured, they will no longer feel inconvenience from the trifling complaint that remains.

References to respectable Surgeons, who are in the habit of prescribing this medicine extensively, will be given on application to the Proprietor's Agents.

Sold in Sealed Packets, with full directions, so that any one may cure themselves with perfect safety and secrecy, sent to any part of the world by HANNAY and Co., 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells-street, London, to whom dealers in the country are requested to forward their orders direct; and Retail by all respectable Medicine Venders. Price 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. Country Order, Orders for the Continent, and shipping Orders to any extent, executed as usual on the day of arrival.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

(Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN."

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 25, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success.

"New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From WILLIAM HANTEN, Esq., House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, (Signed) "WILLIAM HANTEN.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—INJUNCTIONS.

CAUTION.—It having been represented to Messrs. DELCROIX and Co. Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, that frequent disappointments were occurring to the Nobility and Gentry, in purchasing from shops having the appearance of respectability, counterfeit articles bearing not only similar labels to their own, but even their name and address, Messrs. Delcroix and Co. have taken necessary steps to enable them to expose the parties so acting, and they have the pleasure of informing their patrons and friends that injunctions have been granted by the above Court, against Messrs. JOHN GOSNELL & Co. (late Price and Gosnell), of Regent-street, and 3 Kings' Court, Lombard-street,

Mr. JOHN COLLAY, Perfumer, Bishopsgate-street Within, and Mr. ROBERT HEVARDEN, Wholesale Perfumer, Crown-street, Finsbury-square; restraining them from vending imitations of Messrs. Delcroix and Co. are determined to proceed against all parties resorting to any means of injuring the great reputation their perfumes have acquired, not only in this country, but in every part of Europe, India, and all parts of the Continent.

Purchasers are requested to be careful to notice that their Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs and Vegetable Extract, will in future bear the signature of J. Delcroix on the labels, and the name and address "Delcroix, 188, New Bond-street," on the back of the Bottles.

HALF-PAY and RETIRED-PAY to NAVAL OFFICERS and OFFICERS of the ROYAL MARINES.—Notice is hereby given, That on the receipt in the Wages Department, at the Admiralty Office, Somerset-Place, of the Declaration or Certificate of identity required from each officer by his Majesty's Orders in Council, a Bill for the amount of the half-pay or retired pay due will be made out in this Department, which will be payable by the Treasurer of his Majesty's Navy, on the following days, viz.—

On the 11th and 12th April, to Masters, Surgeons, and Pursers, and their Attorneys.

On the 13th, 14th, and 15th April, to Lieutenants at 8s. and under, and their Attorneys.

On the 17th and 18th of April, to Lieutenants at 7s. and 6s. a day, and Captains, and their Attorneys.

On the 20th, 21st, and 22nd of April, to Admirals, Lieutenant-Generals, Major-Generals, Colonels, Lieutenant-Colonels, Majors, Captains, Commanders, and Retired Commanders, and their Attorneys.

Great inconvenience having been experienced by the claims of officers, who have not chosen to receive their half-pay or retired-pay on the days fixed for their rank, being brought forward on the days appointed for the payment of half-pay and retired-pay to officers of different ranks, notice is hereby given that no such claims can in future be attended to on the days not appointed for officers of those ranks; but for the accommodation of such officers, and also for the convenience of those who may not have transmitted their Declarations or Certificates sufficiently early to admit of payment on the above-mentioned days, a recal will take place on the 25th and 26th of April; after which the half-pay and retired-pay will be payable on the first and third Wednesdays in every Month, excepting during the general payment.

Officers residing in or near London, and wishing to receive their half-pay or retired-pay in person, are requested to deliver their Declarations or Certificates into the Wages Office, at the Admiralty, Somerset Place, or transmit them to the Secretary of the Admiralty, immediately on the expiration of each quarter; and those employing agents, are also requested to furnish their agents with their Declarations or Certificates, with the same dispatch, or unless such documents are delivered into this Office early, delay in the payment must unavoidably ensue.

As it sometimes happens that officers apply, personally, for their half-pay or retired-pay, without having previously sent in their Declarations or Certificates as required by the usual advertisement, any delay or inconvenience to which they might be subject by this oversight it is in the power of the officers themselves to prevent, by an adherence to the existing regulations.

Under the authority of the statutes relating to the pay of the Navy (besides the above-mentioned modes), officers may receive their half-pay or retired-pay in any of the following ways, viz.—

1st. By drawing a bill for the amount, in which case they are to give notice thereof by letter to the Secretary of the Admiralty, marked in the corner "Half-Pay or Retired-Pay Accountant-General," and thereupon a proper form of a Bill of Exchange will be sent to them. 2d. By a Remittance Bill or permanent Remittance Bill, payable to them at or in the neighbourhood of their residence by the Collector of Customs or Excise. 3d. By extract, at a Dock-Yard, where there is an establishment of Pay Clerks.

In either of which two latter cases they must give alike notice to the Secretary of the Admiralty marked in the same manner, and a Remittance Bill or Extract will thereupon be made out and transmitted to them. In all cases, the officer signifying his desire of payment is to state at the foot of his letter his Christian and Surnames, his rank, and a full description of his residence.

N.B.—Bills of Exchange drawn under or by virtue of the Act 9 Geo. 4, cap. 20, are not liable to the Stamp Duty.

Portsmouth, April 1.—(From our own Correspondent.) —The vessel which arrived last Friday evening, supposed to be the Lorne, proved to be the Scylla, Com. Carpenter, from Bermuda. Orders arrived on Sunday for her to proceed to Sheerness. The President was the only ship at Bermuda on the 6th March. Genoat had returned to Jamaica. Belvidera, with three other men-of-war, had been dispatched to Para. Prince Ferdinand of Portugal, and the other foreign princes, arrived on Sunday afternoon, and on Tuesday morning embarked on board the Manchester, and proceeded on his way to Lisbon. The Pembroke was commissioned on Monday by Com. Aldridge. Capt. Ashmore, and Lieuts. Searle and Cullen, R.M., are to embark in her. Bellerophon was taken into dock on Wednesday to have her copper cleaned. It is reported that she has the dry rot, and that another ship will be selected for Capt. Jackson. Her detachment of Marines are to be officered by Capt. Devon and Lieuts. Appleton, Lawin, and Spalding. Britannia will be paid off on Monday by Capt. Williams, and recommissioned the following day by Capt. Dundas. Adm. Sir T. Williams will quit Portsmouth on Tuesday. Pantaloon has been ordered to Cork, and sailed this afternoon. The weather for the last five or six days has been so tempestuous, that very little progress has been made in fitting the Vanguard, and, with the exception of masting her, none in the Pembroke. The former has entered nearly 200 blue jackets. Mr. Howard Vyse, Mate, has been dispatched to Bristol to open a rendezvous. The Beacon, sailed from Malta on the 19th Feb., and it is surprising she has not arrived. Com. Copeland has been compelled from ill health to remain behind. Meira transport, with the remainder of the 7th Fusiliers, was to leave Malta on 9th March. Ships in port—Britannia, Vanguard, Excellent, Pembroke, Royal George yacht, Messenger.

Sheerness, April 1.—(From our own Correspondent.) March 27th—Hercules, commissioned by the Hon. Capt. Berkeley. 30th—Scylla arrived at the Nore, and Speedy, cutter, anchored at Sheerness. Hercules went out of the Basin. 31st—Scylla, in working up to Sheerness, carried away her fore topsail yard, and anchored at the Little Nore. April 1st—Scylla came up and anchored off the Dock-Yard. Terror, under the command of Lieut. Pearson, of the Hecate, is fitting at Chatham, and will proceed in a few days to Hull for men. It is expected the Ordinary will be put in commission next week.

Plymouth, March 31.—The Melville, 74, was seen on Thursday, off the Lizard. Speedy cutter is gone to Sheerness, to be under Adm. Fleming's orders. Spitfire st. v. arrived here, and shipped fuel, and started on Thursday for Falmouth, to take out the next Malta mail. Messenger steamer, Mr. King, Master, arrived on Friday with Marines for the Cornwallis, and started the following day for Portsmouth, to bring down Marines for the Minden, which was commissioned on Friday. Talavera took on board her complement of Marines on Tuesday. Orestes, Capt. Codrington, was at Gibraltar, on 17th March, all well. She was to sail for Barcelona the first fair wind, to join the squadron there, where it was expected that Capt. Newell would take the command, vice Codrington, promoted to post. Comus was the senior officer's ship at Port Royal, Jamaica, on 27th Feb. Letters received bearing that date, state that the Captain had orders to remain there until relieved by a Post-Captain. Arethusa and Lavinia frigates are to proceed to Liverpool when prepared, to act as depots for seamen. Ships in Harbour—In commission: Royal Adelaide, 110; Talavera, 74; Cornwallis, 74; Minden, 74. Demonstration—Impregnable, 104; Belleisle, 74. Fitting—Donegal, 78; Implacable, 74; Partridge, brig; Hope, brig; and Magnet brig. Fitted and ready for service—Sting, 16; Imogene, 16; Fly, sloop: several others are ordered to be brought forward, Satellite, &c.

Pluto, st. v., Lieut. Duffill, has been hauled into dry dock for repairs to her bottom.

Vessels in commission in the port:—William and Mary yt., Pluto, Fairy, Firebrand and Sovereign transport. In the basin—Hermes, Cairon, and Swift. Not in commission—Firefly, Blazer, Rhadamanthus, and Salamander. Lieut. Greene of the Danish navy has received permission by an Admiralty order, to have free admission into, and inspect, Woolwich yard.

Duncrellan Castle, with arms and ammunition for the Spanish service, with 100 recruits from the Dasher depot ship off the arsenal, sailed on Tuesday last for Santander.

Fairy, surveying sloop, Com. W. Hewett (1), has been "brushed up with white paint," and her trucks rigged and fitted.

Sovereign, tr. A is discharging ordnance stores off the dockyard for the Royal Arsenal.

The Star Packet.—The Master of the Star, immediately after the gale last started in which Lieut. Birney, her commander, and 14 others, were drowned, gave himself an Act. Lieut.'s commission, which, from the peculiarity of the crew, he being the senior officer on board, he was empowered to do. Since the Star's return to England, the Master has applied to be confirmed in his new rank; but the Admiralty, acknowledging the intrepidity and gallant conduct of the gentleman in question, decline confirming him, but have offered him a larger ship as Master.—Plymouth Journal.

The gale on Thursday was so severe that it blew away the pendant and bunting of the William and Mary yacht, Capt. Sir S. Warren.

Cairon, st. v., Lieut. Dow, got her steam up in the basin (being well secured) to try the working of her engines. Lieut. Dow received orders on Wednesday last to proceed on the W. India station.

Hermes, st. v., Lieut. Blount, has not yet shipped her wheels. The bulk-heads of the engineer's store-room have been removed, it having been hitherto used for passengers' luggage. She will shortly go into dry dock.

Swift, brig, Lieut. Welch, has struck her maintop gallant mast, and dismantled her foremast, which will be taken out and the heel shortened.

Echo, st. v., has gone up the river to the Surrey Canal to get in her engines and boilers from the manufacturers.

Firebrand, st. v., Master John Allen, sailed on Wednesday last, with Marines for the Asia, 84, Capt. W. Fisher, at Sheerness, and returned to Woolwich on Thursday morning.

A vessel is ordered to take in naval stores at Woolwich for Bermuda.

The Prince Regent yt., at Deptford, will be sent as a present to the Imaum of Muscat, in August next, such being decided on by his Majesty and government.

By accounts from South America we find that the Rover, whose graceful evolutions procured her the nic-name of Taglioni, is a great favourite on that station. She lately beat round the Horn in very bad weather, under close reefed main-topsail, tryasil, and staysails, without shipping a drop of water, and has beat every thing she has contended against in point of sailing, and carrying her canvas in bad weather. This is one of the vessels against which the school have displayed their greatest malignity, and respecting her dipping, &c. all sorts of falsehoods have been circulated; and notwithstanding the favourable report of her behaviour in the North Sea, by Sir P. Malcolm, and her graceful evolutions procuring her the cognomen of the inimitable artiste, even such was made a point of detraction, as if anything but grace and elegance could be associated with the name of Taglioni.

Two transports are fitting at Deptford to convey troops to the Mediterranean.

Earl Minto has been pleased to bestow the vacant commission in the Royal Marine corps upon Mr. W. B. T. Rider, the son of an old Naval Officer, more than thirty years a Commander. This selection out of many scores of applications, is highly creditable to his Lordship; and it must be gratifying to every friend to merit to observe the manner in which the commissions have been lately bestowed.

Mr. Kellock, late Superintendent of the Lion sheer hulk, is to be the same in charge of the new sheers in Sheerness dock-yard, with two shillings a day for lodging and provisions; the Lion to be sent from Chatham to Deptford to be broken up.

The passengers in the Arab transport (whose arrival we reported last week) are Lieut.-Col. Lacy, Royal Artillery, Maj. Campbell, 19th Regt., Capt. Crawley, 74th, Lieut. Blythe, 1st W. I. Regt., Mr. Thurburo, Midshipman, Mr. Reoand, Sec. Master, some invalid seamen and widows. The Arab experienced very favourable weather since leaving Antigua, at the end of January. Flomer st. v. was left at Antigua, Columbia had gone to Barbadoes, and Meteor st. v. to Jamaica, both with mails. Wanderer, 16, Com. Dilke, had proceeded to New York, with Mr. Fox, the British Minister to the United States. Belvidera, 42, Capt. Stroog, with Rainbow, 28, Capt. Bennett, Racehorse, 18, Com. Sir E. Home, and Snake, 16, Com. Warren, were despatched about the middle of Feb. from the Leeward Islands to Para, to act in conjunction with a Brazilian squadron, and a strong force of about 4000 Brazilian troops, for the purpose of subduing the Indians (who had got possession of the town and country), re-establishing the inhabitants, who had been driven out from their homes, protecting British trade and property, and, if possible, of making arrangements that should prevent the probability or possibility of a recurrence of the late scenes of plunder, rapine, and murder.

The cutter Emerald, tender to Royal George yt., commanded by Mr. Saunders, has proceeded to the westward, as far as Dartmouth, for the purpose of procuring volunteer seamen for the line-of-battle ships ordered to be got ready with all dispatch. She is to be under the orders of V.-Adm. Fleming.

The Lords of Admiralty, Sir C. Adam, Sir W. Parker, and the Hon. Capt. Elliot, accompanied by Mr. Secretary Wood, visited Woolwich dockyard on Saturday last, and inspected the Cairon, Hermes, &c., Capt. Symonds, the Surveyor of the Navy, and Capt. Sir S. Warren being in attendance on their Lordships.

Scylla, Com. E. L. Carpenter, arrived at Portsmouth on the 25th ult. at night, in 20 days from Bermuda, bringing despatches from V.-Adm. Sir G. Cockburn. The Scylla was compelled to come to England, in consequence of a leak, which has gradually increased from the hour she left Spithead, a year since, to the extent that when she is now on the starboard tack, in a fresh breeze she makes 15 inches of water in twenty-four hours. Including her passage across the Atlantic and home again, Scylla has gone within the last twelvemonths nearly 30,000 miles by the log. President frigate, was at Bermuda when the Scylla left; Forte frigate was at Jamaica, with the Wasp, which latter vessel had gone to Vera Cruz to purchase dollars for the use of government, and had bought up 437,000 of them, which were paid for by treasury bill instead of buying them in Jamaica as heretofore.

When Tartarus st., left Malta on the 7th ult., Caledonia 120, Canopus 84, Thunderer 84, Revenge 78, Edinburgh 74, Barham 52, Vernon 50, as well also as the Sardinian squadron of three frigates and a corvette were in that harbour. Beacon serv. vessel, Capt. Copeland, left Malta for England on 17th Feb., and Flower of Yarrow yt., for Sicily and Naples. Pit cutter yt. had arrived from Syracuse. Our squadron it is expected will put to sea for summer cruising early in April. Rodney was off Barcelona, but was expected at Malta.

By way of Smyrna accounts of the Euphrates expedition to 2d Feb. have been received. The Egyptian authorities had thrown impediments in its way again, in fact, had ordered that no provisions should be supplied. Lieut. Lynch had been on a mission to the Arab tribes; but in consequence of the influence of Mehemet Ali, had been unsuccessful in his applications. The party had been seriously attacked with disease, and 17 of its members, among whom was Colonel Chesney himself, were suffering from sickness at the above date.—Hampshire Telegraph. [The above paragraph (copied from the Malta Gazette) is contradicted by the Standard, which asserts that letters have been received of so late a date as the 14th of Feb., giving a satisfactory account of the health of the whole party, who indulged the most sanguine hope of success. The large steam-boat (Euphrates) was quite prepared for proceeding down the River, and the smaller one would be ready in about ten days.—Ed.]

A letter from Toulon of the 16th ult., states the arrival of the Caster steamer from Algiers, which place she left on the 12th. At that date the alarm caused by the order received to send home a large portion of the military force of the colony (6,500 men) had increased. Marshal Clausel was said to be on the point of returning to France in disgust. The same letter states that the Trocadero (three-decker) had entered the basin to be fitted out for service. The preparations to send to sea, in the course of the spring, a large squadron, were not pushed with activity; nevertheless, France would have in the Mediterranean two three-deckers (the Montebello and Trocadero), seven two-decked (the Scipion, Ville de Marseille, Nestor, Triton, Suffren, Trident, and the Algiers), three frigates (the Iphegenie, Galathee, and La Bellone), and sixteen brigs or corvettes. The Trocadero, of 120 guns, has since been burnt by accident.

H.M.S. Linnet, Lieut. Dunny, which arrived at Portsmouth on the 16th ult. from the Leeward Islands, brought on freight, 12,000*l*. Passengers, Mr. Strachan, Lieut. Edwards, Reeves, and Devayoes, Messrs. Butler, Berkeley, Arquimbeau, and Agostini. The Jamaica mail was brought to St. Thomas by the Meteor steamer, which brought the first intelligence of the wreck of the Pike, Lieut. Brooking, on Pelican Reef, on her voyage from Port Royal to Montego Bay. Lieut. Brooking, and the crew, had been saved, and taken to Port Royal, but the vessel was a total wreck. The Linnet sailed from Barbadoes, the 13th Feb. on which day the Belvidera, Snake, and Savage sailed for Para, and left the Rainbow there. The Linnet brings Sierra Leone mail of the 8th of Jan., and on the 7th of the same month, Adm. Campbell, in the Thalia frigate, arrived there, from the Cape of Good Hope and St. Mary's; All on board well.—Also, on the same day, the Hon. Capt. Denman sailed for England, via the Gambia, Senegal, and Goree. Within the last week of the Linnet's arrival, she went 240 miles odd in 24 hours; and on another occasion 260 miles odd, in the same space of time.

The Lady Jane Wheler Emigrant.—Upon the arrival of this vessel from Strahanen (on 12th ult.) the only person on board in the least fit for work was the Captain, a stout man belonging to Stromness, who labored to the crew in their deplorable state, with the utmost kindness, sharing everything with them that he took himself. On their arrival, the men were so far gone, that three died in bed, carried in blankets from the ship to the shore—they were obliged to come home under reefed topsails, not being able to set more, and the Captain had to stand at the wheel the last five days, being occasionally relieved by the able seamen, who were obliged to sit in chairs while steering.

He sustained through life the character of an upright, brave, and honourable man, and distinguished himself by his zeal and courage under the command of Sir R. Gillespie at the taking of Palambang and the fortress of Dijocatera in 1812, and particularly at the taking of Macassar, under Sir M. Nightingale, in 1814, and in quelling the disturbances at Ceylon, in 1818. In 1823 he was promoted to Captain, and received the highest compliment from his superior officer for his brave conduct at the taking of Bhurtpore, on 18th Jan., 1826, where he commanded the light company of the 59th regt., which, with the grenadiers of the same corps, led the attack through the breach, and bore the brunt of the storm. For his distinguished service upon this occasion, he was selected by Lord Combermere to be the bearer of a splendid oriental sword and letter to the Duke of Wellington, then Com.-in-Chief of his Majesty's forces. In 1831 he exchanged into the 40th reg., and proceeded to Bombay to join his corps at Poonah. His health being much impaired, after an arduous service of 28 years, 24 of which he passed in India, he memorialised Lord Hill in April 1835 to be allowed to retire on the half-pay of Major, which request could not be complied with, but he did not live to feel the disappointment, as he died in July following, leaving a widow and 5 children in the deepest affliction at his sudden demise.

Militia.—The Marquis of Granby, for whom splendid festivities are preparing at Belvoir Castle, is a Captain in the Leicestershire. His father is one of the oldest Militia Cols., and served with the reg. in Ireland, during the rebellion of 1798, and again in 1812. Since the close of the war, the fine band has been kept on full pay by the Duke, and at the training in 1831, for expected service in Ireland, this corps was considered as highly effective, having nearly its full complement of officers and men. The mess-plate is superb. During the late war, the Leicestershire, after supplying the regular army with about 2,000 volunteers, joined the 2d Prov. Batt. in 1814, with 12 officers and 300 men, and landed in France with the other two battalions under the command of General Bayly.

GENERAL ORDER.—HOME STATIONS.

Office of Ordnance, 11th Jan., 1836.

The Master-General and Board of Ordnance are pleased to direct, that the several Barrack Masters and others in charge of barracks in Great Britain and Ireland, do prepare and transmit without delay, a report of any alterations therein, rendered expedient and necessary for the comfort of the troops; and, in drawing up this report, it is their desire that the Commanding Officers of regiments and detachments quartered in barracks, and the General Officers commanding stations or districts, may be consulted.

It is not intended that this order shall apply to any increase in extent of accommodation, or any alteration of a costly description, but anxious for the convenience and comfort of both officers and man, and being aware that in the numerous and extensive buildings in question (differing in construction and arrangement), many minor inconveniances do exist, the Master General and Board desire to have these clearly specified, and so described in detail as may enable them to decide what can with propriety be immediately remedied.

By order of the Master General and Board,

The Barrack Master at R. Bynam, Secretary.

Lieut.-Col. Thompson, [illegible] for Holl, served for seven years as a Captain in the [illegible] Lancers (then the 17th Light Dragoons) in India, during which he was employed by the Bombay government as Resident at Muscat. He subsequently joined a large force of 5,000 men under Sir Kelr Grant sent by the Bombay government for the purpose of suppressing piracy in the Persian Gulf. This object having been effected by the capture of [illegible] Khyrah, and several other of the strong-holds of the Joasmee pirates, Col. (then Capt.) Thompson, was [illegible] on account of his proficiency in the Persian and Arabic languages, to command the detachment which [illegible] to garrison the island of Kishm; but injudiciously making a movement with his detachment without sufficiently [illegible]

f the dispositions of the enemy, the whole detachment was urprised by a body of Wahabees, and after a gallant resist- nce every man was cut to pieces with the exception of apt. Thompson, a Lieut. Morley of the artillery, and Lieut. ildley of the Infantry, who effected their escape to Bombay, here they were tried by Court-Martial. A Mr. Fallon, a ub-Assistant-Surgeon who had charge of the sick and con- alescents, learning the disaster, effected a masterly retreat, or which he was honoured by admission to the regular me- ical service. The destruction of the detachment was the ause of the expedition under the late Sir Lionel Smith, onsisting of upwards of 3,000 men, and such had been the onfidence of the pirates from their success, that they ushed on the bayonets of our men when charging, and cut ir legs from under several of them with their immense long words. Col. Thompson returned from India in 1822, by e Red Sea route. He purchased a Majority in an Infantry giment in 1826, and an unattached Lieut.-Colonelcy in 829. The hon. Member was born in 1783, and married 1811 to a daughter of the Rev. T. Barker. He was the rst official Governor sent to Sierra Leone in 1808, and is e Editor of the Westminster Review.

Major-Gen. Ramsay met with an accident from the ick of his horse, whilst about to mount, but has reco- ered from the effects.

NEPAUL.—The Prince of Napaul understanding that any of the Chiefs of the plains have effected a lasting endship with the King of England, by sending pre- nts of the produce and rarities of their country, observed his durbar that it was expedient that he should do the ame, and bestowed great praise and the khilut of dis- nction on a hero who volunteered to undertake the ity. Orders were issued to make every preparation.—Bengal Observer, Oct. 22.

Lieuts. Joy and Powys left Bangalore on 17th Oct., nder charge of Brev. Capt. Viney of H. M. 39th, for adras, to undergo the punishment awarded them by ourt-Martial.

An attempt at a suttee took place outside the walls of eypoor, in the middle of October. A great concourse f people assembled at the Murda Ratha. The woman ecked herself on the pyre; soon after the flames reached er, she jumped off, but was thrown back; she, however, caped a second time; they again flung her into the re; she got out a third time. The Jeypoor police then terposing referred the matter to the Rawul, who ordered er not to use more force. The widow was accord- gly released, and afterwards took refuge in one of our ntonments, observing she would have been turned out of e border.

The [illegible] prize money is ordered to be paid to the oops (including [illegible] ces). Col. Lindsay gets 1-16th f the whole, and the other Brigadiers share according their army rank, Majors 12,000, Captains 6,000, and ubalterns 2,500.

MOOLTAN.—If the news from this province can be lied on, Now Nihal Singh is endeavouring to extend e Sikh conquest beyond the Indus, and has already ast upon the Shikarpoor as his first conquest. The Seindians are, however, active in opposing him, and have seized all the craft of the river within their neighbourhood, to prevent their occupation as passage boats by the Sikhs. 15,000 horsemen have also been posted on the right bank to watch and oppose their passage.

JANSI.—A disturbance of a serious appearance has broken out at this place. The rioters are 2,000 Boondelas, and the watchword the death of the Raja. This is, however, but the ostensible cause; the real one is more closely connected with personal injustice and injury.

Extract of a letter at Lloyd's, from the Captain of the CASTALIA HUNTLY, March 28th:—"I never spent a more anxious time in my life. In the midst of its blowing a hurricane, the sea flew over our bows; and, shutting up our cuddy doors, we tried to make the ship as snug as possible. A French brig drove into our hawse, and we were clear of her, when the CHARLES GRANT was on our starboard bows; she flew past us, swamping a French bark, carried away the yard of another, and I thought she was as surely lost as ever ship was, and that my turn was coming next. She let go her second anchor abreast of us, parted again, and finally, with two anchors, secured a good berth. We are all right now.

CAPT. SAMUEL JACKSON, R.N.

SIR,—I beg leave to request that you will be pleased to insert this correction of an error, which appeared in the last number of your interesting Gazette. I assure you that my brave and distinguished friend Capt. Samuel Jackson was never Coxswain to the late Sir Richard Keats (no disparagement if he had been so), but was actually First Lieutenant of H.M.S. Superb in 1801, when that gallant officer, who saw him then for the first time in his life, joined her as Captain. Gloriously for their country did both acquit themselves at the destruction and capture of part of a very superior French and Spanish squadron in the straits of Gibraltar, as well as upon other occasions; and it happened that they served together as Admiral and Captain subsequently in the same old Superb, then performing also great and brilliant service. Upon the truth of this statement I pledge myself; for at that eventful period I was the principal medical officer of the Superb, having gone over to that ship from the Minotaur frigate, with my ever dear and lamented old commander Sir Richard, to whose memory our gracious sovereign has lately erected a monument at Greenwich Hospital, so honourable to both. The simple fact that the deceased Admiral left his sword to Capt. Jackson is a noble and gratifying testimonial of his high opinion of him, [illegible] whom a more able, zealous, or courageous officer, or a more thorough bred seaman never stepped on ship-board, [illegible] more entirely the innate and [illegible] of a gentleman. He is wholly ignorant of [illegible] tion, and I have, &c.

NAVAL PROMOTIONS.

Sir,—As the eight lines are now commissioned, I take the liberty of saying what I think of the skippers.

The six seniors are well chosen, but I cannot compliment my Lord Minto and the Lords of the Admiralty on the other two. Why should sixty-seven Captains be passed over, and eleven of them Companions of the Bath, (from Captain Ranton Sharp,) to make room for Capt. M. T. Fitz-Berkeley, a man who knows more of horse-racing than a ship; indeed, he generally rides himself.

Capt. Thomas Bell Sullivan, the last of the list, is a gallant and good officer, and to make room for him eighty Captains are passed over, and fourteen Companions of the Bath: surely frigates might have been given to the last two officers, and I am certain many of my brethren will think that they ought not to have been passed over.

March 26th, 1836. A Captain of 1811.

[Our correspondent admits that six are well chosen, and the eighth to be a gallant and good officer: Lord Minto has not, therefore, exercised any extraordinary patronage in these appointments, and we well know that a Minister could not retain power without some patronage. Capt. Berkeley's we believe to be a ministerial appointment, and not one of the First Lords.—Ed.]

NAVAL OFFICERS' CHRISTENINGS.

Sir,—After the generous advocacy of your correspondents, and the justice of your able comments relative to the pensions of naval officers' widows, I really feel a reluctance in again mooting the subject, but when circumstances occur by which the best feelings of our nature are aroused, at acts which not only border on cruelty but injustice, it behoves us to espouse the cause of those who have the most imperious claims on the country. It is within my knowledge lately an a widow of a gallant and meritorious Lieutenant applying for her pension, that she was directed to produce her husband's baptismal register, which she had considerable difficulty in effecting, and another is situated in the predicament of not being able to acquire it, as the individual has no relative existing who can furnish her any information, consequently (unless she possesses some influential interest), after her husband's forty years' service, she will be left to the merciful care of the New Poor Law Commission. Now, Sir, the question resolves itself into this simple shape—Is the deceased the man who has devoted his life to our service? and is the applicant legally entitled to the fulfilment of our contract with him? If so, why resort to measures to avoid that which a civilian could enforce by law? The miserable provision (if it may be so termed) held out as a reward for the sacrifice of life before an enemy, or in a pestilential clime, is too paltry for "a noble and generous nation" to resort to subterfuge to contravene, nor can I believe that it can emanate from the higher authorities. The Horse Guards, in their printed instructions to the Army, recommend the officers to avail themselves of a regimental register, which can, upon all occasions, be had recourse to. This, from the nature of the service, cannot be adopted in the navy, and as the officer produces the necessary certificate on his passing, that should be held sufficient. I will not occupy more of your space on this new mode of relieving the country from a "dead weight," but trust good faith will not be broken with those gallant men who solace themselves with the cheering thought that their widows will not be thrown on parish clemency. Observator.

VANGUARD VERSUS RODNEY.

Audi alteram partem, et Palmam qui meruit ferat.

Sir,—Having thoroughly investigated and maturely weighed the arguments lately produced on either side, respecting the report of Mr. Hawkes, the Master Shipwright of Pembroke, on the comparative qualities of Vanguard and Symonds, versus Rodney and Seppings, I cannot but conclude that he has been most injuriously misrepresented, and far too roughly handled, by his opponents. The letter of J. A. which appeared in the Portsmouth Herald, save an erroneous statement which must have been palmed upon him by enemies to the good cause, seemed to set the matter fully at rest, until the able writer in the Telegraph, whose satire is too biting to permit his confining himself to logical inferences, took up the cudgels. There are but few such clever writers to be found as the author of the series of letters to which I allude, now publishing in the above paper. But, like a good counsellor, his forte rests more in perverting facts, and making crooked things appear straight, than in affording information founded on plain and simple truth. This he has shown in his severity towards Mr. Hawkes. Now, Sir, Mr. Hawkes is a man of such known integrity, just principles, and honourable feelings, that he would scorn to become the fawning sycophant of any power however powerful, and his practical knowledge of shipbuilding is such that his opinions must, and ever will, have due weight with unprejudiced individuals. What he stated then respecting the superiority of the Vanguard, was what he conscientiously believed, and really the remarks of one of his extensive experience ought to have due influence, even with opposing parties. 'Tis a fact that all ships built at Pembroke must necessarily be produced cheaper than in any other of his Majesty's yards, inasmuch as the charge of officers for conducting the service of that establishment is in a considerably lower ratio than either Plymouth, Portsmouth, Chatham, Sheerness, or Woolwich. At Pembroke there is but one Master Shipwright, no Assistant, only two Foremen and eight Inspectors. Most of the officers, too, are on reduced salaries, such, for instance, are the Master Shipwright, Surgeon, Clergyman, Store Receiver, Foremen, Boatswain, &c. These, then, are weighty considerations in building bulwarks for the nation's protection, and have ever yet had their due weight with the different administrations. The consequence has been that Pembroke is become almost the sole building dockyard for the Navy, and at the head of this department Mr. Hawkes has been placed. An office of such import thou can never be considered obscure; nor, indeed, can it be supposed that one of mediocre abilities should be selected for the appointment. With sincerity, then, say I, as stands the motto at the head of this article, "Palmam qui meruit ferat." I had intended, Mr. Editor, attempting a return of the eloquent compliment paid me by Tristram in a recent number of your Gazette, the first time I had an opportunity of addressing you; but, Sir, so full of poesy was the paragraph respecting the "rose and the thorn" that after ransacking the most flowery crevices of the most fertile corners of my imagination, aye, and even calling in the aid of Spurzheim's phrenological researches to discover the bump of composi-tiveness (alias composition), I find all my efforts "so cold and so dull" compared with his warm encomiums, that I must e'en give up the matter in despair. Let him then take the will for the deed, and imagine that musical, indeed, must be my feelings not to acknowledge the force of his beautiful simile. May I hope, too, that these mutual gratulations may, like those mystic rites which bind freemasons in bonds of the strictest friendship and brotherly love, in some measure unite us in social concord. If he knows where that "Grand Master" was buried who "lived and died within the square," we are already fraternel. If not, I hope we are at least in friendship. Philotrierus.

THE NEW SHIP MEASUREMENT ACT.

Sir,—In your paper of last week a paragraph signed H. endeavours to defend the new bill by complaining first of gratuitous assertions, calling for proofs and authorities, and then bestowing on it much praise (gratuitous, I fear) for its "simplicity of process, clearness of details, and accuracy of results." Now, Sir, it must be well known to you that from the first printing of the bill, two years before it came into operation, the newspapers of all our principal shipping places teemed with doubts of the efficiency of the new measure, on account of the complicated, uncertain, and intricate mode of proceeding on taking the dimensions. To laud it, therefore, in this way will be thought by all who have read its provisions, little less than an insult to common sense. And for the accuracy of results, I here transmit a list of vessels measured for registry under the new act, by the official measurer for the Customs at the port of Dartmouth, with the name, or owner's name, of each, all of which it will be seen, without one solitary exception, confirm the failure of the new measure, and prove it to be an aggravation of the very evil it was intended to correct.

TRISTRAM'S REMARKS UPON THE DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZE-MONEY IN THE FLEET.

My Gunn Fellow, Mr. Editor,—Overhauling the debates upon the Naval Estimates, I was much gratified to find a more generally good feeling towards the Royal Navy than has been hitherto evinced within the walls of Parliament since the days of Trafalgar. As Mr. Canning, by his celebrated speech on affording aid to Portugal, carried the measures of Government nem. con., so Mr. Wood, the Secretary of the Admiralty, carried the Naval Estimates to increase the naval force; even Mr. Hume publicly acknowledged his satisfaction, and honestly confessed they were the fairest and clearest estimates he had ever seen laid before the House. I am now in hopes brighter days will dawn upon the track of the British Fleet, which has, under so many masters, and for so many years, been navigated by "dead reckoning," in cloudy, variable, and equally weather. From the beginning of the peace, nor sun nor shone by day nor moon nor stars by night for the Navy's observation to shape its course clear of the rocks of innovation, neglect, reduction, and partiality, springing up and sinking alternately at the Admiralty, whilst the atmosphere surrounding the Palace, Parliament, and the War-Office, has been ever and bright, ever shining upon the path of the Army, w ther the soldier in his march to court, where the knig nan is ever exhibited in the colour of the Throne, m reeves, decorations, and guards—where all blushes with military hue,—where "the battalion of at least 200 stro ever finds favours, rewards, medals, honours, orders English and Hanoverian Knighthood, ad libitum!!! w ther to the barracks, where profusion, ease, and lux dwell; or to the hallowed grave (a sanctuary never viola by sea-dogs and sharks), bedecked with the cypress and willow, planted by the hand and watered with the tear his surviving partner in life, now amply pensioned for ten years' conjugal love and fidelity. To Gods! what PLEASURE to live, what a GLORY to die a soldier!!!

Luckless, cheerless, hapless, have been the Naval Offic since their white spotless collars and cuffs have been decked with the RED,—the Flag and Commanding Offic luckless, from the loss of half their prize-money; the Li tenant in command, from the deprivation of their pers emoluments; all ranks cheerless, from not being requi for their services and wounds, or their merit rewar equally with their military brethren in arms; hapless, f the dreadful anxiety of mind arising from the convict that, after their death, and in that land, too, they have fended, their affectionate partners in life's cares and ills perhaps 20 or more years, in hundreds of cases will wan from their husbands' unmarked graves to beg, from door door, heart-broken, destitute and forsaken widows!!! O God! what a STAMP-ship to live, what a MIS-fortune to a Sailor!!

From this true mirror, which faithfully reflects the sm and joy on the land-officer's face, and the gloom and cons the sea-officer's face, let me revert to the recent proclam tion for the distribution of prize-money granted for t seizures of smugglers and cheats, as the remarks there will for awhile dissipate all painful recollections of wrongs and distresses. That the abrogating of the two proclamations was necessary and judicious all must b conceived, as they abolished nearly every immemorial c tom, by which many classes of officers shared. The Ma who had passed for Lieutenants, and veteran grey-hea Gunners, Boatswains, and Carpenters, were removed fr the class of Warrent Officers, to share with the Master, Arms; and the Assist.-Surgeon of a month's standing share with his superior officer, the Surgeon, of perhaps m than 25 years' in actual service. First Lieuts. of 1st to rates, ten shares more than their seniors in other ships; no wonder! the earthquakes at the Admiralty, since war, overthrew nearly every existing regulation in the Na and removed every buoy and beacon by which the gallan narian steered clear of the dangerous quicksands of nove in the laws and customs of the sea, and the rock (the in duction of the stand-at-ease system) on which naval or and discipline have lost their rudders. The policy of country to reward the petty officers and seamen of its f is wise and good; but to reward them at the expense the Commanding Officers must ever be considered ma and UNJUST, without compensating these deprivations with equivalent in full-pay or half-pay for the great loss in pri money. This hardship will be felt the most by the Lieu nants in command, who now lose half their prize-mon besides the whole benefit of the purserage.

In 1816, Lord Melville having been informed of the tention of 600 commissioned officers, headed by Lord mouth, to petition the redress of their wrongs and gri nces, did raise and equalise the pay of several grades sea-officers; but it is a notorious fact that his Lordship gulated the Captains' of 5th rates' pay at 400*l.*, and rates' at 340*l.* only, assigning a reason that these r would be more certain of profit in reinstituting t regiments than the higher rates; and whilst he gave Commanders, whether of 18-gun brigs, with 60 men, o 20-gun corvettes, with 125 men, 300*l.*, he reduced Lieutenants' (in command) from 156*l.* to 150*l.* [illegible], observed, the purserage would make their income at l 200*l.* per annum. Here, then, I respectfully submit, manifest hardship to these officers in the two first grades tions within two years, unless the Admiralty should gr crease to their full-pay, as I prayed the [illegible] of House of Commons, which I trust will be granted by present Parliament assembled, thereby doing justice to Commanding Officers as well as by the service. The proclamations have, however, been the source of consid me much amusement as well as disappointment. Immed ately after the first was promulgated, a Captain of [illegible] addressed you and declared that he felt like [illegible] his rank degraded because he was made to share with squals in the fleet, the Sea-Lieutenants, and not with Senior Lieutenants or Commanders doing duty as su who perform the duties of, and are, in fact, in the situations as, the junior Field Officers in a regiment. But whoever messed with a Captain of Marines [illegible] amusing companion, possessing an inexhaustible fund anecdote,—

"Gibes, jests, and flashes of merriment

Sir,—There was a paragraph in the last letter of the ...ies which appeared in the Hampshire Telegraph on that ...ite source of controversy, "Vanguard versus Clarence," ...ich requires immediate contradiction. Will you theo, ..., favour me with the insertion of the following remarks ...your forthcoming number, which, as authenticated facts, ...mand publicity, and will tend to convince the unprejudiced that Mr. Hawkes is not the unprincipled character ...e writes endeavours to make him. It is stated by that ...dividual that Mr. Hawkes, for selfish motives, declaims ...ainst the man who brought him forward in the service. ...ow, far from owing anything to the late Surveyor of the ...avy, Mr. Hawkes, from differing in opinion with him ...specting his sound stems, rather suffered in promotion ...ring his official reign than otherwise. It appears Mr. H. ...rved his apprenticeship to the late Sir Henry Peake, this ...lone was sufficient to place him, with all the others who ...d so (and of which there are yet many living instances), ...upon the shelf," as the saying goes in the dockyards. ...ll there was another and more cogent reason for "coldly ...ssing him by." The late Sir T. Thompson, who knew ...e professional acquirements, and was aware of the ob...ion of Mr. Hawkes, sent him to Halifax for the express ...rpose of obtaining his promotion. Instead of his being ...ickly recalled, there he remained performing the ardnous ...ties of Master Shipwright, for four years, and that ...o in the heat and bustle of war. On his return what was ...e for him? Why he remained an assistant at Deptford ...d Chatham seven years!!! Now it should be remembered that Master Shipwrights on foreign stations are generally recalled only to fill similar situations in the home ...ockyards. How did it happen, then, that he returned to ...n assistant? Was it from want of talent or professional knowledge? No such thing. The numerous testimonials he has in his possession from the Admiralty and ...dmirals commanding on the Halifax station, fully disprove ...em. No, it was because he unfortunately disapproved ...f Sir Robert Seppings' round sterns, and had the candour ...o tell him so at the time, aye, and received Sir Robert's ...pprobation for his honesty, though he ever after withheld ...om him his fostering hand of promotion. These, Sir, are ...riefly the facts of the business, and from which it will be ...vident the writer of the letters above alluded to is in error ...hen he ascribes the elevation of Mr. Hawkes to the influ...ce of Sir R. He may banish these doubts to the "waste and ...oiling wilderness," for Mr. Hawkes is too much a man of ...onesty, candour, and honour for such a proceeding. It ...ay be supposed that I am an interested person from my ...ubbing these remarks, or that Mr. Hawkes is at least ...ware of my doing so. ## SALE OF SOLDIERS' NECESSARIES.

Sir,—The prevalence of this offence has increased (notwithstanding the two lamentable instances which have occurred lately of premature death) to such an alarming extent in this garrison, that the officers feel themselves at a loss what mode to adopt to arrest the turpitude of the purchasers, and the disgraceful delinquency of the soldier, the first shielding themselves under the mistaken honour of the system, and the latter from exercising a presumed right, appropriating the property to be "his own." Every expedient which reason or mild coercion could suggest, has been tried to awake the wretched man to a sense of shame at the moral degradation to their character, from their thirst of liquor; but whilst the devotee can acquire the baneful end, with his "discharge" as the beacon of success, it operates as a stimulus to accomplish his views. It is self evident the feeling will, and all its terrors to both parties are unavailing, so much so, that during the present week five brutes (I will not sully the name by calling them soldiers) have actually taken off their shirts and shoes at a house of the worst description in the town, and sold them to indulge their propensity. Surely, Sir, a clause might be introduced in this year's Mutiny Bill, making it felony to purchase the articles in question, on the oath of one witness, or being found in the shops denominated "dealers in marine stores," old clothes salesman, or any other premises where soldiers do not lodge, or wash for them. And in order more effectually to prevent the crime, the linen should be conspicuously marked, back and front, Rl. Artillery, Rl. Marines, with the broad arrow, the same mode to extend to all our regts. of cavalry and infantry. Also, if a man is "discharged," his accoutrements to be delivered up, and a compensation made, which would defeat the plea of a purchase under that pretence; and if the men, notwithstanding these precautions, [illegible] to continue to make away with them, they might be "billed up," their coats turned, and so drilled, separate from other "defaulters," and placed in a room by themselves under "stoppages," until the deficiencies are made up, and on no pretence whatever to be allowed to speak to any other soldier, or quit the barracks, or enter the suttling house, or be allowed to drink beer or spirits, during the period of confinement, and the supplying of either by a soldier or a civilian, a breach of the articles of war to the first, and a penalty to the latter; and should a delinquent wilfully destroy or make away with his necessaries, he should be subject to 12 months' imprisonment and hard labour to any of his Majesty's gaols and no regiment, as heretofore, suffer the culprit to degrade its uniform by wearing it on his journey to, or in the prison, but habited in a distinguished convict's dress for the offence. But as to "drumming out" (or the "honours of war," as it is now jocularly termed), it should never be had recourse to short of an act of infamy, but they should be sent into regts. devoted to foreign service for life, unless they there retrieved their character by years of exemplary conduct; nor can I hold with the practice of the soldier, in "chains and logged," exposed to the public gaze, which not only breaks down the animal spirits, but engenders indifference to shame from the frequency of the exposure, and causes reflections on the part of the spectators highly injurious to the service and the means of recruiting it. And if flogging is allowed (for any crime) I would suggest that all the medical staff of the corps should be present, that no stigma by inference of a want of medical capacity or mercy might singly attach, where both might be possessed in eminent degree. The character of the houses where the profligate soldier rants in drunkenness with the most abandoned of the other sex, should be represented to the Commanding Officer, by trustworthy non-commissioned officers alternately, who could then present them to the magistrates, who, as evidence, would, no doubt, put down the sinks of infamy (which do exist here) which entail nothing but misery and disgrace on those who frequent them.

CASE OF SIR ANDREW HALLIDAY.

Sir,—Sometime ago Sir A. Halliday, Dep. Insp. Gen. of Hospitals, was sent to England from the West Indies by Major-Gen. Sir Lionel Smith, commanding the forces, with several charges against him, and with an application to Lord Hill to have him placed on half-pay; this both Lord Hill and Sir J. M'Gregor, the Director-Gen. of Hospitals, refused to do, first, it being in opposition to the regulations which state that no officer shall retire on half-pay, whose character is not unimpeachable; next, the injustice it would be to the individual charged not to give him a fair trial. The result was, Lord Hill decided on Sir A. Halliday going back to the West Indies, there to stand his trial before a General Court-Martial. He did so, was tried and acquitted of all the charges, with the exception of a trifling part of the 5th charge, which even the Court palliates. This, Sir, is a hard case: an officer of rank is sent home with charges against him, and at the same time application is made to have him placed on half-pay, as it were to hush these charges, fearful of their being tried: as Lord Hill states, why were not those allegations tried on the spot, thereby saving a great expense incurred to the public by Sir A. Halliday's expenses to and from the West Indies, the forwarding of officers from Barbadoes to Demerara to form the Court, with evidences and various other expenses, making a considerable sum. Now, Sir, what would be said to a junior officer who had made calumnious charges against an officer of rank, given so much trouble, and caused so much expense? why in all probability he would be told his Majesty had no further service for him, and his conduct would be blazoned forth, and read at the head of every regiment. The world will now see who is the real calumniator, and who has incurred the greatest expense to the public. If officers were obliged to pay the expense occurring by Courts-Martial on frivolous charges, many of the Courts-Martial which take place would never occur.

[In publishing this letter, we can only express our regret that we have not space for the official correspondence between Lord Hill, Sir James M'Gregor, and Sir Andrew Halliday, on this unpleasant affair.—Ed.]

BRITISH AUXILIARIES IN SPAIN.

Sir,—As I have seen no exact detailed account of the affair that took place at the village of Mendixon, in which the British Legion were engaged, perhaps this extract of a letter from a friend in that Force, who was on the spot, may be worthy of a place in your valuable Gazette. I send this for the purpose of showing the performance of each regiment engaged, and the part they took.

London, 29th March. A. L.

"In marching from the villages in the neighbourhood of Vittoria, on the 16th January, the 1st and 2nd regts. were ordered to form the rear-guard, in consequence of their being the oldest and best disciplined troops of the Legion.

The enemy having taken possession of the village of Mendixon, close to which the Lieut.-Gen. and Staff were reconnoitring, Brig.-Gen. Chichester rode back, and ordered the 1st regt., under Lieut.-Col. Beatson, to advance for the purpose of dislodging the enemy from the village. The 1st advanced in column, at 'a quarter distance, to within a quarter of a mile of the village,' when two companies were advanced in extended order, closely followed by the column. The Skirmishers having taken a direction rather too much to the left, Brig.-Gen. Chichester ordered the 1st to move along a road a little to the right, leading into the village, by which movement they arrived there just after the right of the line of skirmishers, who were engaged with the enemy, the latter keeping up a smart fire while they retreated from house to house as the English advanced. On being driven out of the village, the enemy retired to a wood about 300 yards distant, from which they kept up a constant fire on the parties of the 1st, which had been posted to all the entrances to the village on the side of the enemy's position. After a short time the enemy advanced a line of skirmishers both in front and on the right of the village, where a smart fire was kept up between him and the 1st. Brig.-Gen. Chichester at this time sent his A.D.C. to the Lieut.-Col., to propose to advance with the 1st and 2nd (which latter had in the meantime come up to support the 1st) to drive the enemy out of the wood; he was, however, ordered to stand fast. The 3rd, or Westminster Grenadiers, had also been brought up to a rising ground on the left of the village, and two companies from that regiment were sent forward to skirmish, under Major Campbell, with two companies in support. The light companies of the 1st and 2nd regts. at the same time moved down from the village. On approaching the wood, it was found necessary to extend the companies that had been sent as supports, and the main body of the 3rd, under Col. Churchill, was ordered to advance to charge, on which the 9th and 10th regts., which were drawn up on the left, gave a true Irish cheer, when the line of skirmishers immediately fixed bayonets, cheered also, and drove the enemy out of the wood. The Westminster Grenadiers certainly deserve great credit; but it is but fair that other regts., should also have their due, and as the 3rd is the only regt. we have seen mentioned in the despatches and letters, I think it but justice to the others to give you a true statement of the case."

THE NEW AND OLD RATES OF MILITARY HALF-PAY.

Sir,—Could you kindly inform me whether Lord Palmerston was brought to light on the flowery banks of the Shannon. I know his Lordship is an Irish peer, but I am not sure that he is an Irishman. I myself am a Tipperary man, and of all the hulla and blunders poor Paddy is taunted with, the invidious distinction between the new and the old rate of half-pay, appears to me the greatest. Flesh should not be made of one, and flesh of the other; but wisdom had decreed upon any difference, the officers reduced half a century ago should have had the preference before those more recently reduced to the increased or new rate of half-pay. To my apprehension, this arrangement seems the most invidious distinction that ever was concocted by the cheese-parings of single Gloucester, or the candle ends of a little farthing rushlight. Britannus.

COAST GUARD SERVICE.

Sir,—Your assurances that you have not changed your opinions relative to the Coast Guard Service gave me much satisfaction, because, on referring to your pages, I find much to approve of in the statements therein expressed relative to this anomalous establishment. Allow me to observe, Sir, that I think you are greatly misled in what you state as to seamen not entering for this service. In proof of the contrary, I have, within the last few months, received several applications from old and deserving shipmates of mine, all able seamen under thirty-five years of age, soliciting of me to get them into the Coast Guard, but as I have no interest with the chiefs of this service, I was obliged, reluctantly, to refuse. If the Comptroller-General will but issue public bills in every port for able seamen under thirty-five years of age, and with good testimonials, I will undertake that he will get 500 excellent men within a month. All I ask is—let this be tried, and thus make this service a corps of reserve for our Navy in the event of emergencies.

Claudius.

[Under the present system of entering men for the Coast Guard, that service cannot be considered a reserve for the Navy, because those belonging to the Coast Guard are under no obligation or engagement to enter into the Royal Navy, and of this positive fact our correspondent does not seem to be aware. We must here drop the subject.—Ed.]

Turtle Club.—Not far from New York is a place called Hoboken, once a favourite spot for duelling, but now the chosen place of resort of the Turtle Club, which meets there every Tuesday. The following is their card of invitation:—"Sir, the Hoboken Turtle Club will meet at the Grove, for epsom exercise, on Tuesday, the — instant, by order of the President."

It was an ancient Arab proverb, that God had bestowed on their nation four precious gifts. He had given them turbans instead of diadems; tents instead of walls as bulwarks; swords instead of entrenchments; and poetry instead of written laws.—Sharon Turner.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1836.

The numerous disquisitions which have lately appeared upon the subject of the Report, relative to the abolition of Corporal Punishments in the Army, will render unnecessary our enlarging so fully on this question as we had intended. Its vast importance, however, all must admit, who are at all acquainted with the constitution of our Military Force, and of the imperious necessity of maintaining its strict discipline in the field. The evidence of the Duke of Wellington is conclusive, that it is impossible to do away with Corporal Punishment altogether, if we would desire to uphold that high character of the British Army which it so proudly acquired whilst under his Grace's command. As the Duke most justly observed before the Committee, it is the certainty of immediate correction which makes the bad man do his duty properly, and which, were he not thus compelled to do it, must fall on the good man in double proportion, for as in every company of one hundred men, there may be calculated perhaps twenty bad characters on the average, who would skulk on all occasions when duty was required of them, the deserving and well-disposed eighty would have to perform the work of this remaining number, were there not some mode of punishment available at the instant to compel the unwilling to bear their share of the labours that were called for. As the Duke of Wellington with equal truth remarked, it is the example that is needed, in order to deter others from committing the same offences, and this example is best shown by the system of Corporal Punishment, so long practised with success in our Army and Navy.

Experience convinces us, that if the power to inflict Corporal Punishment be withheld, the necessity for its exercise will increase tenfold. It is the certainty and not the severity of punishment which tends to check crime. The inferior and non-commissioned officers should watch narrowly to detect all minor offences, and to cause every fault, however small, to receive its proportionate punishment, and thus to prevent their growing to higher crimes. It is, by maintaining a strict discipline like this in a regiment or in a ship, that Corporal Punishment will be rendered unnecessary. Our pages have before shown some satisfactory instances of this sort both in the Army and Navy, one of which in the letter we recollect, and which was stated in the discussion on the Impressment question. This was that of the Pilot in the Mediterranean, a vessel said to be in the highest state of [illegible] and fine order, between the years 1810 [illegible] and on board which ship not a man was [illegible] by the lash for twelvemonths together, [illegible] called forth the marked approbation of the Admiralty. The great object thus attained, it has been stated by her Captain, in his letters under the signature of Marcellus, was effected solely through the zealous attention of his officers, and particularly that of his First Lieutenant, the late Captain Alexander Campbell, whose indefatigable attention to his duties, and particularly to instilling into the men a sense of emulation and pride) which is evidently the best preventive of crime) those only who have witnessed the active energies of this deeply lamented officer can truly appreciate. Further we are sure the distinguished Lord High Admiral of Portugal, with whom Mr. Campbell served for some time in the Thames, will fully confirm all that we have said relative to this gallant young man, in illustration of the possibility of doing without Corporal Punishment for a very long period, by the close attention of the officers and non-commissioned officers to those under their command, either in a ship or in a regiment.

As regards the means of exciting emulation and good conduct in the men belonging to the Army and Navy, we would suggest first, that their pay should be increased, so, as to make it an object of anxious desire to get into either service; next, that one or more classes of an ORDER OF MERIT should be established; and, thirdly, that to those who had gained the highest class of this distinction, together with a certain length of service, should be ensured a situation either in the Excise, Customs, Dock-Yards, Ordnance, or in some other public department, wherewith to add to his comforts and that of his wife and family, by increasing his income in his latter years; and, above all, that there should never be a BREACH of FAITH towards them. Measures of this sort would, we are confident, tend in a large degree to improve the conduct of our soldiers and sailors, as it would teach them that, by a system of meritorious behaviour, they would be sure, eventually, of reaping these well earned rewards. We are compelled to postpone till next week, the conclusion of the Duke of Wellington's evidence on this subject.

We have never had reason to change the opinions we expressed at the time of the Court-Martial on Captain Watheo, 15th Hussars, and the removal of the Lieutenant-Colonel of that gallant corps, Lord Brudenell, to half-pay. His Lordship we then considered to be very harshly used: he was sacrificed principally through a prejudice created for the purpose of his ruin. We rejoice most sincerely at his restoration to the Service; for, supposing even that he had committed a grievous offence, is it an English principle that an error of judgment is to be visited by perpetual punishment? We deprecate Mr. Hume's proceedings in this matter, and we hope Sir William Molesworth will take better counsel before he agitates this subject any further. We are of no party; but finding it to be admitted by Ministers that they were made acquainted with Lord Hill's intention to recommend to the King that Lord Brudenell should be restored to Full Pay, that they considered the judgment of the Commander-in-Chief to be perfectly right in this matter, and consequently that this Tory Nobleman is thus acknowledged by a Whig Government as deserving of generous consideration, we are certain that every honourable mind will reprobate the attempt still further to wound an individual whose feelings have already been so severely lacerated.

The remarks which we lately made upon the extraordinary appointment of Captain Sir Henry Bethune to the rank of MAJOR-GENERAL in India had called forth some very just observations from a correspondent at Portsmouth, on the equally anomalous one of Sir James Cockburn, a retired Captain of the Guards, to command the whole of the Royal Marine Forces in the United Kingdom.

Having ever taken a warm interest in all that relates to this distinguished corps, and upon all occasions zealously endeavoured to promote its welfare, we consider it right to say a few words on the subject to which our attention has been drawn. In doing this, we mean not to impugn in the most remote degree the public character or private worth of the present Inspector-General, but solely to allude to the inconsistency and injustice of the appointment that he holds, and which, as we have before observed on different occasions, has always been represented to us as an insult to all the old and meritorious Colonels belonging to the Royal Marines. The facts complained of are, that Sir James Cockburn, who has sold the commissions that he held in the Army, and who does not possess even that of an Ensign, independent of his local, or rather his brevet, rank, should have been nominated to command a corps to which he never belonged an hour in his life, together with that of receiving the rank of MAJOR-GENERAL, and this too while there are Colonels at this moment in the Marines who have held commissions in it above fifty-six years, and who having fought and bled in their country's defence, have mainly contributed to the acquirement of those proud honours which this distinguished corps so deservedly bears on its banners and appointments, in token of its matchless services in every quarter of the globe. To every impartial observer it will at once be manifest, that the appointment of Sir James Cockburn is in point of fact a wounding reflection on every superior officer of this gallant corps who had a right to look to this command, in succession, as they reached the top of the list; and, as justice is the watchword under which the present Administration came into office, we cannot but believe that they will, at an early period, bestow on the senior Field Officer of the Royal Marines, actually employed, this appointment, which must be admitted to be his birth-right; conferring, at the same time, on the worthy officer, now holding the situation of Inspector-General, some Colonial Government similar to the last that he held, or some other office that may be acceptable to him, and where his abilities will no doubt again prove highly useful to his country.

There is no doubt remaining that the appointment of Commander-in-Chief at Madras has been offered to Lieutenant-General Lord Edward Somerset, and we believe that it has not yet been declined by that gallant Nobleman. We have repeatedly appealed to the authorities in Leadenhall Street to exert themselves to obtain this appointment for one of the Company's Officers, and in justice we will add that our appeal has not been wholly disregarded. The Court strongly recommended the appointment to be conferred on that distinguished Officer, Major-General Sir John Doveton, but their recommendation has been met by a distinct refusal from the Board of Control. Lord Elphinstone's appointment to the Government of Madras has been finally settled. We cannot but agree with a Correspondent, who forwarded [illegible]

he present posture of Eastern affairs. What will e the fate of India under the new order of things? What can be expected when, with a disgusted rmy, anarchy, confusion, and a knowledge of ower with education and union, are introduced mongst the natives? As another benefit, we are st informed that the new Commander-in-Chief f India has gazetted his son to a regiment. What as he done for the Indian Army?

A General Order, issued by the Ordnance Department, will be found in our columns. We ublish it with much satisfaction, not only in reerence to the remarks we have lately made on the ubject of Barracks, but as it shows the anxiety of he Department and the talented and excellent General at the head of this branch of the Public ervice, to do every thing possible for the comfort oth of men and officers.

Each succeeding day, as it arrives, brings efore us some fresh cause for animadversion pon the present loudly-condemned and most nnmalous Coast Guard Establishment. During he last fortnight, or thereabouts, a Court of nquiry has been sitting on Lieutenant Dornford, f the Navy, commanding a station in the Isle of Vight, on charges, some of them of the most erious nature that an officer can possibly be ar- aigned upon, and now we find, after all this igno- iny, "there was not the slightest evidence to sub- antiate either of these serious offences." The uestion then arises, will not a civil action lie gainst his accuser, or accusers, whoever they may ave been? It is, we believe, an understood re- ulation in the Army and Navy, that if an inferior fficer brings any serious charge against his su- erior, and does not prove the alleged offence, e subjects himself to dismissal. If, then, this be he admitted fact in the United Service, ought here not to be some punishment in both the pro- essions as well as in every other public employ, or a superior officer who, out of caprice or malice, r any other unworthy motive, unjustly charges an nferior with a crime, which affects all that is dear o him as an officer and a man? Is an honourable, pright, meritorious servant of the Crown to be ccused of treason, as it were—that of betraying is trust and receiving bribes from the enemy, for uffering the produce of the illicit trader to pass nheeded,—and, on his establishing that the whole f such charges are false and base, has not an officer hus cruelly persecuted any means for obtaining eparation for the irremediable injury which his haracter has sustained?

Staring flagrant acts of this sort cannot longer e suffered to pass with impunity (indeed, we learn, hat the subject will be brought before Parliament ally at an early period), and, whilst we promise o recur again and again to this question until the vils which we represent are corrected, we will ppeal to the Earl of Minto, with all the earnest- ess of devoted supporters of right and justice, at nce to command one of two things to be carried nto effect; namely, either to order every Naval fficer to quit the Coast Guard Service, or to ause a thorough new organisation of it in every orm, for whilst it remains in its present anomalous hape, it is, we maintain, a disgrace and dishonour o any subordinate Naval officer to belong to it. We well know that our statements and the letters of Navy are working, and that changes are in pro- gress, but the Naval Service requires more than partial alteration in a system proved to be radically bad.

To show to the Noble Lord, now at the head of the Admiralty, a case entitled to his regard and commiseration, will, we are fully assured, be certain to secure to the object of it his Lordship's patronage and protection.

It is then, with no ordinary feelings, that we now submit to the Earl of Minto the case of the son of the unfortunate Officer, whose unhappy fate, on the 12th instant in the Citadel of Plymouth, his Lordship is most likely already acquainted with; indeed, we believe a petition, signed by most of the principal inhabitants of that town and its vicinity, in favour of the young man whose claims we are thus advocating, has by this time reached his Lordship, and will, we doubt not, meet with his naturally kind and humane consideration.

Mr. James Watson, the youngest son of the late Fort Major of Plymouth, has, we understand, been in the Navy about twelve years, full ten of which he has served on foreign stations, and we believe that he has passed his examination for a Lieutenant between four and five years. He is now Mate of His Majesty's sloop Cruiser, on the West India station, in which ship he has been distinguished in the capture of slave vessels; but more particularly so on a late occasion, when the Cruiser ran on shore, and when it became necessary to get a hawser fastened to a rock, in order to assist in heaving her off. Having, it would appear, no boat with which to send this rope to the rock, Mr. Watson, at the imminent risk of his life, jumped overboard with a line in his hand, with which to haul the end of the hawser on shore, and swam to the spot where it was to be fastened, and by these means at length got the end of a cable conveyed to the place where it was required to be attached, and by this measure alone it was that the Cruiser was got off the shoal.

For this dashing enterprise his Captain, M'Cauland, wrote him a testimonial expressive of his highest approbation, and also immediately sent a copy of this flattering document to the Commander-in-Chief, Sir George Cockburn, with the view of recommending Mr. Watson to the Admiral's notice for a Lieutenant's commission. These facts, together with his late aged and highly respected father's faithful services of FIFTY-EIGHT YEARS, added to the afflicting circumstances which have recently occurred to his unhappy family, will, we fervently and confidently trust, at once interest the Earl of Minto in his behalf, and thus ensure to him that rank which, from all accounts, this gallant young man so well and so fully deserves.

The report that a Flag promotion will take place on the King's birthday, gains strength. We shall state the substance as it exists in the Clubs, without vouching for its truth, as we should be loth to hold out expectations which we greatly fear will be disappointed. It is said that the intended promotion will include those on the list, down to Capt. George Tobin, C.B., now in command of the Prince Regent yacht and as out of these thirty, probably not more than ten, are eligible for their flags, under regulations as to service; and the Colonelcys of Marines held by Captains Skipsey, Irby, Cole, and Bouverie, will be abolished immediately, as well as the Governorship of the Naval College at Portsmouth next year, no increase of expense will appear in the estimates. It is further reported that as this promotion will include the Hon. Capt. Bouverie, just appointed to the Vanguard, it is intended that the gallant officer shall hoist his flag in that ship, in which case we hope that, in common justice to the Surveyor of the Navy, he, the Surveyor, may be appointed Acting Captain of the Vanguard, and allowed to select officers in whom he can place confidence, and who have expressed themselves favourable to his system of construction. We make these observations, because we have reason to believe that on some occasions his directions have been greatly deviated from, and his opinions thwarted as regards the stowage &c., of his ships; and it has certainly created no small astonishment in the service, to find Capt. Bouverie select his Second Captain in the person of Commander Currie, who was First Lieutenant of the President with Sir G. Cockburn, and may probably be supposed to have imbibed some of the prejudices which that gallant officer is pleased to entertain against the Surveyor's ships. We will do Capt. Currie the justice to say that he bears the character of an able, active, and intelligent officer, and nothing in these remarks are intended to reflect in the slightest degree upon him; but we think it but reasonable, that officers should be appointed to the first line of battle ship which Capt. Symonds has constructed, and upon whose behaviour at sea the success of his principle will greatly depend, who cannot be suspected of unfavourable impressions, and who will implicitly follow the directions of the constructor. In fact, if Capt. Symonds is not permitted to direct the fitting out of the Vanguard and accompany her in her first cruise, with full authority to command what he thinks proper, the service will never consider that he has had fair play, and the results of trial will not be satisfactory, however they may terminate.

The appointment of Sir P. C. H. Durham, G.C.B. Admiral of the Blue, to the command at Portsmouth is at length officially announced, and the gallant Admiral will hoist his flag on Tuesday. He has selected Capt. Dundas for his Flag Captain, and Mr. Joseph Edye as his Secretary.

In consequence of some misrepresentations which have gone forth respecting the Vanguard, more particularly as to her weakness of construction, by reason of substituting Iron for wood in her diagonal bracing, we have been induced to make inquiry, and the result is (what indeed we might have anticipated), that there is not a word of truth in what has been so industriously circulated. Such of our readers, however, who may have perused these mis-statements, will be astonished to learn that so far from the Vanguard's breaking from the true line (commonly called hogging) in so great a degree as ships built by Sir R. Seppings, and braced diagonally on the system which he introduced, and for which he deserves great merit). She has not broken or hogged more than one inch, and one quarter of an inch, from the true line, since she left the building-slip!—and we think a single parallel instance cannot be produced in this respect. We are old enough to recollect that the hogging of a foot in a line-of-battle ship was so common an occurrence as scarcely to call for remark; and in some cases it has happened to English as well as French ships to the extent of twenty inches. Even since the introduction of the diagonal bracings, it has usually occurred from three to six inches. The St. Vincent broke eight inches, the Royal William and Nelson more than half as much; indeed, we know not of a single instance, except the Vanguard, where the break has been less than three inches! Yet, in the face of these facts, so easily ascertained, the members of the ci-devant school will obtrude assertions upon the public, and impose them upon Editors, notwithstanding that the falsity of them is sure to be discovered, and exposed in a few days if at home and in a given time when related as occurring at Malta or other foreign stations. And this reminds us of a farrago of imbecile suppositions, which appeared last week in a Portsmouth paper, respecting the Vanguard and Clarence. It would have been more honest and manly on the part of the Editor of a respectable Journal to admit that he was in error, than to support a bad argument by this special pleading. He surely cannot have seen Mr. Hawkes's Report; if so, what need is there of supposing this or that? The quality, quantity, and price, of the material is there stated. There is no room to imagine this or that, and it argues but a bad cause when, instead of doing the amende honorable, and making some apology for the insertion of so libellous a statement, we find the course persisted in of bolstering up a bad argument with far-fetched deductions and roundabout reasoning, almost as nauseating as the productions of the school, and evidently concocted by the pamphleteering committee. We perceive that the unhappy members of that establishment are now engaged in a controversy amongst themselves: we wish them the reader joy of it—rope is all they want, give them plenty of that, and (provided any Editor will afford them space room for their lucubrations, and they will soon convince the public that their pretensions have been taken at their full value by those most competent to judge. We now suggest to the Surveyor to call upon these gentlemen to furnish individually draughts of ships of all classes, real for the builder, in order to ascertain whether they be any general and fixed principle, universally acknowledged and admitted by themselves, for the dimensions, forms, &c. of the several rates, or whether they are not of different opinions as regards this important matter.

THE statement put forth by the Portsmouth papers of last week, that the Naval College at that Dock-yard will be abolished in June is not correct. We were the first to announce the intention which exists to abolish the establishment; but as we perceive a vote of 2348*l.* beyond the ordinary receipts has been taken for the Naval College in the Navy Estimates, it will be continued for another year.

THE Navy List just published affords some striking improvements, and we are pleased to perceive that more than usual pains have been taken with this, as well as the last few numbers; indeed, in hastily scanning over the present List, we cannot detect a single error, unless it may be considered one to retain the name of a vessel (the Pike schooner) after intelligence of her loss has reached England: but this is usual, we believe, until after a Court-Martial has been held on the officers, and the cause of such loss officially ascertained, up to which time the crew are on full pay. We perceive a new feature in the present number. In the list of Admirals, Captains, and Commanders, the date of each first commission is introduced, so that the term of service of every officer in the subordinate ranks can be readily ascertained. This will afford food for speculation to our half-pay readers, and, if we mistake not, give rise to a considerable quantity of material for our correspondence columns. It will recal many a gallant exploit, and also satisfy the cavillers of the present day that Naval patronage was not always so impartially distributed as it now is.

DURING the week several petitions have been presented to Parliament, from commercial towns (amongst others, Manchester and Newcastle), in favour of Mr. Buckingham's claims for compensation; and although these are too late to have any effect during the present session, they tend to show the general feeling which is entertained throughout the country as regards the injustice of the East India Directors to this gentleman, and the certainty that the Company will be compelled to do that, eventually, which they should long ago have volunteered to perform. In the meantime, we are pleased to perceive that public feeling is aroused on this point, and that Mr. Buckingham's constituents at Sheffield have put forth a spirited address, inviting the numerous classes who have benefitted so greatly by that gentleman's exertions in breaking up the East India Company's monopoly, and opening new channels for our manufactures, as well as all those who have hearts to feel for the unmitigated oppression which he has endured, to subscribe to a fund for the purchase of an annuity to place the Hon. Member and his amiable partner in competence for the remainder of their lives. We are sorry that the length of the address precludes the possibility of our publishing it, but Mr. Buckingham's claims on society are pretty generally acknowledged, and we doubt not the proposed fund will be cheerfully subscribed to by that class of well-informed persons of which our readers are principally composed. There is one part of Mr. Buckingham's conduct which we cannot sufficiently admire, as displaying signal disinterestedness, and which affords a sufficient answer to those who have been hired to traduce his honest endeavours at obtaining the compensation to which he is entitled. In the first session of the reformed Parliament, when the policy of renewing the Company's charter was under consideration, and its fate in abeyance, at that time, when the Directors were lavishing their thousands, in order to avert, by every possible means, the extinction of their monopoly, and when they would readily have compromised with Mr. Buckingham, and made any terms to buy off the hostility of so powerful an opponent, we find this gentleman carefully avoiding any reference to his own case, but pleading with extraordinary eloquence and success for the adoption of those measures which ultimately prevailed, and which it has been generally admitted were greatly hastened, if not brought about, by the strenuous exertions of the Hon. Member for Sheffield. His singleness of conduct on this occasion alone, and his disregard of his own claims until he had first secured for his countrymen the advantage of a widely extended field for their industry, should now be acknowledged on their parts, seeing that by his uncompromising behaviour he has entailed upon himself the remorseless hostility of the Company, whom no sense of justice will ever now induce to entertain his claims, even when recommended to do so by a Committee of the House of Commons, composed of the leading statesmen of all parties.

THE late regulation relative to Prize-Money has naturally caused much dissatisfaction to the Field Officers of the Marines who may be embarked in our ships of war, for under it even a Lieutenant-Colonel is entitled but to the share of a Lieutenant of the Navy, though his corresponding rank is that of a Post Captain under three years' rank. So unfair and unjust an arrangement will, we feel convinced, be at once corrected, by giving the Majors of Marines, who may be embarked, or who may be serving on shore with our Navy, the same Prize-Money as Commanders, and the superior ranks of Field Officers the same as Post Captains. This alteration is the more called for, because the Field Officers of the ARMY, acting with the NAVY, would be entitled to these proportions, and, therefore, surely the Marines should have the same rewards; for, the more we reflect on the high renown of this valuable part of our Military force, the more do we consider that it ought in every way to receive the same advantages as each and every other branch of the United Service; whereas we are pained to find that in several different points this is yet denied to the Marines. For example, the Commandants of this distinguished corps are far worse paid than the LINE or the ARTILLERY; and the Captains, also, have thirteen-pence per diem less pay than the line, or even the Militia. Why or wherefore these invidious distinctions exist we are at a loss to understand; the time, however, we trust, is not far distant when all those unfair regulations will be amended, and that every rank of these brave men will be made to share with their brethren in arms all the privileges and benefits which are enjoyed by other corps. Amongst the improvements which we would propose for the Marines one is, as we lately observed, that there should be but one hospital for them and our seamen in each of our Naval Arsenals, and to which they should uniformly be sent the moment they were unwell; and further, that there should be a retired old Captain, or senior subaltern of meritorious character, attached to each hospital, in addition to the Naval Lieutenant now belonging to these establishments, for we deem, and we are sure the whole country will deem, that it is impossible to do too much for a corps, to whom the nation stands so deeply indebted for its services in war, and which has won such imperishable laurels in every clime.

WE lately noticed in a contemporary journal the letter of an Old Purser, on the subject of the contemplated improvement in the pay of this class of officers, and we think the advice the writer gives his brother Pursers it will be well for them to follow, namely, to wait patiently until the plan, now under consideration, be completed, and not to anticipate evils until they arrive, for they may rely upon it, that whatever can be effected to benefit this, and every other class of officers, together with the Navy generally, will be accomplished by the present Board of Admiralty, as the opportunities for doing so may be afforded them.

THE papers have recently announced the death of a Mr. Graham, a Clerk in the Admiralty, son of Sir Robert Graham; and we have been asked by more than one of our correspondents, if this is the gentleman whom Sir James Graham was charged with having nominated to this situation two or three years since, immediately after having discharged fourteen Clerks from the Admiralty, as being no longer needed in that department. As we are, ourselves, unable to answer this question we shall be glad to receive from any of our friends the information sought.

The Irish Municipal Reform Bill was read a third time on Monday night and passed, by a majority of sixty-one, in a House of 459 members—being a Ministerial majority proportionally much larger than on Lord F. Egerton's motion, when the number present was 550, and the majority only sixty-four.

TUESDAY, 29th March.—The Irish Municipal Corporations Bill was read a first time, and the second reading fixed for 18th April.—The LORD CHANCELLOR moved the second reading of the Municipal Corporations Act Amendment Bill. The Duke of WELLINGTON complained that the Bill had been pressed on their Lordships an inconvenient time. Lord MELBOURNE vindicated he course pursued. Lord LYNDHURST agreed to the econd reading, which was carried.—Lord MELBOURNE ated the House would adjourn to Tuesday, 12th April. —The Duke of RICHMOND moved the first reading of a ill to regulate the laws respecting the sale of bread.

WEDNESDAY, 30th March.—The Royal assent was iven by commission to the Slove Treaty (Spain) Bill, he Annual Indemnity Bill, and thirteen Private Bills. —The Duke of NEWCASTLE moved for returns of all oman Catholic chapels, with the dates of their erec- on; also returns of all monastic establishments, distin- uishing whether for monks or nuns, together with the umber in each; also for a return of all Roman Catholic olleges and seminaries in England and Wales, distin- uishing those which belonged to the Jesuits; and also f the number of Roman Catholics in Great Britain in he year 1780, and their progressive increase down to the resent time. After some discussion the motion was greed to, excepting that portion which referred to the umber of Roman Catholic colleges and seminaries, and he number of Roman Catholics in England in 1799.

Their Lordships adjourned to Tuesday, 12th April.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 29th March.—Sir W. MOLESWORTH gave otice that he would put a question to the Secretary at War respecting the rumoured appointment of Lord Bru- enell to the Colonelcy of the 11th Light Dragoons.— ord J. RUSSELL moved the third reading of the Irish Municipal Corporations Bill. Mr. SHAW opposed it, nd moved as an amendment that it be read a third time that day six months. Mr. BLACKSTONE seconded the mendment. Mr. WARD spoke in defence of the Bill. ir R. INGLIS was unfriendly to the measure. Mr. OCHE supported the Bill. Mr. EWART followed on he same side. Mr. FINCH thought, primâ facie, Ireland ad a right to the same institutions as England, and a rong case ought to be made out to justify the opposition ade to the Bill. Mr. BELLEW spoke in favour of the easure. Major CUMMING BRUCE opposed it. Mr. V. MITH thought an attempt should be made to cure the ils of Ireland by the same course which had proved uccessful in England. Sir W. FOLLETT was content abandon the Irish corporations, but he objected to the resent Bill, which went to establish new political and xtensive bodies. He could not suppose that the Catholic riesthood of Ireland had in view to establish the au- emacy of their religion. If they had any such object contemplation, it certainly ought to be at once told em—and that in terms too emphatic to be misunder- ood—that they never could or should realise such an xpectation. Mr. SHEIL pronounced a most powerful ration in favour of the Bill. Mr. S. WOOTLEY opposed, nd Mr. GISBORNE supported the Bill.—Sir ROBERT EEL opposed the Bill. For those with whom he acted, ey denied that they refused to reform abuses in Ireland. hey professed their readiness to correct abuses, but ey did say that they would not consent to the re-estab- shment of corporations in Ireland, and to the perpetua- on of similar abuses under another name. Mr. Sergeant 'LOGHLEN replied at some length. The House divided, hen the numbers were—ayes, 260; noes, 199. The ill was read a third time and passed.

TUESDAY, 29th March.—A multitude of petitions ere presented, on a variety of subjects. Among them as one from a Mr. John Studdall, claiming 10,000*l.* for e invention of a machine capable of discharging 36 ullets a minute, on account of which he had received 350*l.*—Sir R. PEEL called the attention of the House the circumstances under which magistrates had been ppointed in various places, and which, he thought, indi- ated an undue preference for party purposes. Lord OHN RUSSELL denied that there had existed on the part f the advisers of the Crown the least disposition to acrifice the ends of justice for the sake of the views of arty. Sir R. VYVYAN did not consider the answer of he Noble Lord satisfactory. He accused him of injus- ice in the selections he had made, and of being animated y corrupt motives. Mr. BERNAL saw nothing to justify he attacks that had been made. Lord J. RUSSELL said e should have a right to cast censure on the Hon. Bart. a calumniator if he did not follow up the charge he ad preferred, and immediately bring the question to a ecision. "I," said his Lordship, "am ready to abide he issue of that decision, knowing as I do that the harge of corrupt conduct is false and unfounded." Af- er a very warm and noisy discussion, on the call of the PEAKER, Lord J. RUSSELL and Sir R. VYVYAN seve- ally declared that they did not consider the observations which had been made in the course of the evening were ntended to be personally offensive.

WEDNESDAY, 30th March.—Petitions on a vast variety f subjects were presented, including one by Mr. WAK- EY from a Mr. Goldsmith, of Mary-le-bonne, praying hat the Duke of Cumberland should be prosecuted for is connexion with Orange lodges.—Sir W. MOLES- ORTH wished to know if it were true that Lord Bru- denell, after being removed from the command of the 15th Hussars, had been appointed Lieut.-Colonel of the 11th Dragoons, and if so, whether the appointment was one which had the approbation of the Noble Secretary of War? Lord HOWICK stated it to be true, but the Secre- tary at War had nothing to do with the appointment. That rested wholly with the Com.-in-Chief. He had known the appointment before it was submitted to his Majesty, but saw no grounds on which he could object to it. Mr. HUME, as the Noble Lord had declared that he was not responsible for the appointment, begged to ask who was? Was the Com.-in-Chief subject to no con- troul, and was the Secretary-at-War merely his clerk? Lord J. RUSSELL said the appointments were placed at the discretion of the Com.-in-Chief. If he exercised his authority improperly, Ministers would be responsible for not advising, in such case, his removal. Mr. HUME wished to know if the recent promotion of Lord Bru- denell had the sanction of Ministers. Lord J. RUSSELL had known of the appointment about to take place, but knew no grounds on which he could object to it. Sir H. HARDINGE said the appointment was approved of by Government as they did not interfere to prevent it. Lord G. LENNOX expressed high satisfaction at the re-appoint- ment of the Noble Lord. Sir W. MOLESWORTH gave notice that shortly after the recess he should move an address to his Majesty on the subject.—Mr. P. STEWART gave notice that, on 15th April, he would call the atten- tion of the House to what he advisedly designated the aggressions of Russia.—At a quarter past eight the House adjourned till Monday the 11th of April.

The Court.

We are happy to state that the Queen has entirely recovered from her indisposition.

The King has not finally determined whether the en- suing birthday is to be kept at Buckingham Palace or at St. James's.

His Majesty's Levee on Wednesday was thinly attended. The following were presented—Lt.-Col. Lord Brudenell, on his appointment to 11th Lt. Drag.; Mr. H. R. Wigley (Surrey Yeomanry); Eos. Nicholson, 96th reg.; Capt. S. Jackson, R. N., on his appointment; Lieut.-Col. Weare, K.H., on his appointment; Major S. Cotton, 28th, on return from India; Col. Cox, K.H., on return from the Cape, and promotion to the Staff of Nova Scotia.

His Majesty will not hold a Levee next week, but on Wednesday, the 13th of April, at two o'clock, and the future Levees on the succeeding Wednesdays until fur- ther orders.

Her Majesty's intention is to hold Drawing-rooms on the following days, viz.:—Thursday, April 21; Thurs- day, May 5; Saturday, May 28; and Thursday, June 16.

The King has conferred the honour of knighthood upon Col. Daniel Jones, and upon Maj.-Gen. W. G. Davy, C.B. and K.C.H.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The Quotidienne announces that M. de Peyronnet is seriously ill, and that his condition causes the most lively anxiety to his friends. Marshals Mouncy and Maison have had a serious quarrel on the subject of some military appointments. The Chamber of Deputies have suspended its sittings, though the commissions still met. Louis Philippe is said upon the authority of an "intercepted letter," addressed by Alava to Cordova, to have expressed himself to the former General in the following words, "I will never consent to send a French army into Spain, that country where anarchy and insub- ordination are breathed with the air."

SPAIN.—The Spanish Cortes were formally opened by the Queen Regent in person on the 22d inst. In the speech delivered on this occasion, much praise is given to the auxiliary troops for their patient and exemplary con- duct during the last winter, which is spoken of as "an unprecedentedly severe and cruel season." The tone of the whole speech is statesman-like, neither sanguine, ex- travagant, nor gloomy. On the same day the Gazette contained an official despatch from Espartero, announcing a victory gained by him over the Carlists near Orduna, in which the Carlists lost 800 in killed and wounded, and the Christinos 200. Much has been said on both sides respecting this victory, the Carlists claiming it, and reversing the numbers. There is little doubt that the Queen's troops have gained some advantage.

PRUSSIA.—Berlin, March 19.—The autumnal reviews on the Rhine will probably be as follows:—One corps of the army will be reviewed at Paderborn; then the other at Wesel; and afterwards both together at Cologne and Dormagin. Our King is confidently expected, and it is already reported that a kind of diplomatic meeting is spoken of; at least, it is affirmed that King Louis Philippe, and the Kings of Holland and Belgium, will be there.

Theatres.

The King's Theatre opens with La Gazza Ladra, in which Grisi, Tamburini, Rubini, and Lablache will appear. Little Carlotta Grisi, and Perrot, will appear on Saturday.—Drury-Lane offers no novelty.—Covent- Garden, a grand romantic extravaganza, called Zaccizouw, in which some extraordinary scenery will be exhibited. The Lyceum opens with an excellent company and two new pieces; a drama called Lucille, or the Story of a Heart, and an operatta, entitled A Day well Spent.—Astley's opens on Monday for the season with a grand spectacle, called The Great Fire of London, or the Plague of 1665.—The St. James's re-opens for one night, for the benefit of the clever representative of Monsieur Jacques, who has issued a most attractive bill of fare for his friends. Sadler's Wells re-opens under the management of Osbaldiston, with Paul Clifford, and the pantomime of Guy Fawkes. Part of the Covent- Garden company go to the Wells.

Law and Police.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT, March 20.—Campbell v. Mackay.—Mr. Knight, on the part of Lady Camp- bell, widow of the late General Sir James Campbell, stated this was a petition that her ladyship, as one of the guardians of her infant children, might be at liberty to take them to reside in the south of Europe, on the ground that a southern climate was absolutely necessary for their health and preservation. The whole day was spent in reading affidavits of the most conflicting nature from a number of eminent men as to the effect of climate on scrofulous or strumous diseases; and also as to the necessity of removing the children out of the kingdom in reference to their individual health. Ano- ther very serious portion of the case made by the affida- vits in opposition to the motion, filed by the other guar- dians, related to Lady Campbell's fitness to be trusted with the children abroad. This defence was met with counter evidence by Lady Campbell. The evidence was not concluded when his Honour rose for the Easter holidays.

HOSPITAL SCENES AND SKETCHES OF THE BRI- TISH AUXILIARY LEGION OF SPAIN.

BY A VETERAN.

ABOUT a league and a half from Santander stands a large convent, now converted into a barrack, the site whereof is beautiful; embosomed in surrounding hills, and the neighbourhood fertilised by a small rivulet which holds its vivifying course almost unseen; numerous alders skirt its channel—the water-lily spreads its broad leaves over its surface—and plants that love the moisture and the shade clothe its verdant banks, in pleasant contrast with the cystus and origanum, the only vegetation that flourishes in the arid soil around. The benevolent inmates of the convent had been expelled to make room for foreign mercenaries, and the thinly-scattered inhabit- ants of its vicinity were left bitterly to deplore the ex- change.

One of the most comfortable (if the term may be so applied) of the apartments was used as a hospital; and here were to be found men of the different corps who barracked there, and some who had been left behind by regiments which had moved further into the interior. Amongst the latter, a veteran North Briton, who be- longed to the Scotch Fusileers, was left suffering under organic disease to await his summons to "that bourne from whence no traveller returns." The medical officers had done all that their skill suggested, and limited as- sortment of medicaments would allow; and with that humanity which, to their honour, they have almost uni- versally displayed, had ordered that anything the dying man might wish for or require should, if possible, in- stantly be procured. Still he seemed dissatisfied; and after some persuasion (he being the only one of his regi ment that was left behind) intimated that he was a Ca tholic, and could not die in peace without those rites w his church which he had been taught to consider essentia Now arose a difficulty: the revolutionary mania ha driven the regular clergy from their establishments, an it was not without some difficulty that the parish prie could be found; and when he willingly came, (although at a late hour of the night, and amongst a body of me who had given proofs of anything but order and subo dination), the difference of language seemed to place insurmountable barrier between him and his penitent: ho ever, a Sergeant of the Westminster Grenadiers, w had acquired a knowledge of the Spanish language dur the palmy days of the British Army in the Peninsu War, and who was also a Catholic, acted as a medium communication between them; and within two hours his receiving the last sacrament the soldier expired. It—can it be believed, that scarcely was the breath parted, and whilst the glazed eyes still continued ope uarrel arose between two ruffians as to which should h the dead man of his shirt? and it was not until the rovost Guard was called in, and they were handed over well-merited punishment, that quiet was restored to e hospital. The body was removed to a room on the ound-floor, used as a dead-house, and many Irish he-nging to the 7th Regiment, a few of the 3rd, and veral English, having procured two lamps, knelt round e corpse, whilst the Sergeant, before mentioned, read e prayers for the dead, in which all present devoutly ued. It was an affecting, if not an edifying, sight, to hold men, rude by nature and stern in disposition, ought by a sense of religion to discharge the last offices humanity to a total stranger, with a delicacy and ndness that would have done credit to more civilised rsons.

Upon leaving Santander, the part of the Legion of hich I am speaking proceeded to Portugallete, where a eat difference was to be perceived in the manners of inhabitants, and their treatment of the troops, from at we had been accustomed to at Santander. Strongly ached to Don Carlos, they looked on the Christinos th detestation and disgust; fired at us when oppor-nity occurred, either on the river or outside the town; nswered sullenly upon all occasions; and revenged them-ves for our intrusion by making us pay thrice the value any article of comfort or luxury which we might wish purchase. The town itself stands on the left bank of e river that runs from Bilboa to the sea, and, like most wns in Spain similarly situated, looks well from the ater; but the instant that you land, narrow streets, ndows without glass, accumulations of filth, and hog-s in abundance, dispel the illusion, and you wonder hat you could have seen to admire.

The church of this town possesses a very lofty cam-nile, or steeple, in which a sentry is constantly kept, o, from his elevated post, can command an extensive nge of country; a circumstance particularly desirable, the Carlist bands traverse the neighbourhood, and fre-ently drive off the cattle, although they do not always t in concert, as may be gathered from the following t:—

In January last, part of the 9th, a Scotch regiment, and e Rifles, had the outlying picquet. Shortly after they d reached their ground, information was brought to the ficer in command, that an attack would be made during e night by a body of Carlists, equipped in red caps and ue blouses, similar to those worn by the Chapelgorries, r whom they intended to be taken. Every necessary rangement was made to give them a warm reception, d their arrival awaited with anxious expectation. Strict ders were issued that no man should fire until the word s given; and the numbers of the British were as much sked as the nature of the ground would permit. It s a clear, frosty, moonlight night; and, about twelve, formation was brought in, by one of the patroles, that body of Chapelgorries, consisting of about 400, as ar as could be guessed, were advancing from the direc-n in which the Carlists were expected to come. The lated sentries were withdrawn, the advanced posts led in, and all awaited the arrival of the enemy with enthlase anxiety. On a sudden, a volley of musketry oke in on the silence of the night, which it appeared s instantly returned, and before time sufficient had psed for a party to be sent to reconnoitre, a sharp fire commenced, and was kept up with considerable it. On the officer's return who had been despatched ascertain the cause, he reported (as it turned out) that sham Chapelgorries were engaged with a party of ir own men, belonging to another division, who, igno-t of their disguised fellow soldiers' intention, had en sent on a marauding expedition to carry off cattle, l thus, mal à propos, encountered their friends. As n as this report was received, the British moved cutly forward, and, after first pouring in a volley, rged upon the astonished and discomfited combatants, o fled, leaving 100 prisoners, besides killed and unded. Well would it have been for the Christino se could similar instances of gratuitous good luck be en recorded; but they occurred "like angels' visits, r and far between."

Whilst the men became dissatisfied with the quality their provisions, and discontented at several of the ns for which they were put under stoppages; spike-ils to hang their accoutrements on, candles! and loss the exchange of money—the military chest having en supplied in sovereigns—soles for their boots, al-ough every man was provided with two new pair, and ek oil-skin haversacks. Much as the conductors of e expedition have been censured for want of foresight, one can with justice charge them with imprudence in e issue of necessaries, for the men were actually stopped r their black haversacks long before they received them and this in the teeth of the promise that a complete t should be given to the soldier.

After remaining some time in Portugalleto, Bilboa, nd the vicinity, the Legion was moved towards Vittoria; approaching this place, the Commanders pointed out to their men those places that had been rendered famous by the valour of their countrymen; but, alas! there was no similitude between the situation of the legionary and the British soldier of the Peninsular War. The latter serving with confidence, under the orders of that great Captain whose very name was a tower of strength, marching beneath that glorious banner which for a thou-sand years had "braved the battle and the breeze," jeo-parding their lives for their king and country (although on foreign ground), felt convinced by experience that their wants were provided for, comforts attended on, and, should misadventure befall them, provision would be made for them, and if they fell it would be gloriously. Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori! On the other hand, the soldiers of the Legion, serving under a Chief (whatever may be his merits) as yet but little known in the annals of military fame, badly provisioned, and hav-ing no efficient guarantee for pensions or reward, aban-doned, if not betrayed, by the foreign General under whose order they were placed, could not be expected to equal their compatriots, whose gallantry was held up to them as an example! To add to their embarrassments, the irregular and insufficient supply of provisions, the unnecessarily heavy loads they were obliged to carry, together with almost continual exposure to the weather, brought on sickness. Typhus and dysentery both raged with violence; the hospitals, if such places might be so called that were unprovided with beds and destitute of common comforts, were crowded. The medical men were worn out by fatigue, many of them sickened, and some died in consequence of over-zealous attention to the discharge of their duty. The state of the case may be gathered from this fact that a medical officer, a M.D. now in London, was left three days near Durango unat-tended (his servant being also ill), and when by mere chance a superior officer discovered him, he was delirious, with his rations of raw meat and bread lying round his pallet—his wine had doubtless been taken care of.

It must be obvious to the most common observer, that if such was the state in which a medical officer was left, how dreadfully deplorable must have been the situation of the men, huddled together on the bare boards, with one blanket between two individuals, generally in a church, where the effluvia arising from the burying places beneath, and the exhalations arising from so many dis-eased persons, rendered the atmosphere all but pestilen-tial! The repeated and harassing marches frequently caused the medicine chests to be left behind, and the number of Surgeons, diminished by sickness, death, and retirement from the service, was inadequate to pay proper and necessary attention to the sick. The men died in the hospitals, at the rate of from 25 to 30 daily, by the lowest calculation; and those who retained their health, murmuring at increasing hardships, and dispirited with the prospect before them, were not likely to gather many laurels during a campaign so disastrously begun. The officers themselves, disgusted with the incapacity (not to say treachery) of the Spanish Commander Cordova, were loud in complaint, and many of considerable rank have quitted the Service.

In the mean time, the most strenuous exertions were made in England to fill up the chasm which sickness had made in the ranks. Receiving houses were opened in different parts of the country, placards posted, and men even liberated from the jails on condition of their enter-ing the Service. One instance in particular can be given. A gang of resurrectionists had been committed to New-gate, in Dublin, for trial, their ringleader, a man of the name of Malone, having been before convicted of the same offence; these men were discharged from prison to join the British Auxiliaries of the Queen of Spain, their characters being too bad to be received into the English Army!

Even should the Legion be recruited to its original or intended strength, (which seems very problematical, since the exposé that has been made of the manner in which the men are treated,) still it would be very doubtful if it could be rendered sufficiently effective to be of material service by the time it will be wanted, as it will take four months at least to render the new levies available, and by the expiration of that period it is not unlikely the contest may be terminated. It may be urged against this opinion that most of the men who were engaged in the first affair (that of Hernani) had not been enlisted more than six weeks; but this proves nothing, for though it is certain they behaved as well as could be expected, it is equally certain that the confusion into which they were thrown from want of discipline, must have proved fatal, had the Carlists been sufficiently strong to have become, in their turn, the assailants.

Another circumstance that militates strongly against the success of the Legion is the innate and rooted dislike that the natives of the north of Spain, in particular, have to foreigners. Decidedly a rural population, with the exception of the inhabitants of the sea-ports, they are enthusiastically attached to their ancient institutions, and are unwilling to barter all the good that they have experienced for the desperate chance of something better, which modern innovators promise. The monastic or-ders, which possessed large estates, and were the best and most indulgent landlords, have been deprived of all; for the revolutionary spirit that shook the throne has overthrown the altar, and thrust its ministers forth to starve. But the ignorant Biscayan and Guipuscoans are not sufficiently enlightened to perceive that robbing the church and plundering its ministers is the way to make religion respected, and are old-fashioned and obstinate enough to fight to the last in defence of all they have been taught to hold sacred.

In conclusion, if those who are rash enough to medi-tate joining the Legion, should there be any so infatu-ated, will take the trouble to ascertain how their prede-cessors have been treated, they will learn enough to dis-courage the most sanguine and enthusiastic,—hard usage, a deficiency of provisions, and worse than all, no pay forthcoming; and as to military glory, what have they gained? or what have they done during the eight months they have been out? spent the whole of their time in marching and counter-marching, strongly reminding one of the old saying—

"The King of France, and forty thousand men, Marched up the hill, and then—marched down again."

The Governess; or, Politics in Private Life. By the Daughter of the Author of the "Balance of Comfort." Smith, Elder, and Co.

THE object of this very clever volume is to improve the position and to relieve the irksomeness of the life of a "governess." The author says it has always been a favourite opinion with her, that the world was made up of "men, women, and governesses;" and, surely from the manner the latter are too generally treated, we may with some reason consider them as a class sepa-rated from all others:—well educated beings earning their daily bread by the sacrifice of every comfort, and their feelings exposed to every annoyance. The book is calculated to reform a distressing evil, and it is also en-tertaining; we recommend it strongly to every parent who has occasion to employ a governess, or who medi-tates sending a child to earn its support in that unfortu-nate station.

Songs of Granada and the Alhambra, with other Poems. By Lydia B. Smith. Saunders and Otley.

THERE is considerable grace and beauty in this collection of verses, and many of them, for their melody and sweet-ness, well deserve to be set to music; the sentiments are both elegant and refined. From the Miscellaneous Poems we extract the following:—

'Twas but a dream! and yet I heard
My name in accents clear,
Named by those lips, whose lightest word
Is music to mine ear.
Oh thou! so loved—so justly dear!
Would thou wert here,—would thou wert here!

'Twas but a dream! and yet methought
I knew that silvery tone,
With all affection's sweetness fraught,
Calling on me alone.
Oh thou! so loved—so justly dear!
Would thou wert here,—would thou were here!

Each pleasure I once deem'd so great,
Now cold and joyless seems,
Without thee I am desolate,
Come to me still in dreams.
Oh thou! so loved—so justly dear!
Would thou wert here,—would thou were here!

The "Fairie's Home" is also a sweet poem, and we cannot resist its introduction into our columns:—

To night, to night! this very night!
While earthly beings sleep,
By the lovely and pale moonlight,
Our revelries we'll keep.
No mortal footstep dare intrude
Our haunts of fairy glee,
This sweet and radiant solitude
To us alone is free.

Where the dew-drops by thousands lie
In glistning splendour bright,
There we shall foot it merrily
In gallant trim to-night!
Where sing the nightingale and thrush,
And sapphyre gently sigh,
Where the bright crystal fountains gush
Our elfin court's held by.

Haste! away to enchanted ground,
Drink from the full acorn;—
Did ye not hear the blast he wound?
'Twas Oberon's magic horn!
From the charm'd goblet we shall sip
That makes delight our own,
Ne'er was it touch'd by mortal lip,
The happy Fay's alone.

Nightly we hold our festival
Beneath the oaken shade;
The little glow-worm lights our hall,
Of moss the carpet made.
A bright troop to the banquet come,
Each in his emerald vest!
Oh! lovely is our fairy home,
And none like us is blest.

Recollections of the Italian Opera, 1835. Mitchell.

We here have, in six splendid plates, the Stars of 835, ona of the finest Opera seasons. The drawings re by Chalon, and in his best manner,— Grisi, in the peras of Otello, Anna Bolena, and I Puritani; Tamurini and Rubini in I Puritani; and Taglioni in the allet of La Sylphide. These exquisite portraitures re drawn on stone by R. J. Lane, whose merit is so ry generally appreciated; and we consider the publicaon to be one of the most attractive for the boudoir or e drawing-room. It does credit to the artists and pubsher.

ON THE TONE AND SPIRIT OF GENERAL ORDERS.

An anonymous communication to the press, whether f real or imaginary injury or injustice, may in some sort e regarded as the secret and confidential report of the oldier to the press, as the report of his Commander is o his General Officer. If in the latter case the accuser f a party be allowed to shroud himself in darkness, in ases where the tendency and character, the truth or falsehood of his representation is only to be judged of by a ingle individual, and that in confidence, surely it should s permitted the soldier who conceives himself injured r oppressed to enjoy the protection of that shield as defensive armour which is permitted to be worn to proect the accuser in his offensive hostility to character. We are not now upon the discussion of the expediency f secret and confidential reports touching the character nd qualifications of officers, nor do we now propose to ourselves the consideration of the important question whether it were better that all secret and confidential eporting, all clandestine modes of communication were bolished, as unworthy means of obtaining information; ut sure we are of this, if that secrecy and covert proceedings be sanctioned and encouraged as against the fficer, the same officer should not be censured for employing the same means, as far as he honourably can, In is own defence,—in the assertion of his own rights and he vindication of his wrongs; and whether the wrongs e real or imaginary, matters not; for if real, publicity ay procure him redress and ought to be allowed as a natter of right; if imaginary, the great probability is hat his absurdity will be exposed and himself convinced ed rebuked without the disgrace of a Court-Martial, or he shame of a reprimand. We say that we regard the ommunications of those who conceive themselves injured or have grievances to complain of or abuses to xpose, as the secret and confidential reports of such inividuals to the press, the only superior that will or can end entirely impartial ear to their complaints; and e say, without scruple, that we do not see how it is ossible for a Commander to encourage the secret and onfidential reports, directed by General Orders, which may wound, which may influence, which may prejudice, which may injure—and that without the possibility of edress, whilst he discourages, nay forbids, the secret nd confidential communications to the press, which cannot wound without immediate atonement, which cannot influence without immediate correction, which cannot prejudice without immediate explanation, which cannot njure without immediate redress. The hardship of the ne mode of secret reporting, the danger of the practice s affording a means of giving scope to personal resentment, dislike, or prejudice, are plain and apparent to the least thinking mind; the wholesome operation (and wholesome because public and in open day) of the other mode of secret representation is as equally clear to the view of every unprejudiced eye, and we repeat that we cannot perceive how it is possible if the one be encouraged that the other shall be censured.—East India United Service Journal.

"Touch and go's a good Pilot," and Three Cheers from an Enemy!!!—During an engagement with the flotilla off Boulogne in the early part of 1805, the Locust, gunbrig, not being able to come to close quarters with the enemy, owing to light and baffling winds, but wishing to share in the glory of the day, fired over one of our own vessels, for which Lieut. John Lake, her Commander, was severely reprimanded by Commodore Owen. Soon after, an opportunity offered to obliterate the censure for an act of temerity. Three French officers put off in a small boat to amuse themselves in fishing, off Ambleteuse. The Locust's signal was made to weigh and destroy her. With a fine breeze from the north-east and flood tide, in two tacks she was alongside the beach, with the hope of cutting off the boat. The Boatswain, addressing Mr. Houghton, Sub-Lieut. who commanded forward, said, "This is warm work for us to-day, although they have not hit us yet." "Luff! Forbes (the Master)! luff, my boy, luff!" cried out Lake. "Luff, Sir! it is impossible; the brig's aground, the helm's nearly a-lee!" "Never mind that, 'tis a spring tide, and 'touch and go is a good pilot!'" The beach, by this time, was covered with several thousand Infantry (who kept hailing us to "strike and not sacrifice our men"), backed by eleven batteries, which kept up an incessant firing, so that the fore and aft mainsail had not one foot of canvas unperforated by musket balls and shot. Mr. Houghton proposed to Lieut. Lake to put some musket-balls and round shot into the carronades, and clear the beach. No sooner said than done (each bag contained a hundred musket-ball). Mr. Houghton, who but a few moments previous had cautioned the men from unnecessarily exposing themselves, jumped upon a carronade to see the effect they had, when he received a ball in his right leg, and had the mortification of perceiving the French officers land before the brig could come up with them; but, instantly backing the main topsail, Lake inquired of Houghton if he thought he could bring the boat off without sacrificing the men. "It's impossible, Sir; the beach is thronged with troops, who will pick off every man; but I'll soon settle the business, with your permission," Lake nodded assent; and Houghton immediately pointing a long 18-pounder double shotted, blew the after part of the boat to pieces, the brig at the same moment receiving a 42-pound shot through the fore part of the foremast. "Put the helm up!" exclaimed Mr. Houghton, "or you'll lose the roasts." Clewing up the top-gallant-sails and topsails, and setting in the head-sails, no sooner was the brig before the wind than the Frenchmen gave us "three hearty cheers." The Commodore made the signal for the nearest vessel to send their Surgeons to the assistance of the Locust, and, as she passed the fleet, she was cheered by the crews of the different ships. The Immortalité, making the Locust's signal for a Lieutenant, Mr. Houghton answered it. Commodore Owen said the signal was intended for the Commander: "but since you are here, Sir, how could Lake be so imprudent to expose his men by laying so close in shore? How many's killed?" "None, Sir!" "Impossible! impossible! for, at times, we could not discern the brig for the spray from the shot and shells! How many are wounded?" "None, Sir, but your humble servant!" "Ah! can she be refitted at her anchors?" "No, Sir; she must have a new fore-mast, as the spare top-mast is already lashed to it to prevent its going overboard." "Then make the best of your way into the Downs, get a new mast, and return to your station as soon as possible." She had scarcely returned to her station from refitting, when a large squadron of Dutch gun-boats, full of troops, from Sluys, were observed, at day-light, coming from the northward, when a signal was made for a general chase. The Locust, Blood-hound, and Pincher, gun-brigs, were among the foremost. The Locust, gaining the stern of the enemy, laid the Commodore on board. Mr. Houghton, in boarding, would have lost his life by the charge of a bayonet, which he fortunately parried with his sword, but received it in his left arm; Mr. Forbes (Second Master) was knocked down into the main hold by the butt end of a musket, the brig unfortunately shearing off at the time before any of the crew could follow; but soon alongside again, she was carried! The Locust still keeping the weather gauge of the enemy, was so close to the batteries off Cape Grisnez, that they could have thrown a biscuit into them, when she received two shots under water, one cutting through three flakes of the cable and starting the butt end of a plank on the other side. She would have gone down had not Mr. Houghton advised bearing up to get out of shot, and careen her by clapping all sail on her and bracing the after-sails flat aback, while the carpenter was slung, lowered over her side, and succeeded in nailing a piece of elm with well-greased fear-not over the holes; then veering round on the larboard tack, performed the same operation by driving in the started plank, but not without a tremendous ducking, as he was several times under her bottom from the heave of the sea, as it was a double-reef'd topsail breeze, then bearing up and carrying all sail, made the best of her way for Sheerness. —From Unpublished Naval Recollections.

Loss of Life in Battle.—The following is an estimate of the losses sustained by the English Army under the command of the Duke of Wellington, from the time of his appointment to it in Portugal until the peace:—

| | Officers. | Men. |
|---|---|---|
| In the Campaign of 1808 .... | 69 | 1015 |
| ,, 1809 .... | 248 | 4688 |
| ,, 1810 .... | 78 | 624 |
| ,, 1811 .... | 429 | 7884 |
| ,, 1812 .... | 116 | 11080 |
| ,, 1813 .... | 1025 | 14966 |
| ,, 1814 .... | 400 | 4791 |
| ,, 1815 .... | 717 | 9285 |
| Total | 3077 | 54233 |

This total does not include the Brunswickers, Hanoverians, Portuguese, nor Spaniards. It is remarkable that at Salamanca, the proportion of the killed to the combatants was 1 to 20; at Vittoria, 1 to 74; at Waterloo, 1 to 49; whilst at the battle of the Nile, the ratio was 1 to 36; at Trafalgar, 1 to 41; at Copenhagen, 1 to 32.

Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result; the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them. Craig Thomson, 25, New Bond-street, has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 134, OXFORD STREET, near Hollis-street, established in 1830, than through the adoption of any other method whatever; as Domestics, with good characters, are to waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock.

Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for Hiring Servants; but if the Servant possess a good character, it certainly is perfect nonsense to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a Situation.

N.B. It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labeling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose,) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use: in Bottles, 2s and 4s. each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 323, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1834, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 73, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

BRITISH CONSUL'S OFFICE, Philsdelphia.—Know all persons to whom these presents shall come, that I, Gilbert Robertson, Esq., his Britannic Majesty's Consul, do hereby certify that R. Warton, Esq. (who attests to the efficacy of OLDRIDGE'S BALM of COLUMBIA in restoring Hair), is Mayor of this City, and that M. Randall, Esq., is Prothonotary of the Court of Common Pleas, to both whose signatures full faith and credit is due. I further certify, that I am personally acquainted with J. L. Inglis, Esq., another of the signers, and that he is a person of great respectability, and that I heard him express his unqualified approbation of the effects of Oldridge's Balm in restoring his hair. Given under my hand and seal of office, at the City of Philadelphia, Dec. 29, 1833.

(Signed) GILBERT ROBERTSON.

Oldridge's Balm causes whiskers and eyebrows to grow, prevents the hair from turning grey, and the first application makes it curl beautifully, frees it from scurf, and stops it from falling off. Abundance of Certificates from Gentlemen of the first respectability in England are shown by the Proprietors, C. and A. Oldridge, No. 1, Wellington-street, Strand, where the Balm is sold, price 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle.—N.B. The Public are requested to be on their guard against counterfeits. Ask for "Oldridge's Balm," No. 1, Wellington-street, Strand.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"SIR,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them in no way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I find you are the Proprietor: after using it two days, I could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this one I suffered more in particular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, and since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended this SOLVENT to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, D. EADEN, Surgeon Dentist."

1, Southampton-street, Strand,
18th March, 1836."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Venders.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, dering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in l under the different varieties of atmosphere. Prepared by sers. HANNAY and CO., Perfumers to the Royal Family, 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individ- l who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably e paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively ployed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn hs of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three turies.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and t uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of r. The great care so proverbial that is paid to the cultivation he luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and is their well known to succeed in outvralling even the far- ed beauties of Circassia.

he Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly cessful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, , and silky head of hair.

sers. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some in- ces) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair n cast from—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, ill re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will pro- e the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, ain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a liant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a e LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, ophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the , and although an oily substance, the ENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, is therefore free from the general complaint against every r article in present use for the same purpose, including those y substitutes miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil sub- ed to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid ani- smell.

he laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform ciple. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews he atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly rished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as gic hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface co- d with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious ten- cy, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that to profuse perspiration become bald early in which is mostly caused by the acid caustic nature of the spiration on the hair and being absorbed, which en- y destroys it; if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will vent and preserve the hair free from injury; if regularly applied to the heads of infants it entirely re- the assistance of the dandruff combs, an ration to the heads of children.

ice 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, each.

B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly mmended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

PLEBEIANS & PATRICIANS.

"A clever work, contrasting the aristocracy of wealth with the aristocracy of birth. The grotesque exhibitions of ignorance, vulgarity, and absurdity among the early cotton manufacturers are exceedingly entertaining. It is a most correct picture of manners."—Spectator.

"Bulwer, Marryat, Hook, and the author of 'Plebeians and Patricians' are contesting the palm of literary popularity. Right and Plebeians and Patricians will be the leading works of fiction of the season. The author has taken up a new field of action, and has treated it in the most masterly manner."—Cambridge Press.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest in the consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 191, OXFORD-STREET, near Hollies-street, established in 1830, than through the adoption of any other method whatever; as Domestics, with good characters, are in waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock.

Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for Hiring Servants; but if the Servant possess a good character, it certainly is perfect nonsense to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a Situation.

N.B. It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

FAMILIES of DISTINCTION and others, who may be about to make extensive Purchases, will find important advantages in the present improved style of FURNISHING at HENRY L. COOPER'S Manufactory for Rich Upholstery, Chairs, Cabinet Work, and Looking Glasses of a quality and price that fears no competition.—98, Bishopsgate-street Within; and 57, Conduit-street, nine doors from Regent-street, left-hand side.

CAVALRY.

3rd Drag. Guards—at Longford, are reported for Cehir and Limerick.

4th Drag. Guards—The intention on the part of the officers and non-commissioned officers to erect, as a tribute of their affection and regard, a tablet to the memory of the late Col. Ross, who so long and so zealously served in the reg., has, much to their regret, been necessarily relinquished, in consequence of an intimation from the proper authority that any regimental subscription for such an object, however laudable, or however justly merited, would be an infringement of the principle of the orders of the army, issued so far back as 1810.—Caledonian Mercury.

11th Lt. Drags.—This corps has been 17 years in India, and will be home in two more, when Lord Brudenell will have to re-organise it, a duty we are confident he will perform with satisfaction to the service.

15th Hussars—Detachments moved on the 6th from Bansha, Cashel, and Yohlen, and Clogheen, to Caher, and from Fethard to Clonmel.

INFANTRY.

10th—Capt. Broom joined service cos., via Ancona, on 23rd Feb. Capt. Dunne returned from Greece, where he has been employed for the last two years in the commission for marking the boundaries between Greece and Turkey. Capt. Adams and Surg. Regan left Corfu on 26th Feb. to join the depot.

11th—was relieved from Vido on 1st inst. by the 10th; Maj. Denzy returns to England to take the command of the regimental depot.

18th—The detachments at Portumna and Bannagher, have been relieved by detachments from the depot 73rd reg.

25th depot—1 comp. (50) moved from Cork to Mallow on 1st inst.

29th depot—A detachment, consisting of 1 Capt., 3 Ens., 1 Serj., and 50 r. and f., has been ordered to join the service cos.

30th—Capts. Pogson and Furlong, have joined the depot from leave. Quartermast.-Serj. Heughey having obtained his discharge, was rewarded with the silver medal and gratuity for his long service and good conduct, being 7 years on the Peninsula, 14 in India, and latterly went with the regt. to Bermuda, whence he returned—his total service was 32 years. Corporal Dawson also received the gratuity and medal, awarded to his rank on discharge.

46th—The comp. at Newry marched for Belfast on 5th, to arrive on 6th, and join head-quarters.

66th—A singular instance of daring intrepidity on the part of a private of this reg. at the late fire in the citedel of Plymouth, deserves to be recorded. Francis Steward on hearing that a face was seen at an attic window, at the imminent risk of his own life mounted the ladder, followed by private Jansen of the reg., in the hope of rescuing Maj. Watson, or some of his family, and though the flames surrounded him, broke in the window with his fist, exclaiming, "That if the Major was there he'd have him dead or alive." He subsequently entered the cellar, in search of the inmates, after the falling of the roof, and remained in the suffocating smoke until struck on the back by a piece of timber. The same soldier at the commencement of the fire, and when the flames had reached the adjoining quarters, with extraordinary presence of mind removed a quantity of gunpowder and ball cartridges, which, if ignited, would indeed have been of fatal consequence. It will be remembered, that at the last regatta, a six-oared gig, in which were Maj. Phillips, 15th Hussars, Lieut. Ditmas, 66th reg., Lieut. Knowles, 75th, Ens. M'Carty, (Act. Adj. 66th) and others, was upset in the Sound, and that a soldier stationed on Drake's Island, seeing the accident from his window, instantly threw off his clothes, and plunging in, saved the life of the last-named officer, and brought him safely on shore. That soldier was the same Francis Steward, 66th. Such conduct merits the thanks and gratitude of the community.

67th—2 officers and 33 men moved from Kinsale to Skibbereen on 30th ult.

78th depot—A detachment of 1 Capt., 1 Serj., and 30 r. and f., has been ordered for Ceylon, to join the service cos.

81st—depot—Lieut. Hale has been appointed Act. Adjt., and Lieut. Howe, Act. Paymaster.

84th depot—1 comp. moved from Fermoy to Mill-street on 31st ult.

85th—On the 1st, 2nd, and 4th inst. the out-detachments arrived in Cork, preparatory to the formation of the service and depot cos. Ens. Frith and 50 men of the 25th reg. relieve the detachment of 85th in Mallow.

87th—A detachment is ordered to recruit in Limerick.

Eden joins from Ithaca, about the middle of March, where he has been Resident and Commandant for the last 12 months; on his joining Col. O'Malley goes to England on leave. Two officers and 34 men moved from Charles Fort to Duncannoney on 31st ult.

89th—A private named Shrewell was shot at Barbadoes for striking the Adjt.

94th—Lieut. Longworth, late 3rd Buffs, has joined the 94th, having exchanged with Lieut. Whitworth. Lieuts. Stephens and M'Cleverty, and Ens. Maunsell, have also joined from leave.

Rifle Brig., 2nd batt.—Hd.-quarters still at Cephalonia; Capt. Buller and Lieut. Fergusson have left Corfu for England, on leave, and Lieut. Hon. H. Coventry on board the English packet, also on leave.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—Capt. Dunn's company relieved Capt. Jackson's (which arrived lately at head-quarters) at Malta. A brigade of field batteries were exercised on Monday last on Woolwich Common with blank cartridge, &c., preparatory to their being inspected on Tuesday by Col. Cleaveland, H.B., as to their proficiency in that branch of the drill for field service; they have since been "dismissed," as fully qualified, and have been replaced by Capt. Chalmer's company.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.—A company left Woolwich on Friday sen'night for Chatham, to go through the usual course of drill under Col. Pasley; they were replaced by a company from Chatham on Saturday last. Another company is under orders for Halifax, N.A.

The late General Francis Hugoonin was appointed, 30th March, 1768, Cornet 4th Dragoons; Lieut. 30th Aug. 1771; Capt. 22d Dec. 1775; Maj. 27th April, 1787. Lieut.-Col. 24th Feb. 1794; Col. by brevet, 26th Jan. 1797; Maj.-Gen. 25th Sept. 1803, and placed on the staff of the Southern district, where he continued some years; Lieut.-Gen. 25th July, 1810; and General 19th July, 1821. The 9th Nov. 1808, Col. 4th Dragoons.

Sir Freeman Barron has been transferred from the Barrackmastership of St. Lucia to that of Norwich. According to the latest accounts from the West Indies, this gallant officer was severely indisposed, but we trust his health will be soon sufficiently restored to enable him to return to this country. Sir Freeman is an old Peninsular officer.

Sir H. Vivian and his lady are gone to France, where they will pass the recess. Sir Hussey, on his way to the continent, inspected Col. Macleechlan's company R.I. Artillery stationed on the heights, made a tour of the citadel and batteries at Dover, and visited the castle and Ordnance establishment.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir J. Lyon has declined accepting the command of the forces in North America.

Government will not at present fill up the situation of Fort Major of Plymouth garrison, vacant by the melancholy death of Fort Major Watson.

Col. Sir A. d'Este has left town for the continent.

Lieut.-Col. Lacy, R.A., Maj. Campbell, 19th, Capt. Crawley, 74th, and Lieut. Blythe, 1st W. India reg., have arrived by the Arab transport from Barbadoes.

Reports are rife as to Lord Hill's retirement, but we are entirely ignorant whether they are well or ill founded.—Courier. [We believe they are without foundation. The conduct of Lord Hill is as free from political bias as it is possible for any public men to adopt; and we much question whether, with the exception of Sir Hussey Vivian, any of the gallant officers who have been rumoured as successors to the post of Commander in Chief, would be half so popular with the country or the army as his Lordship. ED.]

Capt. John Allen has been installed a Military Knight of Windsor, in the room of Lieut. Hand, deceased.

PORTSMOUTH, April 8.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Adm. Sir P. H. Durnam hoisted his flag (blue at the main) in the Britannia on Tuesday morning. Adm. Sir T. Williams quitted Portsmouth the same day. The Britannia was paid off on Monday, and recommissioned next morning by Capt. Dundas, M.P. On Wednesday a detachment of Marines, under the orders of Capt. Welchman, embarked in her. Bellerophon was commissioned on Thursday by Com. Picking; Capt. Jackson joined the same day. Messenger st. arrived on Thursday with a few new raised men from the eastward, and after completing her coals departed for Milford and Cork, to collect those that the rendezvous officers have entered for the service. Orders arrived on Wednesday for 2 Officers, 2 Serjts., 2 Corps., 2 Bombardiers, and 40 Gunners of the Rl. Marine Artillery, to hold themselves in readiness for immediate embarkation; their destination is supposed to be the N. coast of Spain. Beacon has just arrived; her Commander was compelled to leave at Malta. She is in charge of Lieut. Hope. Three weeks from Gibraltar, but has not any news. Capt. J. N. Taylor, C.B. (1813) is expected to be the next Capt. of the Ordinary at this port. They are making rapid progress in the dockyard with the Inconstant (the frigate building on Capt. Hayes's plan); she will be launched in June. She is a fine ship of the following dimensions—length 160 ft., breadth 44ft. 8 in., 1400 tons burthen. She will be armed with 32 poundars of 65 cwt. on the gun-deck, gunnades of 25 cwt. on the quarter-deck and forecastle, same as the Castor; which ship, we hear, is ordered home to be paid off and recommissioned, and afterwards to join the experimental squadron. It has been generally remarked that the fabric of the Inconstant is uncommonly light for a ship of her tonnage, and intended for such weight of metal, as compared with the Castor, so much so as to induce the Lords of the Admiralty to call for a comparison of the quantity of timber used in the frames of these two ships, the Inconstant being 2 feet wider and 1 foot longer than the Castor, as it is said that owing to the large openings between the frames, and other means evidently adopted to lighten the fabric, and thus reduce her displacement and give more effect to her propelling force (her masts, yards, and sails will be similar to Castor), the quantity of timber in the frame is less by one-fourth, being in proportion of 9 to 12, than in the latter ship. Ships in port—Britannia, Vanguard, Bellerophon, Pembroke, Excellent, Royal George yacht.

MILFORD HAVEN, 6th April.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Skylark revenue cutter, Lieut. Palmer, sailed for Swansea on Monday last to bring round such men as may have entered at that place for the line-of-battle ships fitting at the different ports. The Crocker cutter came down here to-day with 6 inspectors and 60 shipwrights from Pembroke yard to repair the Triumph, lazaretto. There being no beds in store at the dockyard, the workmen are put to considerable inconvenience; nor are they allowed the usual pay for sleeping afloat formerly afforded them on such occasions. This is saving the scrapings with a vengeance. No directions have yet arrived as to the fate of the Gibraltar, 74, used here as a lazarette, but it is supposed she is not in a sufficient state of preservation, judging from the inspection which was last week made of her, to warrant her being repaired, and that she will consequently be taken to pieces on at the dockyard. The reports in circulation palmed upon the inhabitants of Pembroke last week by persons interested respecting the recal of the detachment of the Royal Marines from that neighbourhood, and their being relieved by corps of other descriptions proves to be groundless. The Commanding Officer of the depot gives no sanction to such rumours whatever those under his authority may do on the subject. The Humoaze lighter, Gormully, Master, sailed to-day for Plymouth with 4 seamen and 20 boys, being all that have hitherto volunteered at this haven. The Sovereign, post-office steam-packet arrived here from Holyhead this week for the purpose of supplying the place of the Aladdin, on board which the accident occurred by fire some days since. She is rapidly progressing towards the completion of her repairs, and will then resume her place on this station. It is not definitely known when the establishment will be removed to Hobb's Point, but it is expected two months will be the utmost extent of its remaining here. 7000*l.*, not 700*l.*, as stated in your last number but one, is the sum afforded by government to the turnpike trust for completing the road to that station. A railway is also spoken of from London direct to the station before-mentioned to be continued through the mining and coal districts. In fact, at a meeting in London last week, actual subscriptions were entered into on the spot for accomplishing such a desirable undertaking. This will completely put a stop to all speculation on the subject of another place being selected for the Waterford steam-packets belonging to the post-office. The proprietors of the extensive coal and iron works in Glamorganshire are strenously exerting themselves in the business. The Serjeant's party of Royal Artillery doing duty at Pembroke foot is to remain at that station another three years. Orders to this effect were received by Serjt. Wylde last week.

PLYMOUTH, April 7.—Partridge brig is to be a tender to the Royal Adelaide, and placed under the command of a Lieut. Lavinia and Arethusa frigates, ordered for Liverpool to replace two old lazarettes, are to be docked previous to leaving this port; the former has had a thorough repair since she was built, the latter has never been at sea; she was built at Pembroke a few years since. Tartarus st., Lieut. Jones, arrived here from Falmouth on Thursday, with the relieved troops from Pendennis Castle. Comet st. arrived on Friday from Woolwich; she will proceed to Ireland to wait on the Lord Lieutenant. Devon lighter sailed for Liverpool on Sunday, for volunteer seamen for the ships fitting here. Lightning st. v. arrived from Woolwich on Saturday, and started again on Monday. Camel lighter, about which so much fear was excited for her safety, as expressed by us last week, arrived on Tuesday; it was but three days before the Camel left this port that she was supplied with a new chain cable, to the goodness of which may be attributed the saving of that vessel and the numerous lives on board, amongst whom were several soldiers going to the relief of those at Pendennis Castle. Diligence transport is reloading for Pembroke. Spiller sch., Lieut. O'Reiley, was at Pernambuco on the 20th Feb., and was to sail immediately for Bahia. She had encountered severe weather on her passage out, had sprung her boom and bow-sprit, when crossing the bay, and would require to refit at Rio. In Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, Cornwallis, Talavera, Minden, Star packer, Tartarus st. v., Comet st. v., Diligence naval transport.

A court of inquiry has been sitting at Plymouth on board the flag ship, on Mr. Brickwood, master of the Tartarus st.: the result is not yet promulgated; from what we can learn the charges are not serious enough to induce a Court-Martial.

By letters from H.M.S. Rover, dated Valparaiso, 16th Dec., 1835, we learn that "all's well."

The ships at this port are getting manned but slowly, partly owing to the bad weather recently prevailing and partly owing to a "clean sweep" having been made of all those on the spot who were willing to enter at once, not having any encumbrance other than themselves and traps. But there are many good men who have wives and a child or two, who cannot afford to enter on board a king's ship, because, as our worthy and humane Correspondent last and again this week very justly observes, there was no prospect of allotment being speedily made. We think that some scheme might be devised to remedy this inconvenience to the men by allowing supernumeraries to settle apart of their pay under certain conditions, and without running much risk of the parties getting in debt to the state. The government, in fact, incur a risk, because at present a man entering the service, receives at once two months advance, and of course becomes at once in debt to the government; but there are many good men who have a good set of rigging and properly equipped for service, who may not be induced to enter for general service, because they cannot settle a part of their pay on their families until they are settled in some particular ship. Why not let the men be distinguished numerically, or divisionlly, or alphabetically, and let them allot at once, so that their families might receive something at the end of the first month. We think something of the kind ought to be done without much public risk.—Plymouth Journal.

Lord Henry Russell, son of the Duke of Bedford, who lately passed his examination for lieutenant, has been appointed one of the Admiralty mates of the Vanguard ship of the line.

THE WILLIAM TOMB.—On Sunday evening a report became current that this vessel had been fallen in with by the Cove in the most deplorable circumstances, with only two or three persons left alive. It gained the more ground by being announced from several pulpits. It was stated to have been brought from Leith by the Pegasus. We have made the necessary inquiry, and find it to be a rumour without any foundation, or perhaps arising out of the disaster to the Harmony, mentioned elsewhere.—Hull Observer.

WOOLWICH, April 8.—(From our own Correspondent.)—A short time since, the ornamental anchor over the lamp at the entrance gate was removed, for the purpose of replacing it with a new one, when it was discovered the stock of the old one was made of mahogany, and was unimpaired from the ravages of wind and weather, although exposed for forty years. This affords a strong proof of the durability of this wood under such circumstances. It is now preserved in the office of Lieut. Pearse, the Director of the Naval Police. The Imaum has not arrived off this yard, as has been so frequently reported in the Times and other papers. Moira transport arrived on Tuesday last, and is discharging stores, &c. Pluto, st.-v., Lieut. Duffill, was taken out of the dry dock on Monday last, and hauled into the basin the same day. She was paid off on Wednesday, being found to require extensive repairs. Carron st.-v. Lieut. Dow, left the basin on Saturday, and went down the river to try her engines. She was paid advance on Thursday, and leaves this day for the westward. Her destination is the West Indies, where she will relieve at Barbadoes the Flamer, Lieut. J. M. Potbury, the boilers of which have been surveyed by the proper authorities on the station, and condemned. Swift, brig, Lieut. Welsh, after unrigging her foremast it was raised, and the hool shortened in the step. She is now rigging with all possible dispatch. Salamander and Rhadamanthus are still progressing for commission. Firefly was hauled out of the basin on Tuesday, and put into dry dock. Hind cutter, Lieut. ——, was paid off at Deptford on Saturday last. Fairy surveying sloop, Com. Hewett (b), is still in want of a few hands to complete her complement.

ROYAL MARINES.—Capt. Verlo, Paymaster of the Woolwich division, has resumed his duties from leave of absence. Priv. Evans and Bal her having been apprehended on Kennington Common by a policeman, from their description as deserters, an escort of a Serjeant, Corporal, and six privates were sent to march them down to Woolwich. The Serjeant, however, and the Corp. have been since tried by Court-Martial for drinking with the prisoners, the former has been reduced to the ranks, and the latter only escaped by reason of his having remonstrated with the Serjeant during this breach of military discipline.

The Alonzo transport at Deptford is taken up in lieu of the Hope, and fitting for service; Lieut. Spencer, the former agent, and Master Watch, late Hope, will be the Agent and Commander of the Alonzo.

The Biuetta, 10, was launched on Tuesday at Sheerness, in presence of the Admiralty Board, there officially assembled on a visit of inspection. Capt. Napier (Adm. Cape St. Vincent) is placed in his former position on the Captains list of 1809, above Lord J. Townshend, K.C.H., and Capt. T. Thornish is replaced on same list 1809, next below his Lordship. Capt. Napier, when on the list before, held the out-pension of Greenwich Hospital, and it is thought he may have the one now vacant by the death of Capt. R. Bevan, R.N.

The Prince Regent and Parmelia transports have arrived at Deptford to fit for service, having been docked and examined.

The Numa transport, Lieut. Howe, Agent, will sail immediately from Deptford, and take troops to the Mediterranean; the Lord Lynedoch has sailed this week, to embark convicts for New South Wales.

The Eliza, that took in victualling stores, &c., recently at Deptford for Sierra Leone, has been stranded at Selsey, and her cargo discharged: the Thomas Malden is taken up in lieu, to load at Deptford.

Cmm. John Smyth, R.N., 1804, has succeeded to his family heronetcy.

The Sovereign transport is taking in stores at Woolwich, supposed for Bermuda.

The Fair this week at Greenwich has seldom turned out so complete a failure; the booths were all filled for shelter during the almost continued rain; but the Park and places of amusement and shows suffered serious disappointment and heavy losses; indeed, pleasure seemed almost annihilated.

The Rev. W. M. Rennell to be Chaplain, R.N., and to the Canopus.

By Jamaica papers to the 28th Feb., brought by the Columbia st. to Barbadoes; we find that the Bishop of Jamaica and family had arrived out from this country. Forte frigate Commodore Pell, had gone to Vera Cruz with Mr. Ashburnham and lady, the Secretary of Legation at Mexico, and Col. Ashburnham, Coldstream Guards, on board.

The Pantaloon brig, 10, Lieut. Corry, has proceeded to Cork to raise seamen. The Emerald tender brought up some seamen from Folkstone to Pembroke last week; the Messenger steamer will be employed in collecting seamen from the various Coast Guard stations.

YACHTS.—The next general meeting of the members of the R.Y.S. will be held at the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's-street, London, on Saturday, the 14th of May. Mr. J. L. Gower sailed from Cowes for Malta and the Ionian Islands, in his yacht Menai, last week. Mr. T. L. Lane has sold his Royalist schooner yacht; and Mr. Thocold his Coquette brig yacht.

A letter from Pantorsan mentions a report that five vessels, which had sailed from Granville, foundered during the recent hurricane. A part of the celebrated rock, called Rocher de Cancale, fell down, and the prison of Mont St. Michel suffered considerable damage. A Brest paper states that such was the violence of the tempest there, that a great quantity of fish, conger eels, lobsters, &c., were thrown up and left on the shore.

LIGHT-HOUSES.—From 1st May next three new lights will burn during the whole night in the following points of the Mediterranean:—viz. 1. Cape Bearn, near Port Vendres, department of the Eastern Pyrenees. 2. Fort Brescon, at the mouth of the Herault. 3. Mount St. Loup, near Agde, department of the Herault. The following notices will show the position and character of these lights:—" Light of Cape Bearn; a fixed light. On Mount Bearn, 800 metres south-east of the entrance of Port Vendres, in 42 deg. 30 min. 45 sec. lat., and 0 deg. 17 min. east long. It is 220 metres above the level of the sea, and may be seen in fine weather at the distance of seven sea leagues. Light of Fort Brescon; a small fixed light. On the bastion S.E. of Fort Brescon, one sea league in E.S.E. of the mouth of the Herault, in lat. 43 deg. 15 min. 30 sec., and long. 1 deg. 9 min. 45 sec. E. This light, 18 metres above the level of the sea, may be seen in fine weather at the distance of three sea leagues. Light of Mount St. Loup, near Agde; a revolving light, eclipsed and appearing every minute. On Mount St. Loup, 5,250 metres to the north, 66 deg. 30 min. E. of the mouth of the Herault, in lat. 43 deg. 17 min. 50 sec., and long. 1 deg. 9 min. 45 sec.; 120 metres above the surface of the sea, and visible in fine weather at the distance of nine sea leagues. The Eclipses will appear total only beyond the distance of four sea leagues."—National 4th April.

Extract of a letter from an officer on board the Rover.—" Valparaiso, Dec. 14, 1835. We are just arrived here, after a long tempestuous passage of fifty-nine days from Rio Janeiro. We had twenty days gale of wind during the passage, and it blew harder at times than I ever witnessed, with a mountainous sea going. Having charge of a watch, I had a good opportunity of judging of the Rover's qualities. As far as my judgment goes, she is the finest sea boat I ever was in. She is remarkably stiff, carries her guns very high, and, for a flush decked vessel, she is surprisingly dry. Besides our own four months provisions, we had fifty-five casks of rum, and a large quantity of provisions and stores stowed in the lower deck, with spars, oak plank, &c. on deck, for the use of the ships in the Pacific. In fact, she appeared like a deep loaded merchantman, and drew 14 ft. 6 in. forward, and 15 ft. 7 in. abaft when we left Rio. We have had nothing but a succession of gales, and the wind generally foul, beating to windward under close reefed mainsail, and trysail, and the ship has been so dry under all these circumstances, that scarcely a man has had a wet jacket. We carried our quarter boats with a canoe astern, and have not sustained the least damage in getting round the celebrated Horn in as bad weather as ever ship experienced. I should think such a trial as we have had of her would satisfy the worst of the Surveyor's opponents."

It is reported that if the Hon. Capt. Fauvene obtained his flag that Capt. W. Walpole will be Captain of that ship.

AGRA.—The admission of Messrs. Elliott and Sutherland to the Civil Fund, however objectionable, has at least led to the present state of the society being made manifest, and prevented its insolvency from being suddenly discovered. The sum required to enable the Fund to fulfil its present engagements, is stated by Mr. Currin to be 180,000*l.* If this is correct, it is clear that the supplies of the Fund must be increased to equal the demands, or the demands limited to the supplies; the above enormous sum must be raised or the nature of the engagements altered, or by a partial resort to both. This last is recommended in the propositions passed at the Bearers meeting, and will be brought before the general meeting at Calcutta on 14th Nov., and is evidently most consonant to the state of things.—Agra Ukhbar, Oct. 24.

At the meeting of the members of the Civil Fund, which took place Nov. 14th, the following propositions (amongst other suggestions) were referred to a committee, appointed for the purpose, viz., "That each married subscriber or widower having children, immediately contribute to the Fund double his present subscription; that each bachelor on his marriage contribute to the Fund in the above proportion; that married subscribers and widowers on having realised a sufficient fortune to render them independent of the Fund, be allowed the option of reverting to the original scale of contributions. Those subscribers who are independent of the Fund at present to continue their subscription as heretofore." The committee to consist of sixteen members (subscribers) resident in Calcutta, one to be elected by the subscribers resident in each division of revenue and circuit, and two to be elected by those in Calcutta.

The Bombay Gazette contains an order dated 7th Nov. 1835, of importance to the medical service. The attention of government has been drawn to the necessity of medical officers being conversant with the colloquial knowledge of Hindoostanee, Mahratta, or Guzeratee languages; and that in future no officer will be permanently appointed to the medical charge of a native regiment, civil station, or residency, without having passed an examination in one of those languages.

The celebrated Jungypore indigo concern was brought to the hammer at Messrs. Moore, Hickey, and Co., on 20th Nov., by order of the assignees of Crotteuden, Mackillop, and Co., and bid up to 370,000 sicca rupees, at which price it was bought in.

An inquiry has been instituted by government into the state of jails in this country. It is a question of great importance, involving the condition of about 27,000 prisoners in the Bengal and Agra presidencies alone.

During the night of 19th Oct., it being very tempestuous, an attempt was made to break into the Treasury at Calcutta, and some shots were fired by the sipahis of the guard, but the thieves made off, and none of them have as yet been apprehended.

COURT-MARTIAL.

BREVET CAPTAIN MULLER, 6TH FOOT.

AT a General Court-Martial assembled at Deesa, 2. Aug., 1835, of which Major R. Sutherland, 13 N. was President, Lieut. and Brev. Capt. Fred. Muller, 6 Foot, was brought to trial on the following charge, p. ferred against him by order of the Com.-in-Chief, "F disobedience of the General Order by the Com.-. Chief, dated 15th May, 1835, in neglecting, while. duty as orderly officer, to attend and satisfy himself th. a private, named James Malone, was drunk when co. fined in the quarter guard of H.M. 6th regt. at Dee. and by such neglect incapacitating himself for appeari. as a witness on the prosecution at the trial of the abov. mentioned soldier." Upon which charge the Court ca. to the following decision:—"That having fully co. sidered all the proceedings and the observations contai. in the letter from the Military Secretary to the Com.-. Chief, which has been laid before them, are of opini. that the prisoner is guilty of disobedience of the Gene. Order of the Com.-in-Chief to the extent of not havi. personally inspected the prisoner, Private James Malo. and thereby incapacitating himself from appearing a. witness on the prosecution, but they acquit him of th. portion of the charge in which he is accused of neglecti. to attend at the quarter guard of H.M. 6th Foot. T. Court having also maturely weighed the remarks co. tained in the letter from the Military Secretary to t. Com.-in-Chief on their former sentence, respectfully b. to adhere to the same, viz.—they do not consider any c. pability in the conduct of the prisoner deserving furth. punishment than he has already undergone in having be. twice reprimanded in a very severe and public manner."

The Commander-in-Chief, in disapproving of the sentence, made the following remarks:—that the Co. having found the prisoner guilty of disobedience of th. particular General Order, an adequate punishment ou. to have been awarded; that it has assumed to itself power which belonged to the confirming authority alo. for whatever might be their opinion as to the moti. which actuated the prisoner, such punishment should awarded as was commensurate with the degree of culp. bility proved. The Comm.-in-Chief likewise expres. his dissatisfaction at the course of proceeding pursued Major Algeo, commanding the 6th regt. of Foot, appears that Major Algeo took no notice of the condu. of Capt. Muller until the circumstance was commen. upon by Brig. Gen. Salter.

Lieut. and Brev. Copt. Muller will be released from est, and return to his duty.

ENERAL THE EARL or CATHCART, K.T.

N June, 1777, Lord Cathcart received an Ensigncy in 7th Dragoons, and obtained the King's leave to serve America with the 16th Light Dragoons. He proded thither as extra A. D. C. to Maj.-Gen. Sir T. S. lson. He served as extra A.D.C to Sir H. Clinton, was present at the storming of Forts Montgomery Clinton, 6th Oct., 1777. In Nov., 1777, he received ieutenancy in the 17th Dragoons, with which regt. he ved at the advanced posts of the army at Philadelphia other positions. In Dec. he obtained a troop, and tinued to serve with his regt. till June, 1778; he was nked in general orders for surprising a part of the my on the Skuylkill, advanced from Valley Dirge. June he was appointed A.D.C. to the Com.-in-Chief, present at the battle of Monmouth Court House. was appointed Col., with provincial rank, of the itish Legion, which corps he raised, formed, and ocionally commanded at the out-posts. The 13th Apr. 9, he obtained the Majority of the 38th Foot. About dsummer of the latter year he was appointed to serve Quartermast.-Gen. to the Forces in North America il the arrival from England of Gen. Dalrymple. The h Dec., 1779, he sailed for Savannah, and was at the estment and siege of Charlestown, N. Carolina, but iged to leave the latter in April, 1780, on account of climate, and return to New York. Being ordered to ke his election between his commission in the army in the provincials, he resigned the British Legion, joined the 38th on Long Island; he commanded t reg. in the affairs of Springfield and Elizabeth Town int, June, 1780; in October he returned to England. Feb., 1781, he obtained a company in the Coldstream ards, with the rank of Lieut.-Col., and in Oct., 0, exchanged for the Lieut.-Colonelcy of the 29th. Nov., 1790, he received the brevet of Col.; in Dec., 2, the Colonelcy of the 29th. From Nov., 1793, to v., 1794, he served as Brig.-Gen. to the Forces under rd Moira, was in the expedition to Normandy and Flanders in 1793, and in the expedition to Flanders to eve Ostend and join the Duke of York's army in 4. The 3rd Oct., 1794, he received the rank of j.-Gen., and in Nov. joined the Duke of York's army Arntheim, and served the remainder of that campaign. rd C. was next entrusted with the command of various gades of cavalry, and placed on the staff in Great itain. In 1797 he was appointed Col. of the 2nd Life ards. The 1st Jan., 1801, obtained the rank of ut.-Gen., and in 1802 held the command of the Home trict. He was subsequently, as Lieut.-Gen., appointed m. of the Forces in Ireland, in the North of Germany, North Britain, in the North of Europe, and again in rth Britain. In the autumn of 1805 Lord C. was dered to Russia as Ambassador, and his appointment s framed in a military form. On reaching London, vious to his departure, he had much intercourse with Pitt, but after several arrangements, he was finally t to take the command of the British army in Hanover. acquired an entire ascendancy over the senate of emen, and obtained all that was necessary to the estabhment of his head-quarters in that city. The Russian ny was at this period combined with the British, and rd C. succeeded in conciliating General Beningsen all his officers. The battle of Austerlitz changed the ect of affairs, and that event was soon followed by the th of Mr. Pitt. The new administration, formed on latter event, determined to recal the army. Lord theart stated fifteen days as the period required for barkation, and though it generally happens that such culations are exceeded, in this case Lord C., the last n, embarked on the thirteenth day. His Lordship's xt appointment was Com. of the Forces in Scotland, d he remained in that situation till May, 1807, when was sent for by the Duke of Portland's administration be again employed on foreign service. His first mission was to the King of Sweden; afterwards his Lord- [illegible] to join Lord Gambier, and proceed [illegible]. The 18th June, 1814, he was created an glish Earl.

His Lordship is reported to have died on the 1st inst. Scotland, but letters have been received at the agents l by members of the United Service Club to the 5th, which date the gallant veteran, who is in his 82nd r, we are happy to add was alive, though he has been some time seriously ill.

Literary Notices.

Random Recollections of the House of Lords. By the Author of "Random Recollections of the House of Commons." Smith, Elder, and Co.

THE "almost unprecedented success," we are told, of his former publication, has induced the author to lay the present volume before the public. We much question the writer's competency to pass correct judgment on the characters and talents of the several Peers who are ushered forth in this publication; but, making great allowances for his decidedly party spirit, he has furnished us some characteristic and amusing sketches: at the same time we must acknowledge that the work is by no means equal to the "Recollections of the House of Commons." We shall give his opinions of a few Military Peers:—

"The Duke of Cumberland is no speaker. I use the word in an emphatic sense; for he has no voice, in the ordinary acceptation of the term. He emits certain sounds, it is true, but they are altogether unlike the ordinary tones of the human voice. The words which proceed from his mouth have a sort of yelping or growling sound, and are generally so imperfectly pronounced, or in so low a tone, as to render it an altogether hopeless task for any one not immediately beside him to perceive what he is saying, however great may be the attention paid to him. Whether in not this singularly imperfect enunciation be the effect of any physical cause, is a question on which I am unable to express an opinion. He speaks seldom, and generally not more than about half a dozen sentences at a time. The longest speech I ever heard him deliver—if the few sentences uttered in so short a period should be dignified by the name of speech—did not occupy more than five minutes in the delivery. When addressing the House, his manner is most mild and conciliatory. No one, who did not know him, would ever suppose, from his manner, that he could be so ultra in his Toryism, or so zealously attached to his opinions. He stands quite motionless: there is no emphasis in his voice, nor the slightest appearance of warmth about him. He looks a perfect model of political moderation. He never, or at least but seldom, and even then only under very peculiar circumstances, applies a harsh or offensive epithet to his opponents. There is no man in the House who causes but a fiftieth part of the annoyance that Lord Brougham does, and yet he will allude, from time to time, with the greatest apparent good nature, to certain observations of the learned Lord. Nay, in a day or two after Lord Brougham, in one of his furious attacks on him, had called him 'the Illustrious by courtesy,' I saw his Royal Highness lean across the table and converse for some time with his Lordship with as much apparent kindness and cordiality of feeling as if nothing had happened. What are the real feelings with which he regards Lord Brougham are well known to his Royal Highness's friends. He is an excellent politician, however, in so far as external conduct is concerned; it suits his purpose to appear to feel as little as possible under the attacks of his opponents; and he sustains the assumed indifference admirably well."

"The Duke of Wellington.—His general information is neither varied nor profound; but he very seldom commits blunders in his speeches. He always pays particular attention to any question of importance before the House before he ventures to open his mouth on it. And there are few men who can so speedily master the leading details of any question. His mind is acute, and his understanding vigorous; so that, in as far as the mere matter of his speeches is concerned, he generally appears to some advantage. He often strikes out new courses of thought, but seldom pursues them far. It is nothing uncommon to hear him urge a series of ingenious arguments in favour of his view of the subject, without what is called dwelling on them. He is always clear: you can never mistake the position he labours to establish, nor can you ever fail to perceive the immediate bearing of his observations on that position. Were his diction and manner good, the noble Duke would rank high as a speaker, but both are bad. His style is rough and disjointed—sometimes positively incorrect: it is always, however, nervous and expressive. His manner of speaking is much worse than his diction. He has a bad screeching sort of voice, aggravated by an awkward mode of mouthing the words. His enunciation is so bad, owing in some measure to the loss of several of his teeth, that often, when at the full stretch of his voice, you do not know what particular words he is using. At other times, and this too while his gesture is vehement, he speaks in so low and peculiar a sort of tone, that you lose, perhaps, whole sentences together. The Duke feels strongly on political questions, and there is always great energy in his manner when expressing his sentiments. He generally makes a liberal use of his arms, especially his right one, when on his legs, and moves his body about for the purpose of enabling him to look his own friends, in different parts of the House, in the face. In his more vehement moods, he frequently falls into what, in parliamentary language, is called the habit of expectoration. His whole soul is thrown into his subject. You see at once that he has no ambition to play the orator. He never uses a word more than is necessary, nor does he attempt rhetorical flourishes. His speeches are full of feeling and sentiment. You are only surprised when you see the intensity of the former, if in opposition to any measure before their Lordships,—that he does not divide the House on the subject."

"The Marquis of Londonderry.—When he rises to address the House on any question of delicacy and importance, it is no uncommon thing to see the more cautious and prudent of his party look each other significantly in the face, as if fearing some calamity is about to befal their cause. And during the time he is on his legs, they listen with the most anxious attention to every word which falls from his lips; thankful, on the one hand, when he makes no serious slips, but always labouring, on the other, under the most painful apprehension of something awkward and injurious to their cause coming from him in the next sentence. His style is in keeping with his ideas. It is ragged and disjointed. He was never yet known to stumble on a tolerably turned period. And as for his elocution, it is still worse, if that be possible, than either. His voice is the harshest and most croaking I ever heard; it sounds as if it were literally forced out of his mouth by some powerful compression of his acoustical organs. Whether it be painful for the noble Marquis himself to speak, I cannot say; I incline to the opinion it must: of this I am certain, it is very unpleasant to every body else to hear him. His utterance is rather slow; he stammers occasionally, but not much. He never makes long speeches, but he addresses the House on almost every subject. His favourite theme is the affairs of the Peninsula. He allows no opportunity to slip of holding up Don Miguel, Don Carlos, and all the other Dons of despotism, as paragons of every thing that is amiable and virtuous; and their Governments, as the mildest and best under heaven. As he is not to be reasoned out of his propensity for speech-making by his friends, so neither will he be sneered or ridiculed out of it by his enemies. Many a bitter taunt does he get from the Liberals, and many a term of ridicule is applied by them to him, because of his foolish speeches about the "affairs of the Peninsula," but all without effect. He neither heeds their sneers nor their sarcasms. He is perfectly impermeable to anything and everything of the kind. Even Lord Brougham, who is a terror to every body else, when he is expected to scatter his bitter sneers and withering invectives about him, is armed with no terror to him. He is quite impervious to anything the noble Lord can say. In fact, he has been so long accustomed to this sort of treatment, that it were surprising if it had any effect upon him. In the gesture of the noble Marquis, there is little on which to remark. It is not extravagant, though his seeming zeal for his principles and his party would naturally lead one to infer that it is so. He moves his right arm slightly, and occasionally his body, so as that he may get a glimpse of his friends immediately around him; but this is the utmost extent of his action. He almost invariably causes great annoyance to those of his own friends who address their Lordships from that part of the House in which he sits. Whenever one of them rises, or is expected to rise to speak, from that part of the House, he removes from the first bench to one of the seats or rather "sacks" immediately before the Woolsack; when, laying his chin or the side of his head in his right hand, he stares at them with an intensity and uninterroptedness of gaze, from the beginning to the end of their oration, which were enough to disconcert any man not possessed of unusually strong nerves. The only redeeming circumstance in this part of the noble Marquis's conduct is, that he greets them with a pretty frequent cheer, which always has the merit of being a most hearty one."

The Marquis of Anglesey.—Of late years the noble Marquis has not spoken much; formerly he used to speak with some frequency, and was allowed on all hands to acquit himself very creditably. He possesses considerable talents. His judgment generally is sound, and his perceptions are usually quick and clear. He can state his views on any public question in a very respectable manner; formerly he would have done so with effect. His voice is still excellent; it is at once full, deep, and pleasant. His elocution, however, is occasionally impaired by an undue vehemence of manner when he chances to speak on a subject on which he feels very strongly. On such occasions he "mouths" many of his words. His gesture is also, in such a case, disagreeably redundant; instead of adding to, it takes away from the effect which his observations or arguments would otherwise produce. He has not for some years past been very regular in his attendance on his parliamentary duties; not certainly from any abatement of zeal for his principles or his party, but from the growing infirmities of age, in conjunction with the pain and inconvenience caused by the particular malady to which, as I have already stated, he is subject. He is deeply venerated by all parties for the services he has rendered his country in the field of battle—of which his wooden leg is a never-failing remembrancer. He is a nobleman of some pretensions to scholership, though I do not know of any public proof he has given of his acquirements in this way. Lord Brougham, I believe, was the first to apprise the world of the noble Marquis's scholastic attainments, when he mentioned, in the Session of 1834, that they were in the habit of occasionally corresponding together on learned questions especially on philological ones, whenever their official duties admitted of the recreation."

"The Duke of Richmond is a man of considerable weight in the House, not from any superiority of talent or dexterity as a debater, but from his being the representative of one of the most respectable and ancient families in England, joined to an excellent private character. His intellectual powers are not above mediocrity. He never makes a speech in which there are any traces of superior ability. His mind wants vigour and originality; he never strikes out a new course of argument for himself when discussing any question. His arguments are always those which lie on the surface, and they are so obvious that no man not wilfully idiot could fail to perceive them. His language is in accordance with his ideas. It certainly cannot be said to be inaccurate, but it wants polish, and is defective in power. He never, by accident, stumbles on an eloquent or energetic passage. He has, however, the merit of being always clear in every thing he says. You never can mistake the position he wishes to establish, nor can you entertain a moment's doubt as to the nature of the arguments by which he endeavours to establish those positions. A school-boy of the most ordinary comprehension could, with the greatest ease, follow him from the commencement to the close of his longest speeches. If he never says anything brilliant, neither does he, on the other hand, say anything absolutely silly or stupid. His speeches have always the commodity of common sense to recommend them. He speaks often, but seldom long at a time. He never has anything in the shape of exordium or peroration in his most lengthened addresses. He rushes into the midst of his subject the moment he opens his mouth, and the probability is that you will find the last sentence he utters the best argument he has used in the course of his speech. When I say the last sentence, I of course exclude that expression of thanks for the attention with which the House has been pleased to listen to him,—with which almost all the fourth and fifth rate class of speakers usually conclude their speeches. His Grace is not wordy, though his ideas are not of a high order of merit, there is a goodly number of them in all his speeches. There are few men in the House who will condense a greater number of ideas and arguments into more limited space. He is always listened to with attention, and considerable importance is attached by the majority of Peers to what he says."

Narrative of a Captivity in France from 1809 to 1814. By Richard Langton. 2 vols. Smith, Elder, and Co.

A VERY interesting narrative of personal adventures, with many anecdotes of our countrymen when in captivity in France, their sufferings as well as their amusements. Had the work been published some years ago, its success would have been certain; but, even at this date, there are many to whom the scenes described must be full of interest. The volumes are embellished with several very neat engravings.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

CAPTAIN SAMUEL JACKSON, R.N., C.B.

SIR,—Although exceedingly reluctant to obtrude my name on the public, especially after the complete contradiction given by my esteemed friend Dr. Outram to an erroneous statement in your Gazette, yet in justice to myself I feel it incumbent upon me to give this full confirmation to the truth of that gentleman's letter, which was, however, written without my knowledge, and even before I was aware of the previous paragraph occasioning it. I trust also I may be excused for declaring, upon my honour, that I never served in a capacity inferior to that of Midshipman, having received that rating when I first entered the Naval Service, in the year 1790, with my friend Lieut. H. Mitchell, then commanding H. M. cutter Kite (46 years ago, alas!) My subsequent service, I presume, it is unnecessary to trouble you by stating, and I remain very respectfully yours

H.M.S. Bellerophon, SAM. JACKSON.
April 7th, 1836.

[We give publicity to this letter, as we did last week to Dr. Outram's, with much pleasure; but if what was inadvertently stated had been true, we do not think Capt. Jackson's services, and high professional, as well as private, character, would be less estimated by his country.—ED.]

COMMANDER CURRIE AND THE SURVEYOR OF THE NAVY.

SIR,—Having read in your very praiseworthy publication, the Naval and Military Gazette of the 2nd inst., a remark of yours as to the probability that Com. Carrie may be prejudiced against the system of ship-building practised by the present Surveyor of the Navy, in consequence of his having been First Lieut. on board the President with Sir G. Cockburn, and, therefore, that he may appear to you as a follower of Sir George's, I beg to state that Com. Currie was appointed my First Lieutenant on board Sparrowhawk (from my application for him) in April 1829. Arriving on the West India station, his character as a seaman and most efficient officer, soon became generally appreciated through the squadron there, and my having had the honour of hoisting the flag of Adm. E. G. Colpoys on board the ship under my command, gave me an opportunity of mentioning the name of Com. Currie, and describing his merit, during the frequent intercourse I had with the Admiral; thus his abilities soon became inquired into, and Adm. Colpoys never lost sight of him. You, Sir, are quite aware how he was handled about from ship to ship, but the Admiral was so pleased with his general conduct, that he would not suffer him to quit the station, and, although a young officer, Sir E. Colpoys strained every nerve to promote him, but the Admiral's death left him a Lieutenant in the hands of Sir G. Cockburn. I believe Com. Currie was then a perfect stranger to him. However reports of his merit, soon bringing him in contact with Sir George, his promotion, which followed, speaks more on his behalf than any words of praise that I may express can do. This is written merely to show to you that Com. Currie was no follower of Sir George's. My opinion of him is, that he is a seaman in every sense of the word, placed either in the hold or maintop. His ship is his wife; his whole heart and soul is in her, by endeavouring to make her what she ought to be, a perfect man-of-war, and that whether built by this man or that, Currie, I am confident, will strive to make the most of her; and should Capt. Symonds get the command of Vanguard in the event you speak of, Currie is the man who would suit him to a "tittle." He is indefatigable in laboriousness, superintending and directing the most minute equipment, either in the hold with lever in hand, or upon deck with marlinespike. Feeling that this statement is due to Com. Currie, I cannot withhold it from your knowledge.

THOS. GILL.

[In our comment we did full justice to Com. Currie's professional reputation.—ED.]

TRISTRAM'S REMARKS UPON THE DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZE-MONEY IN THE FLEET.

"But the best joke of all, the joke most expressing, was, in the letters of A. C. in your late Gazettes, arguing that the Field Officers of Marines, when embarked as part complement of our ships of war, have a RIGHT to share with the Captains of the Fleet. I let him run his cable of argument out to the clinch before I intended to bring him up with a round turn all standing; but you, my good fellow, Mr. Editor, managed him to a T., and convinced him, by fair reason, that "he could not expect to share with Sea Captains or other Commanding Officers of his Majesty's ships and vessels for the captures of smugglers, slavers, and pirates, as those officers often incurred great risk of expenses (some have been cast in heavy damages) in the detention of those vessels, which were frequently liberated from informalities only in the prosecution of them in the law courts at home and abroad; but that you had no doubt, in case of war (mark I am quoting from a very treacherous memory) that the Field Officers (whether of Horse or Foot Marines, if formed into battalions, and not borne as part complements of ships of war, or as supernumeraries for wages and victuals) in taking forts, batteries, redoubts, martello towers, citadels, towns, or cities, would share in the booty with the Sea Captains, who first in their ships demolished all the said fortifications abreast, smack smooth by the board, before the mounted, booted, and spurred Marine FIELD Officers, the flying Horse Marine Artillery, and the Foot Marines, were landed."

He then admitted the justness of your remarks, and submitted that, "although they could not, under the circumstances so fairly particularised in your Gazette, share with the Sea Captains for smugglers, slavers, and pirates captured; yet he thought the Field Officers of Marines ought to participate with them in all other captures, of any description, made by the Fleet." Now there are no other captures made in peace; A. C. should therefore have remained silent until war was declared before he saddled his Pegasus to ride over the legitimate rights of the sea-officers, for the Admiralty have taken A. C. at his word in this present proclamation, viz.—"Sea Lieutenants, Field Officers, and Captains of Marines or land forces, Master and Physician of the Fleet, and Masters, ten shares each." What a precious hand Marine officers make in hauling on board fore and main tacks of argufication!!! A. C. pray excuse Tristram in the indulgence of—

"For me, born by nature
For humour and satire,
I slog, and I kiss, and I quaff,
Each muscle I twist it,
I cannot resist it,
These Hon-ee-vans will make me laugh."

Save and except the great reduction of the Commanding Officers' proportion of the capture, and Commanders doing duty as First Lieuts., taking a third from their Captains, this distribution is the fairest for distributing prize-money I have ever seen promulgated—the shares by EIGHTHS for the junior and inferior officers were most unfair in many instances. On one occasion, when a Mid, I shared but 6*d.* less than the Warrant Officers; and the prize-money advertised for payment in the Navy List has shown that the Lieutenants of the Ramillies received for captures of smugglers but 19 each, and the Captain (M'Culloch) 1900*l.*!!! I rejoice to see the Pilots withdrawn from the Warrant Officers' class, as slaves, if on board as Pilots, have cleared with Secretaries, Chaplains, &c. The Mates and Gunners, Boatswains and Carpenters, resuming their proper places in prize-list, must give universal satisfaction. The exclusion of the Assist.-Surgeons from the Surgeon's share, to which they had no right, must be just and fair; and the introduction of the First Engineers among the Ward-room Warrant Officers' shares, must tend to elevate them to rank in the service, and to gain respect and authority in the opinion of the ship's company. This class is thus compneed for participation in prize rewards, viz.—Subaltern of Marines or land forces, Secretaries, Chaplains, Surgeons, Pursers, Mates, Second Masters, First Engineers, Gunners, Boatswains, and Carpenters, 6 shares each. The whole of the scale is based upon equity and justice (if the Captain's pay be increased), each class sharing under its immediate superior thus—Lieut., Mate, Mid—Captains, Substitute-Master, Second Do., Assist. Do.—Physician, Surgeon, Assist. Surgeon—Purser, Clerk. In more reasons than one I am heartily glad to see the Assist.-Surgeons classed with the Midshipmen for sharing prize-money, because there can be now no intention at the Admiralty to destroy the assistant constitution of a man-of-war, which you, my good fellow Mr. Editor, the Old Sailor, and others of your correspondents, so zealously argufied; but Tristram, in No. 10, maintained that it ought to be kept unimpaired, and that the Assist.-Surgeon were removed from the House of Commons to the House of Lords, before he, by promotion, was elevated to the peerage, it would effectually impair that most perfect constitution, so essential to the good government of Britannia's floating kingdom—the British Fleet. For more than a century the members of the different messes in our ships of war, have remained stationery, until promoted, and any deviation from an established custom would be dangerous to Naval order and discipline. The Medical Officers, although the best paid, and the best off in every respect in the Fleet, are the most dissatisfied. What out-and-out capers they have cut within these last six years, relative to their uniform—going to Court—massing*—and participating where they have no right:—

Such capers—such paces!
So many wry faces!
Are far too funny by half;
They set every muscle
In a content bustle,
And tickle me into a laugh——

I must, however, confess I should have been more pleased this proclamation made a distinction between the quarter-deck and forecastle, and the Midshipman's class been as proportionately near to the Warrant Officers' class as that is to the Sea Lieutenants, for if the Assist.-Surgeons, Mids, Masters' Assistants, Schoolmasters, Junior Engineers, Pilots, and Clerks, had been apportioned three and a half shares, and the Petty Officers, Master-at-Arms, Quartermaster, Caulker, Carpenters' Mates, &c. three shares as at present, it would create greater respect to the Quarter-deck Officers, whilst it would give more satisfaction to those gentlemen's feelings to know that, in the distribution of prize-money, as well as in their relative rank and station in the service, there is a great distinction between—that they are far above, and quite different in every sense from a Surgeon of Marines, a Boatswain's Mate, a Caulker, or an Armourer—the lancet, the sword, the sextant, and the pen, should not be "hail-fellow-well-met" with the holbert, marlinspike, caulking-mallet, or blacksmith's-hammer. In all disputed cases of prize rewards, I hope my brother sailors employ a Proctor will not forget—

"What a damned clever fellow that said Pointer is!!!"

UNITED SERVICE MUSEUM.

SIR,—The shuffling and suspicious answer given to your correspondent X. by a writer under the signature of Tobit (whether this means Tobit or his dog we cannot say) induced me to look over some of the former abstracts of the accounts of the Institution, and in that for the year ending December 1834, I find the following item, viz.

"Paid Artists' Bill for stuffing Birds, setting up ditto, cases, stands, &c. . . £114 16

It appears, therefore, although X. was in error as to the exact amount, there was a considerable sum paid for the stuffing of birds in that year. But what shall we say to the ominous Mr. Toby, who denies that any charge for stuffed birds appears in the accounts for that year? And with respect to the principal charge against the Council made by your correspondent, namely, that of endeavouring to make a most ingenious distinction between the annual and the subscribers to the Institution, and which, by forcing an accumulation of life subscriptions, would enable the Council to set at defiance the whole body of subscribers, Mr. Toby—ass, instead of replying, asks, with the importinence natural to a dog in office, "Why these objections were not brought at the last general meeting?" The answer is ad clear, because, strange to say, both the Director, and is brother the Treasurer, were (by the merest accident of ourse) absent from the meeting.

* Vide Tristram's letter in No. 68, against Surgeons passing with Lieutenant-Commanders.

† Vide Thetis Salvage case, Nos. 111, 113, 119, and 119.

It is time, Mr. Editor, that some of the secrets of this rison-house be exposed; and this, Sir, with your powerful id we will endeavour to accomplish, having no doubt much enefit to the Institution would be the result.

The rent from which all mismanagement and corruptions roceed in such institutions, is in the irresponsible character ith which the Committee of Direction generally endeavour o invest themselves. We accordingly find the self-elective Council of the United Service Museum has produced its concomitant fruits of mystery and mismanagement—a seat at the Board being confined to a select circle of friends. t has been wittily observed that a board is a screen, under he cover of which, individual responsibility is shuffled from one to another, and (unhappily it is but too apparent) acts done in a collective capacity, from which individuals would shrink in abhorrence! As the first fruits of this blessed system, we find the Institution rejoicing in the possession of a very weighty functionary, called a Director, or Dictator, or some such fine name, who has contrived by some means or other, behind the screen, to become not only perpetual Director, but a permanent member of the Council, and has, moreover, kindly secured to the Institution the beneficial services of two of his relatives (brothers, I believe), one as Treasurer, the other as Solicitor (nothing like fortifying our position)! But shortly afterwards we find the Director again favoured by circumstances. It was long considered that the office of Secretary would be rather difficult to manage, and therefore, by the merest accident, of course, the two gentlemen who had previously filled that situation, were induced to resign in consequence of not being able to agree with the Director. Well, Sir, what course was thereupon pursued by our "elegant extracts." It was one quite in character, and I beg your attention, Sir, and that of your readers, to as pretty a piece of jesuitism on the part of our hopeful Council, as one would desire to see upon a summer's day.

It being necessary (that is to say convenient) that the office of Secretary should be abolished, it was judged inexpedient to do so in the regular manner, that is, by calling a general meeting, and submitting the proposition to them—that would have been the correct way of proceeding; but finding such a course might be productive of a slight degree of inconvenient discussion, the Council, in a most praiseworthy and disinterested manner, relieved the body of the members from the necessity of doing a disagreeable act, by doing it themselves, and for which they deserve the greater thanks, as by so doing (in order to oblige the members) they most grossly committed themselves, in violating the 3rd section of the laws, in which the office of Secretary is established, and in contravening the provisions of the 8th section of the laws, in which is provided that the regulations of the Council "shall be consistent with the fundamental laws of the Institution." Having thus laudably, on their own authority, abolished the office of Secretary, it was determined to establish in its room a Clerk or Curator, and accordingly an advertisement was put forth in the public papers for a person to fill the above office, but under the control of the Director. Now there were two deep strokes of policy (quite impenetrable) concealed under that simple advertisement; the first was to prevent any member of the Institution from offering himself as a candidate, whose rank or importance would render a refusal inconvenient, but whose appointment would be much more so; the second was to give a colour of impartiality to their proceedings, while they had a man of their own all this time snugly behind the screen (a young person who had for some time filled the situation of schoolmaster on board some of the King's ships), while the supposed competitor was all a farce; but no sooner had the said Clerk taken possession of the seals, than (mark the trick!) lo! he was transformed into an Assistant Director (save the mark!) The appointments which had been occupied previously by the great Director, were transferred to the little Director; and finally his salary was increased 10*l*. beyond that which was given to a Captain in the Army, who had filled the office of Secretary. It would no doubt, Sir, be extremely edifying to the members of the Institution to be informed of the nature of those eminent services which induced the Board to confer all these favours upon a person not twelve months in the establishment; but until such be afforded, we cannot help considering the whole transaction very much in the light of that which visionary and absurd persons call a scandalous job! and an endeavour upon the part of the Council to smuggle into the Institution a person who could have no claim upon the service, nor any right to hold such a situation.

But, Sir, there are other and stronger objections to the Council being allowed to nominate any person discharging the functions of Secretary, or to any one holding that situation but a member of the Institution and an officer in H.M.'s service. In the first place, Sir, he is one of the signing officers for the drawing of money, and is therefore supposed to exercise a discretion in doing such an act, under a feeling of responsibility to the Institution, to the Service, and society. But allow me to ask what discretion would such a person dare to exercise who had been appointed and thus favoured by the Council? None whatever, manifestly. but would consider himself as the creature of that body, and their tool, if required; for such a person having no sympathy with the great body of the members, would naturally look for support to those who had appointed him and could dismiss him. Further, Sir, in the 8th section of the laws, it is stated that five members of the Council shall constitute a quorum. So here we have the Director, his brother the Treasurer, and the nondescript animal, yclept Curator, or small Director, constituting at once a majority of said quorum!!! If that be not as pretty a plot for the seeds of corruption to germinate in, there are no snakes in Virginia.

There is another root of a very blooming appearance, which has been slyly planted in this "neglected soil," and under the judicious cover of the screen, promises to put forth much fruit. I mean, Mr. Editor, the practice which has obtained of the Council nominating Auditors to comptrol their own accounts. Auditors are supposed to be deputed by the members of the Institution to examine the accounts of those persons to whom they have entrusted the management of their funds; and therefore, if the Council possessed the slightest feeling of delicacy, they would not interfere in such an appointment directly or indirectly. It is also the practice to nominate a considerable number of persons as Auditors, two or three of whom only are supposed, I may say expected, to pay any attention to the subject, while their doings or misdoings are to be passed off under the high-sounding names that are placed at the head of the list, and accordingly we find but two names, out of ten or twelve, signed as having audited the accounts.

Mr. Editor, it would be vain to say that all this (and it is but a small part) does not carry with it an air of suspicion, and more than suspicion. If, Sir, the Director and Council of the United Service Museum intended really to act in an upright and correct manner, why, I would ask, do they thus seek to surround themselves with the machinery of corruption, rendering their motives suspected, and their conduct contemptible?

We will here pause for a while: much remains yet to be said. We are told that the society is in its infancy, and therefore perfection cannot be expected from it. Youth, Sir, is the proper season in which to eradicate bad habits and propensities, nor ought we to delay their correction until they shall be strengthened by adolescence and confirmed by maturity.

London, 5th April, 1836. X. X.

[This letter well deserves attention from the subscribers to the institution. We have this week received a note, signed "Henry Downes," requesting us to have the kindness to continue our valuable aid, by bringing before the public, as often as we can afford space, the rapid progress which this institution is making." Now, as we have never found reason to give the slightest credit to the management of the U. S. Museum, and are unacquainted with the writer, the said note is to us somewhat recherché. However, for the present the letter of X. X. is sufficient. The subscribers must get rid both of the Director and his Curator, as well as remodel the Council.—Ed.]

NEW SHIP MEASUREMENT ACT.

Sir,—As your correspondents H. and N. appear to entertain erroneous views of the intentions of the committee appointed by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, to consider the measurement of tonnage, I trust they will allow me to call their attention to the following extracts from the report made to their Lordships, in the year 1834, by the Committee:—

"The most important question for the deliberation of the committee was, whether the register tonnage should represent the difference of displacement at the load and light water-lines, or whether it should be an expression of the whole internal capacity, including all those parts of a vessel which, being under cover of permanent decks, are available for stowage. The committee are of opinion, that besides the difficulty of defining the limits of displacement by any geometrical rule, the capacity will be the fairest standard of measurement, as well for the interests of the builder and owner as for the collection of those dues which are levied upon tonnage; and the committee are further of opinion, that internal measurement will afford the most accurate and convenient method of ascertaining that capacity."

Further on the Report states,—

"But the tonnage thus found is not intended to show the real capacity of the vessel, though bearing towards it nearly the same proportion which would result from the average of a large number of cases, on the application of the old and imperfect rule; for it appears to the committee, that the annual return of registered tonnage has been so long employed as a comparative index of the increase or decrease of British shipping, that it will be highly expedient to preserve the relative value of this index, as far as possible, unaltered."

By these paragraphs it will be seen, that no attempt is made to give the displacement, or burthen, of any vessel, and that even the true internal capacity is not sought, but merely a proportional number for registry, which, whatever be the form of the vessel, will always bear nearly the same ratio to the burthen. Your correspondent N. has fairly produced his list of vessels, but I think he is in error when he says that the new measurement is an aggravation of the evil it was intended to correct, for, on reconsideration, I hope he will see that by the new mode in those long, deep, and narrow vessels, so common in our merchant service, the register for tonnage will bear nearly the same proportion to the actual load, as it will in vessels of the finest form, and consequently the temptation to construct heavy sailing vessels will no longer exist; on the contrary, some favour is shown to vessels beam abaft, and those are slightly benefited which are now thought to be the best models for steering and sailing. It is impossible to say what attempts ship builders will make to evade the new law, but I have no doubt they will shortly find that different modes of construction will so slightly alter the proportions between the registered and actual load of their ships, that for their own interest they will give more beam, and, turning their attention to the sailing qualities, thus accomplish the end proposed by the Government, namely, the production of a good and serviceable class of merchant vessels.

NAVAL REDUCTIONS.

Sir,—In the Portsmouth paper of the week I was, I confess, not a little surprised to read the following:—"His Majesty's sloop Scylla, Commander E. J. Carpenter, was careened at Bermuda Dock-yard on the 1st of this month; but though her copper was found in a defective state, and the caulking of her seemed very slack, such was the deficiency of stores in that Naval establishment, that no repairs, at least effectual ones, could be done for her, so to England she is sent, in all probability to be paid off. The most profitable step for Government to take would be to turn officers and men, rigging, armament, provisions, and stores, to a sister ship, and a few days would suffice to return them again to their station in an effective vessel." If under the naval administration of Sir James Graham the resources of the Dock-yards were so clipped as to render the places of the officers presiding over them almost a sinecure, we look to the present Board of liberal-minded men to rectify the incalculable mischief arising from the enormous reductions made by Sir James Graham in these necessary bulwarks, as it were, of the defences of our country. Never was more misplaced economy, the expenses arising from which are enormous. It is absurd and ridiculous to keep up so extensive an establishment as Bermuda Dock-yard, together with the heavy salaries attached to a Captain Superintendent, a Storekeeper, their Clerks, &c. &c., where there is actually not the necessary stores for repairing even so small a vessel as the Scylla. Where the blame rests we hardly know, but it is a very serious evil somewhere, and I question much if so great an oversight as such a miserable deficiency of stores exhibits, will not be commented upon by others more conversant in these matters than such an bumble individual as myself, though by none I am sure more anxious to see the supremacy of our naval ascendancy maintained both at home and abroad.

A Naval Officer.

 The length of the Duke of Wellington's Evidence on Corporal Punishment, obliges us, much against our will to delay "Numa's" 8th letter till next week. The following are also in type, "Philo-Claudius," "Corineus," "Vulcan," and "Columbus." We crave the patience of our friends; they will not be neglected.

Dr. Longley the New Bishop.—There is a custom at Westminster School that, when the college boys have been locked up for the night, the permission for the servant that waits upon them to depart from the room at ten o'clock, shall be asked by a loud appeal, made by a junior boy to each of the ten seniors, thus—"Smith, may John go out?" Upon this custom a sort of saturnalian privilege has been grafted, and the day a boy first enters among the seniors, an opportunity is given to the lower boys to connect with his name whatever character the feelings and ingenuity may suggest. It may be easily supposed that a recollection of grievances has sometimes to do with this public expression of opinion, and that the senior boy that has "a hole in his coat" will find it noted on such an occasion. These addresses are usually pithy, such as "Smith, big but not bold, may John go out?" Ridicule for notorious bad grammar is sometimes employed to raise a laugh at the new senior's expense, as on one occasion "Tolle lutelli, may John go nut?" In the instance of Dr. Longley the cry was, "Longley strawberry among nettles, may John go nut?" "Longley, rose among thorns, may John go out?" A boy's designation obviously complimentary, and intended to express that mild and amiable disposition which has through life been invariably attributed to Dr. Longley.

To Readers and Correspondents.

"Miles" and "A Commander R.N." will find that "X. X." has noticed most of the points in their letters respecting that ill-conducted affair, the "U. S. Museum;" however, we will not allow the matter to remain quiet; for though we have reason to respect personally several of the Council, we cannot blind ourselves to the fact that they neglect their duty if they do not put an end to the present scandalities. A greater delusion than the published and printed List of Subscribers we never met with: many of the parties whose names are introduced have withdrawn their subscriptions.—"Numa's" Letters 9 and 10 received from Naval Club.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, APRIL 9, 1836.

We this week furnish a list of those Officers of the two Services, on whom His Majesty has recently been graciously pleased to bestow different classes of the Royal Guelphic Order, and we sincerely hope that, at no distant date, we shall have the satisfaction of seeing, added to this order, the name of the gallant Napier, together with that of others of our Naval men, who have, in like manner, been distinguished against the enemies of their country in the late war, and whose meritorious achievements, in the command of ships, and recorded in the annals of the Admiralty, for is the consciousness of having really merited the military decorations that may be bestowed upon , through the Royal Grace alone, unaided by any rivate influence or interest whatever, that can ake these honours valuable to an Officer; and hich feeling should teach us to prize even a pper medal, conferred by our Sovereign, to mark s Royal approbation of our conduct against the emy, or when employed on important services of nger and responsibility, quite as highly as a gold ne, or as any other more splendid insignia.

Whilst we were glad to see the Grand Cross of e Bath, which became vacant by the death of Sir dward Pakenham, bestowed on so gallant an fficer as Sir Graham Moore, yet we had been led bope that the Hero of Acre would not have en passed over. We now trust, that part, at ast, of the thirty-eight Naval Knight-Commanderips which are still vacant, as being the numr less than at the first institution of this class the Order in 1815, will ere long,—we hope on is Majesty's approaching birth-day,—be filled with the names of some of those meritorious ag Officers, who so well deserve this proud mark their Sovereign's favour. The recent nominaon of Rear-Admiral Patrick Campbell to be a .C.B. the whole Navy we are sure will rejoice . The King has not a more meritorious officer his service.

With the names of those Officers who have eceived the Guelphic distinction since we pubshed the statement in our number of the 21st November last, we annex the date of their seeral ranks and seniorities. We believe these tatements will be found very nearly, if not precisely, orrect, but if there be any errors we shall be hankful to be set right by any of our friends who will take this trouble.

On looking over these names, we have been most sorry to find, that that of the gallant officer, whose invaluable services in making the plan of Algiers previous to Lord Exmouth's attack, as shown in Ostler's life of this renowned Admiral, is not amongst those who have been honoured with the Second Class of the Royal Guelphic Order. The high testimony of that distinguished chief, as to the importance of the duties executed by Captain Clerke Warde, of the Banterer, in obtaining, at the risk of his life, through many successive nights, an accurate account of the soundings, together with every other particular necessary to be known, whereby alone, as Lord Exmouth again and again declared, our ships were enabled to be placed in proper positions on the day of the battle, must, we are fully convinced, ensure to him His Majesty's gracious favour, whenever these facts may be brought under our King's notice; for, if zeal, perseverance, and devotion ever merited the reward of a Gracious Sovereign, the hazardous and most essential duties, performed by Captain Warde at Algiers, cannot but be considered entitled to this or some other honourable mark of Royal approbation.

Since the announcement appeared, that men were required for the Royal Navy, the volunteering has proceeded with a success which has exceeded the most sanguine expectations. Was it not, that none but able seamen, and those not above forty-five years of age, are received, the number might have been easily completed by this time: and, as the North American and Baltic ships are now engaging their crews, and have advanced their wages in some cases ten shillings per month, it affords the gratifying proof, that (unless under an immense disparity of pay) seamen prefer the comforts and advantages of the King's to the hard work of the Merchant service. We would caution the officers in command of the newly commissioned ships not to be too eager in forming their crews, and to receive no men of acknowledged bad character, let their appearance as capacity as seamen be what it may. They will find their account in this, as it will render unnecessary those punishments which must be inflicted upon the profligate, for the maintenance of necessary discipline. All dread, however, of a man of war appears to have passed away from the minds of our youthful population, and we are certain that were 20,000, or even 30,000, landsmen and stout boys required for the Royal Navy, in addition to the seamen, they could be obtained with ease within a month. Orders have been issued, however, that no landsmen or boys shall be entered in future, and many such, sent forward by the Coast Guard Officers, have been rejected. Und ese circumstances, it has surprised us to find me of the public journals take up the old rymose tale, and expatiate on the difficulty of aining men, the necessity of offering bounties, , all which tends to much mischief, as leading men to believe that this is the fact, and thus obably to hold back in the expectation of such dncement. We can safely say, that under present cumstances no such necessity exists, and that, m present appearances, it is our conviction, that necessary number of seamen will be raised g before the services of the ships are required.

The Morning Chronicle this week gave the in ligence (quoted, we believe, from the Examiner) t a European Regiment of Artillery, called out "punishment," refused to allow it to be carried o effect. Mark this! To every reflecting mind must be apparent, that if dissatisfaction inases and organised rebellion occurs, India is t and lost for ever.

India is a Colony of vast importance, which ew into that vast importance under the Leadhall Street Direction and Government, when system was to have their officers, Civil and litary, well acquainted with the habits and judices of the people. The policy ever was prevent its being a Government affair at home; no account to be a source of patronage to inisters. The Native Army, well paid, was sufied and attached. Now, how is it! Throughout India the army is disgusted. At Madras greatest excitement prevails in consequence the multitude of Courts-Martial, &c.; and is prospect there likely to improve under the w Governor, a Lord of the Bedchamber and eutenant of the Blues, with a Commander-inief, probably, who can have no feeling in comon with the Officers of the Indian Army?

What has the present Commander-in-Chief of dia done for the Indian Army? He certainly s held a levée—made a business-like affair of it but, if the reports are correct, he did not conscend to notice, much less to converse with, ficers who could have informed him of the pecurities of that army upon which the preservation India depends. So long as men are merely sent t to get rich, just to stay their time, not caring r the Colony or the Army, the mischief must crease. Is it not, therefore, surprising that the irectors are so supine? that the Proprietors gerally do not reflect that England lost America, at Spain lost South America, that so we shall lose dia before the attention which should be paid to e Indian Army is carried into effect. The officers ss their lives under a tropical sun, have no opportunities of making fortunes like the civilians, d yet no Brevet from the King or Order of Merit e given them, whilst their pensions (requiring a ng servitude) do not equal many of our reduced vilians at home.

When too late, when India feels her power, hen the Indian Army is quite broken up, and e whole Army of Great Britain would be t a handful to contend with the myriads of atives, when the Proprietors begin to feel their ecurity shaken, and the Government see this e Colony lost,—then, and not till then, will e Leadenhall Street authorities see the folly having refused justice to the Indian Army.

We understand that the names of sixteen Generals Officers of the King's Army, candidates for the Commander-in-Chiefship of Madras, are before the Court of Directors of the East India Company. The following are reported at the Clubs to be in the list:—Sir P. Maitland, Sir T. Pritzler, Sir T. Reynell, Sir Jasper Nicolls, Sir T. Browne, Sir W. K. Grant, and Sir F. Ponsonby.

Lord Elphinstone will embark in July to assume the government of the Madras Presidency.

We understand that a regulation will be adopted in future, respecting the promotion of Flag Lieutenants, which, without depriving the Admirals of the patronage they have so long enjoyed, and of the right which they may claim by prescription, of nominating a Lieutenant for a Commander's commission on hauling down their flags, will remedy the evil which has several times occurred, of young officers, who have never performed a days' service at sea as Lieutenants, being promoted through this means, and thus becoming eligible to command ships before they could have acquired the experience considered necessary by the framers of the regulation, which requires two years' active service as Lieutenants. We are glad to see that this, and other anomalies, which are the cause of reflections on the service, have not escaped the penetration of the present able Board of Admiralty, the members of which appear to be labouring with one accord for the benefit of the great charge committed to their care; and it rejoices us to notice this and other measures in progress for the reformation of those abuses which long apathy had permitted, but are now in a safe and gradual course of removal.

As public Journalists, we considered it our duty a few weeks since to call attention to a serious evil which was stated to us to exist at Plymouth, connected with the removal of patients from the Marine Infirmary to the Naval Hospital, when in a state of extreme suffering. In submitting our remarks on this subject, our sole object was to correct the system itself, and in no shape to impugn the character of the Surgeon of the Marine forces, whom we learn from our correspondent, who communicated to us the facts which he had heard, as well as from every other source, is an excellent worthy man.

If the case, of which we complained, has been investigated we shall with pleasure publish the report in detail; more particularly so, if it exonerates the Surgeon and his Assistant of all blame; and, we are confident, no one will rejoice more at this result than the individual, who, through a natural zeal to see every abuse corrected, was led to make known to us the circumstances as he then conscientiously believed them to exist. This, we are confident, must have been his only motive, because he has assured us, that he has not the slightest personal acquaintance with either of those gentlemen alluded to. For ourselves, too, we beg to assure them, that our only desire, in making the observations we did, was to prevent a recurrence of the evil which we then understood to have had existence, and this we are satisfied has been accomplished.

There has been a considerable Brevet in the Prussian Army within the last month, effected by the representations of the Minister of War. We wish we could compliment the Commander of the Forces in this country on his endeavours to procure the same boon for the British Army. It is really lamentable to see old Officers of other Services advancing periodically, by regular and progressive steps, while ours are doomed to remain in the same grade. We have Colonels by Brevet who commanded Regiments above a quarter of a century ago, and Lieutenant-Colonels who were absolutely in command of corps with that rank at Waterloo. This is not the case in any other Service.

The appointments to the Falmouth Packets, more particularly to the steam-vessels employed in this Service, in which so much money is made, being an object of great desire by very many old and meritorious Lieutenants upon the List, who have been distinguished in war in actions with the enemy, we have of late been overwhelmed with letters on this subject, beseeching us to renew our remarks on the recent just and fair arrangement of the First Lord of the Admiralty, and praying that we would again submit to his Lordship the propriety of closely adhering to the rule he has so satisfactorily laid down, that no Officer should be allowed to hold these commands, either in one or more Packets, above Five Years altogether. The cause of the many old Lieutenants who have lately written to us, repeating these requests, is, that they say they have lately seen one Officer transferred from one Packet to another, though he has been more than ten years in the Packet Service, and has, it is understood, realized eight or nine thousand pounds to it; and further, that they are told another, who has made much more than double this sum in the Service, as is positively asserted, at Falmouth, and who has been in it above fifteen years, is again to commission a steam-vessel for the conveyance of passengers to and from the Mediterranean. For Justice' sake, we trust that there is some mistake in these representations; at all events, we think it our duty thus to submit them to the notice of the Earl of Minto, and we are confident that no private influence whatever will induce his Lordship to swerve from the straight-forward course which he has begun.

As financial considerations are said to have induced the Board of Control to reject the proposal of the Court of Directors to allow officers, after 18 years' actual service in India to retire on Captain's pay, after 23 years on Major's and after 27 years on Lieutenant-Colonel's, as recommended by Lord Cornwallis, in his letter to Mr. Dundas in November, 1794, and as both the Court of Directors and Board of Control have rejected also the retiring fund proposed by Mr. Curran, and recommended for adoption by the Government of Bengal, we wish to call attention to that part of Mr. Curran's calculations which proves that if a Cadet were to pay for his first commission 330*l.*, or to fund such a sum on going out to India, that all who survive at the end of 25 years would become entitled annually for the rest of their life to 339*l.* 11*s.* a-year; this renders it obvious that, if such an arrangement were adopted for the ensuing year, that a fund might be created, with no additional burthen to the State, that must insure a pension of 519*l.* to all officers after 25 years' actual service in India, or if Majors 620*l.*, or Lieutenant-Colonels 704*l.* a-year. The plan suggested is open to the home authorities to adopt in times to come, and will render all contributions now necessary for the relief of the officers now in the army in India to a retiring fund but temporary, and no longer requisite when the plan comes into operation with those who may hereafter enter the military service of India. The correctness of Mr. Curran's calculations having been verified by the opinions of able actuaries, no doubt can be entertained of the result; and we trust the plan now noticed will obtain an early attention from the ruling authorities in this country, to prevent timely an evil, the effects of which may tend, if disregarded, to endanger the safety of our Indian empire.

By the Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the laws and regulations relating to Pilotage, we are much pleased to find that they have earnestly recommended that a system should be established for the navigation of Steam Vessels, by directing, that when sail-ng on the Thames, and in all other rivers and channels n the United Kingdom, they shall always keep on the tarboard shore; thus, when coming UP the river, these essels will have to keep nearest to the east side, and hen going DOWN on the west, which will guard against he possibility of collision. There are several other re-ulations suggested, all we think equally good, but most articularly the one relative to the steamers keeping ghts always on board by night when in pilotage waters. The rule recommended is, that every steam vessel shall urn have three clear and good lights always hoisted, on a ard at least twelve feet long, to be kept square, full six et above the paddle-boxes, from sun-set to sun-rise. The lights to be thus disposed of:—when coming UP any ver or channel, two lights, the one over the other, at he larboard yard-arm, and one light on the starboard; nd when going DOWN any river or channel, all the lights be of equal heighth, two at the larboard side the yard, nd one at the starboard. By the rigid enforcement of hese regulations, we sincerely hope that we shall no onger hear of those serious accidents with steam vessels, hich the public have so often had to deplore.

Royal Naval Club of 1765.—On Saturday last this onvivial Club met at the Piazza Tavern, Covent Garden, to commemorate the victory gained at Copenhagen April, 1801. To this patriotic purpose, according to he custom of the Club, one of charity was superadded. During the hour preceding dinner, the cases of several widows with orphan children, of Naval officers, involved in poverty and distress, were laid before the Committee, and relieved from a surplus fund of the Society by a vote of 220*l.*, distributed in five sums from 30*l.* to 50*l.* and one um of 10*l.*, varying according to the circumstances of he case. Amongst the new members elected by ballot t this meeting were the Portuguese Admiral, Count Cape St. Vincent, and Capt. Charles Napier, of the Navy. Commodore Skipsey was in the chair, and about 8 members were present. We indulge in a hope that his social Club will not allow the anniversary of any reat Naval fight of the last war to pass uncelebrated.

The object of the meeting of the baronets is to be allowed to wear in public a badge emblematic of their order, a privilege which the baronets of Nova Scotia have enjoyed for upwards of two centuries. In November last a communication was received from the Secretary of State, which conveyed the information that the petitions of the baronets had been referred to the Earl Marshal, and by him to the officer of arms; that they had made an unfavourable report thereon, and that the said report had been laid before the King, who had not been pleased to give any directions upon the subject. The meeting of the order, called for the 29th instant, is to address the Crown, declaratory of their feeling, and to petition that the claims of the baronets may be referred to the Privy Council.

A commission of lunacy was held this week at the Horns Tavern, Kennington, to inquire into the state of mind of a gentleman named John Norris, between 50 and 60 years of age, and many years a surgeon in the East India Company's service at Madras. He returned to this country to his wife and daughter about eighteen months ago. On the passage home he gave so many proofs of insanity that it became necessary, for the comfort and safety of his fellow-passengers, to place him under restraint. He imagined that he had a right to the rank of Lieut.-Colonel and constantly appeared in the full-dress uniform of an officer of that rank, and while so attired sometimes caused himself to be driven about the streets in a child's cart. Several witnesses were examined, and the jury returned a verdict that Mr. Norris was of unsound mind, and that he had been in that state since 1st March, 1834.

Both were conveyed home in a state of insensibility, the Captain having received a concussion of the brain and the lady her arm fractured in two places.

Santander, March 22.—On Sunday last three officers of the Saracen left Bilboa to return to Oliviaga, opposite to which the Saracen is moored. On coming to a lonely part of the road they were stopped by two armed Carlists, who said that they must consider themselves as prisoners, and go with them to their General's quarters, at the same time pointing to a lonely and darksome glen through which they were to proceed. The officers in vain stated that they belonged to his Britannic Majesty's ship Saracen; the Carlists insisted upon forcing them along, but the three officers, recollecting that a report had prevailed in Bilboa that an attempt was likely to be made by the Carlists to assassinate Captains Lapidge and Lehardy when an opportunity offered, refused to advance, naturally thinking that the two Carlists took two of them to be Captains Lapidge and Lehardy, and that the design was to put the reported assassination into execution. On their persisting in proceeding towards Olivia the Carlists rushed at them with fixed bayonets, and after stabbing them, discharged their muskets at two of the officers, the muzzles almost touching their bodies, and severely wounding them. The third officer knocked down one of the murderers, but whilst attempting to disarm him was rushed at by the other with his fixed bayonet, and was obliged, to save his life, to make for the river and swim towards a vessel, which he succeeded in getting to though fired at by these scoundrel assassins. Immediately on receiving intelligence of this deliberate and planned attempt to assassinate three British officers, Lord John Hay despatched to Bilboa the Phœnix war steamer, which had arrived here from England but the evening before, with a number of Marines, to assist in the operations that may be deemed most advisable for avenging this outrageous insult to the English nation and murderous infringement of the laws of civilised communities.

Vittoria, March 24.—The changes in the regimental of the Legion have been effected, and there are now on eight instead of ten infantry regiments, exclusive of the Rifles. A provisional battalion is to be formed to garrison Vittoria, and is to consist of the invalids and convalescents of the several corps. The improvement in the health of the men, produced by the change of the season and the greater attention paid to their comfort has given a different aspect to our affairs, and our prospects are in every respect cheering. Since the recent arrangements have been completed, both officers and men are in the highest spirits, sedulously employed in drilling and all other preparations necessary for entering upon the spring campaign with alacrity and vigour. New clothing has been issued, provisions are of the best description, the pay is regularly given, and the men are lodged in the best quarters that under the circumstances can be provided for them.

General Evans.—"We never supposed a man who had been so very little employed in active service, and never more than four years in the subaltern ranks of infantry, perhaps two years of which he might have been at home, was entrusted either to organise a Legion or bring it to that state of perfection calculated to render it efficient in the field. His first start in appointing a personal staff of seven aides-de-camp, in number as many as the Duke of Wellington had when he commanded the combined armies of Great Britain, Spain and Portugal, added to the miserable mode adopted by the gallant Officer in raising the Legion, was followed by the great error he committed in taking out only four or five officers, in a number of 260, who had ever seen active service."—Morning Post.

France.—The alteration between Marshals Maison Mouney has become so serious that it is contemplated ointing Chancel War Minister instead of Maison.—e question which is now agitating the Chamber of puties and the Cabinet is the tax to be imposed on t-root sugar. Ministers, notwithstanding the hostility layed toward the proposition, have refused to with- w it.

Spain.—Madrid Journals of 28th ult. are occupied ost exclusively with the following letter of Captain ul John Hay, of the Castor, rendered public through n. Cordova, announcing the co-operation of England securing the sea-ports against the attempts of the tists:—

" Santander, March 24.—Excellency, I hasten to in- m you that I have this moment received orders from Government of His Britannic Majesty to afford your cellency, and the troops which you command, the t active and efficacious co-operation in preventing fortresses on this coast, which display the flag of een Isabella II., from falling into the power of the ps of the Pretender, and also in retaking from the s such of these places as may have already fallen their hands. A positive contradiction is given to the assertion that uis Philippe had refused to permit French troops to ter Spain. The fact of the King's refusal was stated the authority of an intercepted letter of General lava, which had fallen into the hands of the Carlists. he Christinos are greatly elated at this contradiction.

Prussia.—A considerable promotion in the army ap- rs in the State Gazette of 30th ult.; three Major- enerals are appointed to the rank of Generals; 19 olonels to that of Major-Generals; 27 Lieut.-Cols. to nk of Colonels; and 15 Majors to that of Lieut.-Cols. he spring and winter manœuvres will be confined to the ost necessary exercise of the troops, and no levy of re- uits will be made. There is no officer holding the nk of Field Marshal since the death of Gneisnau, and e King has resolved to reserve this dignity for times of ar, such a high office not being necessary in peace.

Saxony.—It is contemplated to marry King Otho to e Archduchess Maria Theresa Isabel, eldest daughter Prince Charles of Austria. The negociations are very tive. Otho is to come to Germany for a few months, d pay his addresses in person to the Princess, who is t yet twenty years of age, and who is said to possess l the good qualities of her father. The money to defray e expenses of the journey is now all that is wanted.

Theatres.

Covent Garden.—On Tuesday evening a gentleman of the name of Dale, from the Dublin and Edinburgh Theatres made his debut on these boards in the character of Virginius, and met with a flattering reception. In person Mr. Dale is of commanding stature; his features, though not handsome, are open and expressive; his voice full, sonorous, and musical; and his action easy and natural. His performance convinced us that he was well acquainted with the business of the scene, but his acting was not of that description to make any powerful impression, or in any way to dazzle the imagination: it was a fair performance, occasionally energetic and spirited, but in no instance did it betray genius. We were not unfrequently reminded of Mr. Macready; indeed, we should feel disposed to think that Mr. Dale had taken that actor as his model in the part. Previous to the scene before Appius, on the Forum, the part of Virginius affords but little room for the display of the actor's powers. In that, and the scene in which he strangles the tyrant, Mr. Dale was rewarded with very general and well-deserved applause. We shall for the present take our leave of him, anxiously desiring his further acquaintance, for he will be found a great acquisition to the present company. The new Easter extravaganza, entitled Zuzoxizezu, or some such name, followed, and was well received. This piece is nothing short of what may be called a speaking pantomime, a mere vehicle for the introduction of several beautiful scenes. The first act is highly amusing, particularly that part in the Dominion of Dominoes, in which a game at dominoes is played by Prince Zizi and Dominica, the domineering Queen of the Dominoes, in her really beautiful Palace of Dominoes. The singing of Miss Turpin and Miss Romer is a great relief in the general dulness of the two last acts. Mr. Tilbury made the part of the Pacha as ludicrous as the author could desire. The piece has been got up with great splendour, and may prove an attraction: it is at all events quite as good as Chery Chase at Drury Lane, and that's not saying much in its favour.

Lyceum.—This popular place of entertainment opened for the season on Monday evening, and we think with every prospect of success. The performers have the theatre on their own account, and if they only manage to pull well together, and allow no petty jealousies to interfere, we make no doubt but the present season may be made to all considerable profit. The management have begun well; the engagement of Mrs. Keeley does them credit: she is the best actress in her line at present on the stage, and for no stage is she so well suited as the Lyceum; it is, and ought to be her home. Mrs. Nisbett is also engaged, and will be found a powerful attraction if good pieces are procured for her; but we shall not consider the company complete until we have Mr. Wilson and Mr. Keeley back again. The entertainments chosen for the opening night all proved successful, and appeared to afford considerable amusement to a very crowded audience. The first piece is a pleasing drama, in three parts, called Lucille, or the Story of a Heart: it is from the pen of Mr. B. Bernard, and was very successful. The chief interest of the piece devolves on Mrs. Keeley, who personated the character of Lucille, and a more delightful and interesting piece of acting we have seldom witnessed. She was warmly greeted on her entrance, and throughout her performance, and loudly called for at the conclusion of the drama—a call she very properly did not obey. Mr. Serle and little Oxberry played extremely well, and were greatly applauded for their exertions. At the end of the piece, "God save the King" was sung by the entire company. A new farce, called A Day well Spent, followed, and in the early scenes kept the audience in one continued roar of laughter. Towards the conclusion this piece falls off, and the denouement is far from skilfully brought about. The admirable acting of Wrench, Oxberry, and W. Bennett, would have saved a farce of less pretensions; the author (Mr. Oxenford) is greatly indebted to the exertions of these clever actors for the success of his piece. The favourite drama of The Cornish Miners concluded the entertainments. The acting of Mrs. Keeley as Anne Oswald in this piece was all that could be desired;—she was extremely well supported by Mr. Hemmings, who sustained the part of Stephen Kynon (for the first time), and is making rapid advances to his profession.

Strand.—Mr. Hammond, the manager of the Liverpool and York theatres, and Mr. Douglas Jerrold, the dramatic author, have become joint lessees of this theatre. Mr. Hammond is one of the cleverest low comedians in the provinces, and is a first-rate comic singer. It is Mr. Jerrold's intention to make his debut on the opening night, in a new drama written by himself;—at this we are not surprised, since there is no encouragement at our two great national theatres for authors of talent. The pieces on the opening night will be Doves in a Cote; a new farce for Hammond, called Come to Town, by the author of The Old and Young Stagers; a drama of pathetic interest, by Jerrold, entitled The Painter of Ghent, in which the author will make his debut; and a new farce, called P. L., or 30, Strand.

Bellini's opera, I Capuleto e Montecchi, has been recently represented at Bucharest; at the head of the bill was the following announcement:—" To avoid the melancholy effect of the second act, Romeo and Juliet will not die."—Rossini is shortly expected at Naples to superintend the execution, in the new church, of a high mass of his own composition.—Grisi, Rubini, Tamburini, and Lablache, have arrived in town from Paris.—Mr. and Mrs. Wood are expected to arrive in England in June.

MILITARY PUNISHMENTS.

The Duke of Wellington's Evidence taken before the Commissioners, Saturday, February 20, 1836.

Superior in respect to the treatment of the country in which they were serving? Not to be compared with it, even their own country—an enemy's country to us, and to them their own country.

And even there the discipline of the English army was superior to that of the French? Infinitely.

In what respect was the discipline of the French army so inferior to ours? A general system of plunder, great looseness in the performance of the duty, great irregularity; in short, irregularity of which we could not venture to risk the existence even.

Was it not the fact that the people came home to their houses when the English were to occupy them, having left them when the French were to occupy them? Yes, that was the case.

Comparing the discipline of our army with that of the Prussians, do you conceive that our discipline for all purposes in the field is the more effectual, or theirs? Not to be compared. We could live in a country which the Prussians were obliged to quit, and have done it. When I marched up to Paris with the Prussian army upon my right, they were obliged to quit the country in which they were living. Both armies were living by requisition; and we went and lived in the same country, because my army was in a state of discipline, and order, and regularity, and obedience, and the Prussian was not. This is a positive fact upon record, which everybody knows. Then there is another circumstance, which I must mention, upon that subject. The two armies, when they joined, had, the Prussian army 150,000 men, the allied army under my command only 90,000 men. When they both reached Paris they had lost about the same number in operations upon the frontier, and left about the same number behind, each having left a corps in observation upon the frontier of France and the Netherlands. When they came to Paris each of them had 30,000 men, we having a deficiency from our original number of 30,000 men, the Prussian army having a deficiency of 90,000.

You attribute the different proportions of the deficiencies in that instance to the good discipline of the one army, and the inferior discipline of the other? To the efficient discipline for service of our army, and the deficient discipline for service of the Prussian army.

Have you had occasion to observe the discipline of the other armies of Europe, such as the Austrian, the Bavarian, and the Russian; and does your Grace's experience lead to the same result with respect to all these armies as compared with ours? I should think so. I have never had immediate experience of the effect of the discipline of the two armies in so striking an instance as in this case of the Prussians, where we positively took the ground which they had been obliged to leave, and could not live in any longer, and lived miles from that time forward, and the people returned to their houses and supplied us with every thing we wanted, at the same time that the Prussians had been absolutely starving upon that ground. I cannot say that I have seen the same result in other armies, because I was never engaged in a course of operations so near them.

Towards the latter time of your service in the Peninsula, was corporal punishment very frequent in the army, or more frequent than it had been in the beginning? I cannot say that I know exactly how it was in the regiments. I rather believe it was not so frequent. I am positively certain that crime had most enormously diminished—that there was not one crime for 100 that there were in the beginning of the time. I think my orders show it. There was a man convicted of robbery, and I pardoned him, because the crime had become so rare. There are many things of that sort that show clearly, that by discipline, and by care and attention, the army was brought into such a state of discipline that every description of punishment was almost discontinued altogether.

Do you conceive that the army, when it left France from the Pyrenees, was in as efficient state for service as an army can well be brought to? I always thought that I could have gone anywhere and done anything with that army. It was impossible to have a machine more highly mounted and in better order, and in a better state of discipline than the army was. When I quitted that army upon the Garonne I do not think it was possible to see anything in a high tate of discipline; and I believe there was a total discontinuance of all punishment.

Was it ever represented to you, or did you ever observe, that a soldier who had been corporally punished was a worse or a better soldier to the field from having received that punishment? I never heard of it.

Did you ever understand that a man was degraded by the infliction of that punishment in the eyes of his companions with whom he was serving? No, I should not say that he was. I think they were just as good comrades as ever. I think it may affect his claim to be a non-commissioned officer in some regiments; the Commanding Officer may feel this man has been punished once, or if he has been punished twice in a stronger degree, "I cannot make him a non-commissioned officer." There may be a feeling of that description; but I have myself made some that have been punished non-commissioned officers, and some I have made non-commissioned officers who are at this moment officers, that I have tied up at the halberds and pardoned, and they are officers, and even field-officers, at this moment.

Then, in your judgment, those men were not degraded in the eyes of the public with whom they lived? No; certainly not.

But supposing a soldier to be punished for a degrading crime, such as theft or crime of that description, is he then degraded in the eyes of his comrades? The crime degrades him, certainly; but I must say that you must receive that opinion with a certain degree of qualification; there is a margin even there. One of those persons that I mentioned just now, whom I had promoted to be a non-commissioned officer, and afterwards to be an officer, and if he is alive now he is a Field-Officer—this man was a Serjeant, and he embezzled the company's money and deserted. Now, all that have been engaged in regimental service know that that is pretty nearly as great a crime as man can be guilty of. That man was brought back; I had him to the halberds, but I did not punish him; he was a good man otherwise, and I pardoned him, and I afterwards made him a non-commissioned officer, and afterwards I recommended him to be made an officer, and he was with the army in the Peninsula as a Field Officer. This man was led to commit the offence by women. There are things of that kind that a man may be led into, and yet he may be a very good man; and the Commanding Officer must exercise a judgment and a certain discretion in doing a thing of the kind. I do not mean to say that it is an example to be followed. There are some of those crimes for which they must be punished, although it may be in the power of the Commanding Officer afterwards to save the man.

Did you know instances of the infliction of corporal punishment so cowing the spirit as to make a man unfit for a soldier afterwards in the field? I never heard of such a thing.

And you do not believe such a feeling to exist? I do not.

Have you served in the colonies with a regiment? I served at the Cape, and I served in the East Indies.

Do you think that in the colonies this system of solitary confinement and imprisonment with hard labour, which has been so much recommended, could by possibility be introduced? I think not.

In Great Britain and Ireland, would it not be possible to have military prisons and solitary cells in the barracks so as to get rid of a great proportion, at all events, of the corporal punishments, if not entirely? It might be possible to build military prisons, and it might be possible to build solitary cells in the barracks, but at a great expense; and as to solitary confinement I still think would not have the effect as an example of preventing crime, so much as a punishment which everybody must see and feel that the man suffers from, and which it would not be very agreeable to undergo. A vast expense would attend that description of punishment and great inconvenience, on account of the number of men it would take out of the regiment constantly; and, besides all that, I believe that it would not have the effect of an example.

So that if the country did determine to go to the expense of building these places, and so forth, you still are very doubtful whether the expense which was gone to would be found to have produced a system as effectual as the present for preserving discipline? Certainly not.

Is it your opinion, however, that supposing those places to be built, the frequency of corporal punishment might not be diminished by those means? It would depend, in a great degree, on the effect the measure should have in the way of example. If it should be found that solitary confinement would produce the effect, the Commanding Officers would use solitary confinement instead of corporal punishment; but if it did not produce the effect, of course they must have recourse to corporal punishment, supposing that the law allowed that it should be inflicted.

Supposing the effect of those punishments were such that it was thought that corporal punishment might, without danger, be abolished in England, would it be possible to frame such a military code as that corporal punishment could be permitted upon service and in the colonies, and entirely prohibited in Great Britain and Ireland? I think it would be possible to form such a code, but I do not think it would be advisable, for this reason, that the great object of those commanding his Majesty's troops, and of the officers at the head of his Majesty's army, has invariably been to consider and represent service abroad as an honour and an advantage, not one service abroad only, but every service abroad, and it would be a very unfortunate circumstance if a punishment, pronounced by the Government and Parliament to be an improper punishment, should be inflicted upon those who are to perform the service abroad, which it has been the object and duty of those at the head of the army to represent as a service of honour and advantage. Now, I have gone so far upon this subject of considering service abroad as an advantage, that I can mention more than one instance in which, when regiments have misbehaved, and it has been proposed to send them abroad, I have said, "No, by no means; do anything rather than that," because, when you send a regiment abroad, you must represent it, and you must endeavour to have it felt as being an honour, and particularly in time of war. If it should ever unfortunately be deemed anything like a disgrace, it would be the greatest misfortune that could happen to the army and to the public.

Would it not be exceedingly prejudicial to the discipline of a regiment, if it was known to the soldiers of that regiment that during their remaining in Great Britain and Ireland they were not subject to corporal punishment, but that from the moment they set their foot on board ship to proceed either to the colonies or to actual service, they would then become subject to a punishment which had been considered so degrading in England as to be abolished? I should think so; but there is one thing which should always be borne in mind, and that is, that in reality the army think but little of this punishment. If it was abolished entirely in England, and kept up in the colonies, the effect would be very injurious. Going to the colonies, say what we will, is never very agreeable. We consider it and represent it a matter of honour we are going abroad, and there is among the Commanding and other officers of the regiment a desire that it should be reckoned a good thing. But if it was to be attended by corporal punishment being revived, having been put down in England and in Ireland, I do not mean to say that there might not be an additional motive for feeling an objection to go, and there might not be some instances of mutiny and difficulty in getting the soldier abroad, from the fear of having, or under the pretext of the fear of having, the punishment inflicted.

So that, supposing those means, and so forth, which have been alluded to, were to be established in these islands, the same expense to provide the means of carrying those punishments into execution must be incurred in all the colonies? Yes.

And still there would remain service in the field to which that regulation could not be made to apply? Certainly.

It has been suggested to the commission that a system of insuring a certain number of officers' commissions to the privates and non-commissioned officers of the army, would be a means of inducing persons of a more respectable class of life to enter into the army: is that your Grace's opinion? That is more a civil and political question than it is a military one. I should say, very possibly some young men in the country might. I believe now there is a great want of employment for young men of education in the country, and some young men in the country might be induced to enlist as privates, with a view to obtain commissions; but at the same time, I beg the commission to observe there are here the Life Guards, the Horse Guards, who are called gentlemen of the Life Guards and Horse Guards; and I believe that they do not get many of that class of men among them, even though they are gentlemen, and they have a certain chance from that circumstance. It is possible, I think, that you might get a few gentlemen to come into the service, a few persons of better education and of a better description, but I do not think in large numbers.

You do not think it would be a sufficient inducement to enable you to count upon the class of men who compose the army being raised in station? No, I should think not. The real truth is, there are very few commissions to be given away. The General Commanding-in-Chief would be able to state more of this than I can, but I believe that he would tell you that the number of commissions he has is scarcely sufficient to enable him to provide for those well reported of from the Military College; at the present moment I do not believe he has a sufficient number to provide for all those well reported of in their studies at Sandhurst. Now, if that is the case, although 30 or 40 commissions a-year might be to be given in this way, it would hardly produce any effect upon the number in the army.

In point of fact, did you recommend many persons for commissions during the service in the Peninsula? A great number; it is a circumstance that I have not attended to a great deal, but I should wish that that point should be investigated. I believe that in the Peninsula I gave every commission I had to give away either to gentlemen volunteers with the army, or to non-commissioned officers. I gave commissions to a great number of non-commissioned officers, and those that were not given to non-commissioned officers were given away to volunteers serving with the army at the time. I gave none in this country at all.

With respect to those non-commissioned officers that were so raised to the rank of officers, have they generally remained in the army, or have they retired? A great number have retired. In truth, they do not make good officers; it does not answer. They are brought into society to the manners of which they are not accustomed; they cannot bear being at all heated with wine or liquor. I have known them when I was serving in the ranks of the army, and I think, in general, they are quarrelsome, they are addicted to quarrel a little in their cups, and they are not persons who can be borne in the society or the officers of the army; they are men of different manners altogether.

Does that make them feel uncomfortable in the new situation in which they are placed? I think so: punctilious and uncomfortable. There are very few indeed that stay any time, or that ever rise beyond the subaltern ranks in the army.

Are they generally of the same age as those persons with whom they are to mix, the other subalterns of the regiment? Generally older.

And that makes their situation still more difficult and unpleasant? Still more so.

Do they find any difficulty in providing the means for their own equipment, and their living afterwards? I think in general, they can do that pretty well. They live upon their pay, if they have saved a little money. In general there is care taken to assist them, when they are promoted, in providing their clothes and their equipment, and I think that in that respect they are well off; but they cannot live in the society of gentlemen, they are not accustomed to the manners of gentlemen.

But they can live better upon their pay and so forth when upon service, than they can in garrison at home? I should think so.

Since the peace, have there been a considerable number of commissions of Adjutants and Quartermasters given to non-commissioned officers in the army? I cannot speak to this so much since the peace, for I was only in command of the army a couple of years, and at that time we gave some; but I think, in general, the wish of the Commanding Officers of regiments is to get an officer that has purchased regularly into the service; he is a gentlemen of education, and he manages much better than those non-commissioned officers.

In foreign armies, for instance the French, you are aware that a certain number of commissions in every regiment are devoted to non-commissioned officers and soldiers? Yes.

Do those non-commissioned officers and soldiers who have got those commissions, live at the mess with the rest of the officers, or do they live separately, and do they break off all connexion with the soldiers with whom they had been comrades heretofore? From what I have mentioned already respecting the constitution of the French army being levied by conscription, and there being men of all classes of society in the ranks, it stands to reason that there must be men of all classes of society in the ranks of the officers likewise; and I have seen, as I mentioned before, in my own guard an officer playing at billiards with the drummer of the guard, and even with privates of the guard, in my own room, although this officer dined with me, by-the-by, every day, but he was amusing himself all the morning playing at billiards with the men, which we never hear of in the British army. And, of course, when some of those soldiers come to be promoted to be officers, they live with the others who have been promoted before, and I believe that this class of men all live together. They very often do not mess together; they mess in threes or fours in some of the French regiments. Sometimes, I believe, they mess together as we do, but in some cases I believe they do not do so, and then of course the men live according to their habits and manners together, as people do in clubs here, and to other societies in England. But I rather believe that this regulation of the French army, which grants to soldiers and non-commissioned officers commissions, has not prevented the man of education, and manners, and information, from rising; I believe that that sort of person has been the man selected in general, for they select for those commissions, but they select from the ranks, and they generally take the man of family, of education, and manners, in preference to a mere non-commissioned officer, and that is one of the great difficulties of the French army at the present moment, that there is, as I understand, throughout the French army a very strong non-commissioned officers' party, which creates great uneasiness to the government, and has a considerable influence in the regiments as against the power and influence of the officers.

Supposing such a system could be established in the British army, and that the officers, instead of messing together, lived more with the men than they do at present, do you think the discipline of the British army, composed as it is, could be maintained? I do not think it could.

For instance, supposing such a circumstance took place in a guard of the British army, as you stated to have taken place in the guard of honour attending you of the French army, do you think such a circumstance as that could happen, and the discipline of the army be maintained? It is quite out of the question.

Then, are the commissioners to conclude that the relation between the French soldier and his officer is an entirely dif-

s that the case also in the Prussian army? The Prussian y rise very much in the same way; indeed, I am not te sure that all the commissions do not go among the n-commissioned officers and soldiers, but then the par- ity of the selection is still greater. I believe that the ntleman and the man of education is taken more fre- ently even then he is in the French service.

Has your Grace ever turned in your mind whether there ght not be a system of rewards, either of honours or of rease of pay, that might tend to maintain the discipline the army, and thereby render corporal punishment less quent? With respect to a system of reward, I should be ry sorry that it should be supposed that the British sol- er was not sensible of rewards and honours to him. I nk he is, but, at the same time, it must not be supposed t those rewards and hooours would prevent a great deal irregularity and crime which must be prevented. You uld not expect it, at least without such an expense, and ch a profusion of rewards, as would be absolutely out of question.

Does your Grace see any objection to making the ex- riment of an order of merit in the army, which shall tend from the private soldiers up to the highest rank— t for gallantry in the field, and secondly, for good beha- our? No, I should see no objection, on the contrary, am certain it would produce a good effect, and it has en tried. I have known it exist in several regiments. I ver had it in any regiment under my immediate com- and. In the 33rd regiment it never existed, and therefore could not exactly say what the effect was, but I am sure at the soldier is as sensible of such a reward, and of his erits being considered, as any other individual is. But the same time it must not be supposed that there would t still be a great deal of irregularity and disorder.

But as an assistant to discipline you would think it de- rable? Certainly.

Have you ever considered how far the giving greater cilities to the soldiers when in quarters, in the way of mes and recreations of different sorts, might tend to take em out of those habits of drunkenness and vice in which ey indulge? Every thing that can tend to amuse them d employ them is good. In the East Indies we do all can to amuse and to employ them, and to occupy their ne. At the same time you must never forget that iri- larity comes after all; but every thing of that sort is of vantage.

With regard to pensions, can you suggest any alteration th respect to pensions that might be an inducement either n a better class of persons to enter the army, or that, when the army, the forfeiture of those pensions should be a ll more powerful means of promoting discipline? I ould think that the great thing of all about pensions is to ep faith. There have been different changes of pensions, d claims have been admitted and not admitted, and so n. I should say that the great thing is to keep faith; and think that whenever there is an opportunity of introducing a forfeiture of a pension—but that goes into a very large estion—but whenever it is possible to introduce a for- iture of pension upon a crime, it would be a good thing to it. But I do not think still that that would preclude the ecessity of having recourse to those punishments at mes. I should say, also, that in some of the barracks, r instance, some of the barracks in London, and likewise some of the large garrisons, it might be possible to put em under stoppages, when they have been in confinement, ring the period of their confinement. That might render onfinement a stronger punishment. For instance, that hen a man is in confinement he shall forfeit that part of is pay that would go into his own pocket; or that when he as absent from his duty, that that part of his pay should e forfeited. I think that things of that sort might have a ertain effect in preventing crime, but still you must have he other punishment. This must be borne in mind, how- ver, that one of the great offences they are guilty of is the ale of necessaries, and that the very moment you touch the ey, you immediately, to a certain degree, occasion the rime of selling necessaries. The way that I put a stop to he sale of necessaries was by having them paid every day, hich I did in the Peninsula. It totally put a stop to that escription of offence. The man got his money every day, nd his necessaries were also examined every day; and the moment that his necessaries were not complete, his pay was topped, so that he had every inducement to keep his neces- saries complete, and not to sell them. Whenever you touch the pay, you give occasion for that description of rime which is the most common and the most inconvenient mong the many crimes of which they can be guilty, that f selling their necessaries.

Penal companies, that is to say, companies to which men who are in the habit of bad behaviour in the regiment could be sent, have been recommended to the Commission. What is your Grace's opinion upon that subject? I never saw it in any service, and I do not very well understand how it could be adopted; I do not know how the penal company is to be kept in order.

When that has been recommended, it has been proposed that the men in the regiment serving upon that station should not be liable to corporal punishment till they have been placed in a penal company; and that from the moment of their joining the penal company they should become subject to that punishment, of course being kept in a station separate from the rest of the army? I do not see how that punishment is to be carried into execution; I am afraid it would be found not to answer, at all events as an example. It would never be before the eyes of the men. The man is sent away to a penal company, and there punished; whereas the great object is, that his suffering, whatever it is, should be in the presence of the whole; and that they should all feel—if I do this I shall be liable to punishment, but only if I do this, but if I commit any of those irregularities which I am forbidden to commit, and therefore I will not commit them.

You are aware that in the Prussian army there are two classes; that a man is originally enrolled in the best class, and that for great misconduct he is put into the second class, and that his dress in some respects is different; for instance, that the cockade is of a different description, and so forth. Is your Grace of opinion that that would have any effect as a mode of enforcing discipline? I wrote a paper upon that subject some time ago, and I there stated my opinion upon it. I do not think it is applicable to the state of our service at all. I believe that in the first instance nearly every man would begin in the second class, but I must say that I do not think we have got to the bottom of that punishment in the Prussian service. I know what punishment that is. In reviewing the Prussian army you will see, out of a regiment of 2000 or 3000 men, one or two men in this situation. Now it is absolutely impossible that there should not be more than one or two who deserve to be in the second class; but I have gone down the ranks with the King of Prussia, and it is easily perceived who are the individuals. They wear feathers of a certain colour, and all the others wear white feathers: and I saw that one man, or perhaps two, in a regiment, might be so marked. I must say that I have known enough of the Prussian army to be quite certain that there were many more men who deserved to be in the second class than those two; therefore I think there must be more in it than we are informed of. But I am quite certain that it would not answer for our service. When the men first enter into our army they would be put into the second class at once.

There has been a constant change in the power left to Commanding Officers with respect to punishments and to trials, and there has been a diminution in the power of Regimental Courts Martial with respect to punishments and so forth; are you of opinion that the Commanding-Officer's power has been too much abridged, or that those regulations are correct? I would go very far back; as far back as 30 years ago there was a very important alteration made, which I do not think was a desirable alteration either for the soldiers or the discipline of the army, which was swearing Courts-Martial,—swearing the witnesses, and swearing the members, and so on. I think it made a very important alteration. It altered the Court from what it was before—a Court of discipline and honour, into a Court with regular evidence and a great deal of perjury: the proof of crime being exceedingly difficult, instead of being in the hands of the Commanding Officer, for which the Commanding Officer was in a great degree responsible. That alteration was made while I was in the service as Commanding Officer of a regiment. There I think that every alteration that has been made since that which has taken away the power of the Commanding Officer has rather been a disadvantage, not only to the discipline, but to the soldier himself, for I believe the soldier himself is as much interested in maintaining this discipline as the public is, for the reason I have stated.

You are aware that an order was given out by Lord William Bentinck before leaving India, which abolished the infliction of corporal punishment upon the native armies in all the three Presidencies? As your Grace has been in India, the Commissioners will be glad to learn your opinion upon that subject. You will observe that the principle upon which that has been done has been explained to the commission as being, that it stood in the way of obtaining the best description of recruits from the native population into the armies of those Presidencies; and that the discharge is in itself sufficient punishment to preserve the discipline? The punishment of discharge would apply, I believe, to the service in Bengal. In Bengal they have a very superior description of man for the sepoy: and they have, at least they had, very great facility in procuring the service of those men; and indeed I understood, at one time, some of the regiments that had served a long time in the northern provinces in the distant stations of the army, had a vast number of supernumeraries always following them, ready to enter. It stands to reason, therefore, that the discharge of men from these regiments would be, to a certain degree, a punishment, and a punishment that would have an effect as an example. But when you come to apply that punishment to the King's army, to the army of Fort St. George, or to the army at Bombay, I should say it would be no punishment at all. The sepoy upon the coast of Coromandel, in the army of Fort St. George, is a man of a very low caste and description in general. There are some high caste men, there are some Brahmins, and men of the military classes among them, and some Mussulmans; but none of the regiments that ever I saw were entirely complete in number. They all wanted men: they had none of those people following them; and, therefore, I should say that the discharge of men of that description would no more be considered a punishment than it would be considered a punishment in our service; on the contrary, in many cases it would rather be considered a benefit. Then it is the same thing on the Malabar coast. I never saw a Bombay battalion at all complete in its numbers; they generally want 100 or 150 men, and it is very difficult to get recruits, and a discharge would be desirable rather than otherwise. So that you must not consider this question solely with reference to the Presidency of Bengal; but when you come to apply it to the army of Fort St. George, which was the efficient acting army, and the army of Bombay, it will not apply at all.

Does your Grace think that dismissal from the service would be an effectual substitute for corporal punishment in the army of Bengal? It always wants, in a great degree, the effect of example; but it would be a more effectual means in the army of Bengal than in the other two Presidencies, as I rather believe they used to have a number of men always following them, ready and desirous of enlisting.

And the soldier is of a better description? The soldier is a man of high caste; he is a man of large size, a high-caste man, and generally a man of the military class.

Upon a view of the Madras soldier and of the Bengal soldier together, should not you say that there is a superiority in the very look of the Bengal soldier? Yes; he is quite a superior description of man.

In your Grace's time in India were there any grants of land given to the private soldiers in the Bengal army for having served a certain time? There is a pension fund.

Were there not, at a former period, also land granted? I rather believe that, instead of the pension, they were settled upon certain lands.

Therefore the loss of that was part of the punishment of dismissal? Yes, the loss of that.

What, in your opinion, will be the effect of abolishing corporal punishment in the native army, as a degrading punishment, and still retaining it in the European part of the Company's army, and in the King's troops in India upon the discipline of those latter troops? I do not think they will impair much about it. What they call among them an attorney may now and then make some noise about it, but I do not think the troops in general will. The truth is, that the King's troops in the East Indies, are in a very peculiar situation; they are generally in barracks by themselves, excepting where they are assembled in the field; they have not a great deal of intercourse with the natives. Sometimes there may be a native battalion in cantonment with them, but they have not a great deal of intercourse with the native troops. They are kept very much separate.

So that you do not fear much bad effect from that? None. There may be here and there, a question about it, but I do not think it will have any effect in general, they are so distant asunder. The Europeans are generally in cantonments alone. If they are in any place with the natives, there is generally only one native battalion, or something of that sort. (His Grace withdrew.)

Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result; the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them. Greig Thomson, 25, New Bond-street, has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

To A. Rowland and Son, 20, Hatton Garden, London. Gentlemen,—I consider it a duty I owe to you, and to the public in general, to declare the very happy results I have lately experienced from the use of your Macassar Oil. I am now in my fifty-seventh year, and about a year ago I returned from the East Indies, where I had resided upwards of twenty-six years. On my arrival in India, I began gradually to lose my hair, and until last October had been completely bald for upwards of twenty years. About last Christmas an eminent physician recommended me to use your Oil. I accordingly purchased two large bottles; in about a month after I perceived some faint appearance of hair on my head. I continued using it, and I now declare that my head is at present completely covered with hair of a dark brown colour; and although at my years it is usual for hairs in general to turn grey, I likewise assure you that I have not a single gray hair in my head. You have my full permission to make what use you please of the above.

I am, Gentlemen, your grateful servant,

REX v. SALMON.

Charge of the Honourable Mr. Justice Patterson, delivered on this important trial, on Wednesday, the 5th of April, 1826.

The charge against the prisoner at the bar is one, which although it does not affect his life, yet is one of a most serious nature. He is charged by this indictment with killing and slaying Captain John M'Kenzie, and although he is not charged as having malice aforethought, yet he is accused of having caused that death by culpable negligence and want of proper caution, and this constitutes against him a most serious charge, and demanded the serious attention of the jury. The jury would see the drift of the evidence for the prosecution, and it would be for them to decide upon it, after he had pointed out the law upon the case. The law in my opinion is quite clear, and was laid down very properly and fully by the Learned Counsel for the prosecution in his opening speech. It was quite clear that any person, whether a medical man or not, who undertook to prescribe medicine for another, was bound to have due caution and skill, and if he had not he ought never to attempt to cure any person, and if he did so attempt it, being destitute of the above qualifications, and death ensued, there could be no doubt but that he would be answerable for that death. At the same time, however, it should be remarked, that if a patient should die through any unintentional mistake on the part of the medical adviser, and where every due skill and caution had otherwise been used, it would be unfair that on a person dying through such a mistake, the medical adviser should be placed in a criminal bar to answer for it. The jury would judge, if this were the case, what sort of inducement it would hold out to persons to enter the medical profession. The prisoner had, in the course of his address to the jury, alluded to what he called the monopoly of the medical profession. Now with respect to that, there could be no doubt that this monopoly was not intended so much for the benefit of the medical profession itself, as to protect the public. It was at one time supposed, that if a person who was not a regular medical practitioner took upon himself to prescribe for a patient, and the patient died, that he would be amenable to law, simply from the fact of his not being a regular medical practitioner. This was the case. In a trial which occupied some attention some time since, that of St. John Long, it was laid down that if a person, not a regular practitioner, prescribed for a patient, and having the proper knowledge and skill to do so, did his best for that patient, but owing to some unfortunate mistake the patient died, then that person would be no more amenable to the law than a regular practitioner would be. It therefore followed, that although the unfortunate deceased might have died under the prisoner's treatment, yet, if no gross rashness or want of caution had been proved on the part of the prisoner, he would be entitled to their acquittal. With respect to this question, the evidence for the defence was most important; a number of respectable persons had been called, all of whom declared that they had taken large doses of these pills, and had received benefit from them. The prisoner was aware of that fact, and therefore they might justly infer that he believed that equally large doses of the same medicine would be equally beneficial to the deceased. It would be, therefore, only fair in the prisoner to consider whether or not he acted under an error of judgment. If a person had really administered large quantities of a medicine, with the properties or effects of which he was totally ignorant, and death ensued, there could be no doubt but that he would be answerable for causing that death. That could, however, hardly be said to be the case in the present instance, because the prisoner was well aware of the peculiarities and effects of this medicine, and had seen it administered in a great many cases very beneficially. Baron Bayly stated "It matters not in my mind whether the person be a medical man or not. The chief thing is, whether, in administering to the patient, he acted with caution, or with gross want of caution. If a person neglects the patient after the remedy is administered, or acts with gross and improper rashness in the administration of the remedy, and death in consequence ensues, he is undoubtedly liable for it." Now, in the present instance, there had been no want of attendance on the part of the prisoner. He paid regular visits, and made most minute inquiries, and does it that any regular practitioner could have done. The first question which the jury would have to consider was, whether the pills were the cause of the death of the deceased. They must be satisfied of that, because upon it the whole question depended. Then, taking that for granted, they would have to consider whether the prisoner, in administering those pills, had acted with gross and improper rashness, and want of caution. This question would depend a great deal upon the evidence. The prisoner did not appear to have ever represented himself as a medical practitioner, or anything more than an agent for the sale of these pills. He had seen large quantities—much larger quantities than those he directed to be given to the deceased—administered with good effect. Could they, under such circumstances, charge him with gross rashness? The evidence also appeared in his favour. It appeared to have acted throughout with a thorough conviction that the pills would effect a cure, and if that was really the case, they could hardly convict him. That question, however, was for them to consider. Now, with respect to the administration of the pills, it was clear that they had not been given in the manner directed by the prisoner. The medical men had expressed their opinion that the medicine having been exhibited in smaller doses than was directed by the prisoner, was favourable to the deceased. The prisoner says quite the contrary; he says, you did not give the medicine in sufficient quantities; you stopped it from working properly, and that is the reason the man died. If that view of the case be correct, and the evidence for the defence strongly supported it, then certainly it was very unfair towards the prisoner that his directions should not have been complied with. It was also very unfair towards the prisoner that the wife of the deceased should have informed him that she had administered the quantity of medicine he had directed, when it proved fatal she did not choose to say if he had been told by her that she was about to follow his directions in administering the quantity of medicine, and that she had not, or would not administer it, he would have known how to proceed, and he would have had the option of giving up the case altogether, or would at least have been placed more upon his guard; but instead of this he was told his directions had been complied with, and this was certainly very unfair towards him. Still, however, if the jury believed that he had acted with rashness or want of caution in administering the medicine at all, they would find him guilty of the offence imputed to him, but if, on the contrary, they believed that he had acted with due skill and judgment, he was entitled to an acquittal. With respect to question as to whether the pills were the cause of the death of the deceased, they had heard from his wife what his state of health was at the time he commenced taking them. She stated that he had been at sea all his life. About two years before his death he had been attacked with a fever in the West Indies, and had stated that he had taken a great deal of mercury. He ultimately returned to England in July last year, at which time he was represented to be in perfect health. Shortly after his arrival he became acquainted with Miss Lane, who was at his house in the month of September; he at this time appeared to be very much prejudiced against Morison's pills. He ultimately, however, in the month of December, it appeared, was induced to take four of the pills, not on account of any illness under which he was labouring, but merely as an opening medicine. After this, it appeared, the deceased said he felt lighter. The defendant, Salmon, was subsequently introduced, and the deceased's wife stated, that when he first came, he said that he had come to see Captain M'Kenzie, by direction of Miss Lane. He said that he lived in Farringdon Street, and appeared to represent himself merely as an agent for the sale of the pills, and in no other respect as a medical practitioner: he left his card, therefore did not correct where he lived. He was subsequently, it appeared, introduced to the deceased, and told him not to take the No. 2 pills without the No. 1. Now with respect to the composition of these pills, that did not appear to be very clearly made out. They were represented as containing gamboge, aloes, cream of tartar, and assafœtida, and both the numbers were represented as being alike, with a slight difference in their colour. It appeared that the No. 1 was to be taken first, and the use of the No. 2 was to drive off No. 1. This appeared very natural. It was a common thing to take a calomel pill at night, and a draught in the morning to work it off, and this was upon the same principle. This would lead to the inference that the true nature of the pills had not been discovered, because, if they were both alike, and contained the same ingredients, it could not matter which was taken first. However this might be, the prisoner had directed that the No. 2 pills should not be taken by the deceased without the No. 1. The prisoner said to the deceased also, "I have heard that you had a great prejudice against these pills, but they cure all diseases and do a great deal of good." The deceased said he had bought an eleven shilling packet of the pills to take with him to the West Indies; the prisoner looked at them and said they were No. 2, and advised that some No. 1 pills should be obtained from Miss Lane. Nothing more occurred until January, when the deceased began to complain of his knee. Mrs. M'Kenzie stated that she did not know whether her husband actually sent for the prisoner or not; but it would appear, in point of fact, that the prisoner was actually sent for, and this was so far important to the prisoner, as it showed that he did not intrude himself upon the deceased, but attended at his own request when he had already taken Morison's pills, and was aware of their consequences. The deceased, it appeared, requested that the same gentleman should be sent for who had already done him so much good, and the prisoner accordingly went to see him. The prisoner came on the 20th January, and told the deceased to keep in bed and move his knee. He directed that twenty pills should be given. He was to take twenty of No. 1 at night, and twenty of No. 2 in the morning to drive the No. 1 off. The wife of the deceased had, it appeared, only administered ten at night and ten in the morning. The prisoner called every day to see the deceased, so that there was no want of attention in that respect. He did not appear to have represented himself as a medical practitioner. He merely took upon himself to direct the use of this medicine, and in no other respect acted as a medical practitioner. The deceased's wife says, "I gave my husband ten pills only. The prisoner had ordered twenty to be given. He told me to increase the dose. I went on administering the pills, never in the quantity ordered by the prisoner. The prisoner told me, he doubted that I did not give him the proper quantity, still assured him I had." Now, undoubtedly, in this, the wife of the deceased had acted very wrongfully and unfairly towards the prisoner. The proper way would have been to at once tell the prisoner that she would have nothing more to do with him. She was certainly very unfair towards him. She then goes on to state that she continued administering the pills, but frequently omitted to give them at night. It was probably more important that the pills should not be neglected at night than in the morning, because the latter would have nothing to work off if the former were not administered. It was therefore of consequence both should have been given. She goes on to state that the pills caused the deceased violent pain, and he complained, after taking them, of weakness and debility, and thirst in his head. She told the prisoner, and he said she had not given sufficient doses. He said, that he suspected she gave the deceased too much to eat. She said that he could not take anything. The prisoner then replied that the fever would feed her husband quite sufficiently without food. This was undoubtedly a very odd expression; but could they rely upon the memory of a witness referring to a circumstance which occurred three or four months' back, and at a period when she was daily in the habit of seeing and conversing with the prisoner. He was of opinion that statements made under such circumstances should be taken in substance and not literally, and this sort of evidence should be received with great caution. She says, she told the prisoner that her husband had no fever. The prisoner directed that he should take—she did not recollect how many pills, but she was to and five every day. The prisoner said, that he still doubted that she did her duty to the deceased, and said that if she had he would have been by his side before that time. The deceased, it appeared, shortly after this became delirious, and Mr. Gray and Mr. Cummins, the medical gentleman, were sent for. She says, she did not tell the prisoner that Mr. Cummins had been there. He did not administer any medicine to the deceased. The prisoner, at this time, ordered twenty-five pills to be given to the deceased, which he said would compose him. The prisoner came again, and the deceased's wife was sitting by the side of the bed crying. The prisoner told her not to alarm herself, for she did so without reason; things had not yet come to a head, and until they did her husband could not get better. So that the theory of the medicine appeared to be, that all the inflammation was to be drawn to a head, and then worked off by means of the medicine. The prisoner said, if a medical man was called in he would turn him out. That was natural because he was desirous that no person should interfere with his plan of treatment, as it might do harm, and he said so in his defence. The prisoner then himself administered twenty-five pills to the deceased, because he said he doubted whether the deceased's wife would do as he directed. He ordered thirty-six pills to be given in the morning. She only gave him twelve. The prisoner said he would call on Miss Lane and get some more pills, but she told him he should take no more. The prisoner said he should take a hundred if he thought the deceased required them, and that he must pull off his flesh before he could set him up again. The prisoner said the deceased would never get up again if she did not give him the quantity he ordered. Subsequently, it appeared, that some conversation took place upon the subject of the prisoner being a medical man or not, and Mr. Gray is represented to have asked him what he was a medical man, and whether he had his diploma with him. The prisoner is stated to have said that he was a medical man, but it was not usual for them to carry about their diplomas with them. The prisoner is also represented to have said that he was enrolled in the list of surgeons. The prisoner admits that some such conversation took place, but that the purport was quite different to what was attempted to be represented. He said he thought it a very impertinent question to be asked about his diploma, and he replied, not that he had a diploma, but better than a diploma, in a good practice in the use of Morison's pills. He did not pretend to say anything more than a knowledge in the administration of those pills. This was the chief portion of the evidence of the wife of the deceased affecting the prisoner. On her cross-examination, she admitted that she had never administered the quantity directed by the prisoner. She had sometimes given five, ten, and fifteen less, and yet she told the prisoner that she had given him all. The prisoner said that they did not produce the effect he expected, and this would, at all events, indicate that he did really possess a knowledge of the nature of the medicine he was administering. From this evidence, it would be for the jury to say whether the deceased died through taking Morison's Pills or not. Mr. Gray corroborates some portion of Mrs. M'Kenzies evidence. He says, that after some time they asked the prisoner whether he was sure that he was prescribing to a man of unsound mind. This would seem a strange expression to be applied to a person who was merely delirious during an illness, and would naturally lead the prisoner to suppose that he was prescribing for a man who was insane. The prisoner was reported to have said "another dose would do it." By this, of course, he meant would cure the deceased, and not kill him. Mr. Gray speaks to the refusal of the family to allow Dr. Lynch to see the deceased. The prisoner, it appeared, was very anxious that he should see him, and although undoubtedly the family had a right to call in any medical man they thought proper, yet, under the circumstances, he thought it would only have been fair in the prisoner to allow Dr. Lynch to see the deceased. He was, however, refused admittance. Dr. Cummins was next examined, and it appeared that he had several conversations with the deceased, which could not, however, be received in evidence because the prisoner was not present, and they could not either be taken as dying declarations, because, at the time they took place, the deceased did not believe himself to be near his end. Dr. Cummins underwent a good deal of cross-examination relative to the quantity of medicine supposed to have been taken, and the degree of irritation likely to have been caused by it upon the stomach, and the inference fairly was, that the greater the q of irritating medicine taken, the greater consequent irritation uld be caused.

t this juncture, a juryman was taken ill and retired, and on ha returned the learned judge proceeded. He was remark-upon the evidence of Dr. Commings. He had referred to the position of the pills, and expressed his opinion that different antities might be administered to different constitutions; there s no doubt of this fact, and it was part of the duty of a medical e to discover the proportions in which medicine should be ainistered. Of No. 2, which were the strongest, Mr. Cumings states that taking twenty of them would be dangerous, how was this assertion to be depended upon, when they had ord several respectable persons depose to having taken twenty, rty, forty, and upwards of the same pills, and to have derived efit from them.
Dr. Cobb, the other medical gentleman, agrees generally with . Cummins. He expresses his opinion that it was improper to ve administered the pills on the Friday before the deceased d, and when he was rapidly sinking. Now the prisoner says, t he was not sinking at the time. Dr. Cobb admits, on crossmination, that if a medical man is deceived as to the quantity medicine exhibited to a patient, that it would greatly mislead
n. Dr. Cobb also admits, that the exhibition of the pills on Friday might not have caused death, but merely accelerated
That was the case on the part of the prosecution. BUT THIS ENTIRELY NEVER THE EVIDENCE FOR THE PRISONER, in which is proved that much larger doses had been given by the priner himself with good effect, therefore it could hardly be said at he was acting with rashness and a want of due caution in e administration of the medicine. If the jury were of that inion they would acquit the prisoner. That was, however, a estion for them to decide. There appeared to be some doubt nether the death of the deceased was occasioned by taking ese pills. Neither of the medical men spoke positively to that ct; they only stated that they MIGHT have occasioned it.
suming this to be the case, the next question for them to con-der was, whether the prisoner in exhibiting the pills to the ceased acted with a want of due caution or gross rashness. isoner's advice was gratuitous. The evidence is most extradinary as to the beneficial effects of the pills. The learned dge then recapitulated the whole of the evidence for the dence. He stated, that Sir F. Pollock, on the part of the prisoner, d stated that he had thirty-six witnesses to call to character, d although in a case like the present character was not an sential requisite in the defence, yet it was as well to mention at fact to the jury, although it was unnecessary to occupy their me by examining such a number of witnesses. It would be for e jury now to take into consideration what had been stated on e part of the prosecution, and by the witnesses for the prisoner.
ey would first have to consider whether the pills were the use of the death of the deceased, for of that they must first be rtain; and, secondly, supposing that to be the case, whether e prisoner had acted with such gross rashness and want of ution as would justify them in returning a verdict of guilty ainst the prisoner. If you have any doubt you must give the isoner the benefit of it. The jury, after ten minutes' consulta-on in the box, retired for half an hour, to consider their verdict, nd upon being called upon, the foreman stated that they found e prisoner guilty, but recommended him to the merciful consi-eration of the Court in consequence of his not being the com-ounder of the deleterious pills in question.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,
unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.
Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.
Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable adultion to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.
A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in nutrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.
The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found unfailingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.
Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable, it will promote the growth of the hair generally,
PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, sustain it in curls render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the
ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY,
and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are little more or less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the feint animal smell.
The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off, for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.
Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.
N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended in the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

FISTULÆ, PILES, ABSCESSES, TUMOURS, STRICTURES, &c.—Mr. S. J. VAN BUTCHELL, Accoucheur and Surgeon, for the cure of the above complaints, without cutting, caustic, or confinement in the most dangerous cases, Exemplified in a long practice, offers his professional aid to those who may be afflicted, with the fullest confidence of speedily restoring them to health, by his peculiarly successful and expeditious method of eradicating these disorders, even where the usual mode of treatment has failed of remedy or alleviation. Consulted till one daily at his residence, No. 16, Percy-street, Bedford-square.—Persons afflicted may obtain a prospectus gratis, containing a few out of the many cures effected by him on applying to Mr. Coulter, Chemist and Druggist, No. 6, Store-street, Bedford-square.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. HOWARD,
Surgeon Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, continues to supply DEFICIENCIES of the TEETH, on his improved principle, at the same moderate terms, whether arising from neglect, diseases of the gums, or age (from a single Tooth to a complete set), without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, and in every case restoring perfect articulation and mastication. An inspection of Mr. Howard's method will immediately convince those at all acquainted with the subject of its superiority.
Tender and decayed Teeth cured and effectually preserved from further decay.—At home from ten till five.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills, they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.
Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.
Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Hather; E. Edwards; F. Newberry and Sons; W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. (late B. Godfrey Woulfes), 61, Bishopsgate street Without, and Co. (late B. Godfrey Woulfes), 61, Bishopsgate street Without, London; and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.
Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

BRIGHTON RAILWAY (WITHOUT a TUNNEL).—Mr. CUNDY'S PETITION for leave to bring in a Bill for a Railway from the Metropolis to Brighton having been referred to the Committee of the House of Commons appointed to inquire into the relative merits of the various proposed lines for a Railway to Brighton, the Provisional Committee of the Company, formed for the completion of the same, do not deem it requisite to give a lengthened report upon a line already so well known as Mr. Cundy's original Western line to Shoreham and Brighton.
It is at present impracticable to lay before the public the evidence given before the Committee of the Honsecd Commons; but it may be stated with confidence, that the general effect of the evidence given in support of Mr. Stephenson's line, is to show the advantages of Mr. Cundy's line, from which it is admitted Mr. Stephenson has generally adopted his projected line.
Application for Shares may be addressed, post paid, to the Provisional Committee, at the Offices of the Company, 31, New Broad-street. The prospectus will be published in a few days.

BRIGHTON RAILWAY (WITHOUT a TUNNEL).—An erroneous opinion having been formed respecting Mr. Cundy's position in Parliament, he begs to publish the following letter received from the Clerk of the Committee of the House of Commons on the Brighton Railways, which will at once set this question at rest.
"To N. W. Cundy, Esq.,
"Court of Chancery, March 24, 1836.
"Sir,—I am desired by the Committee upon the London and Brighton Railroad Bills to inform you that they have come to the following resolution:—
"Resolved,—That Mr. Cundy be allowed to put in his line, and upon so doing be heard by Counsel in support thereof
"I have the honour to be, Sir,
"Your most obedient servant,
"J. B. ROSE, Committee Clerk."

STIRLING'S STOMACH PILLS, for Health and Longevity.—An eminent medical writer has remarked, and experience has proved the fact beyond dispute, that those who are attentive to keeping the Stomach and Bowels in proper order, preserve health, prevent disease, and generally obtain robust, cheerful, and healthy Old Age. For that truly desirable purpose, STIRLING'S STOMACH PILLS are particularly adapted, being prepared with the Sulphate of Quinine, and the most choice stomachic and aperient drugs of the Materia Medica. They have in all cases proved superior to every other medicine in the cure of stomach and liver complaints, indigestion, loss of appetite, sensation of fulness, sick head-ache, pain and oppression after meals, habitual costiveness, deficiency, shortness of breath, stomach coughs, spasms, worms, and fits in children and grown persons, and all disorders incident to the stomach and bowels. They are also truly efficacious in the cure of colds, agues, asthmas, rheumatism, gout, jaundice, dropsy, and gravel, and an excellent restorative after any excess or too free indulgence at table, as they gently cleanse the bowels, strengthen the stomach, sweeten the breath, cheer the spirits, brace the nerves, induce a healthy action of the liver, improve digestion, and invigorate the whole system. Females who value good health and personal appearance, should never be without them, as they purify the blood, remove obstructions, pimples, cutaneous eruptions, sallowness, &c., and give the skin a beautiful, clear, healthy, and blooming appearance. Persons of a plethoric habit who are subject to head-ache, fits, giddiness, dimness of sight, drowsiness, singing noise in the ears, which indicate too great a flow of blood to the head, should be particular to take them frequently. They are so mild and gentle in their action that children and persons of all ages may take them at any time, as they do not contain mercury or any ingredient that requires confinement or restriction of diet. Many healthy aged individuals, some of one hundred years and upwards, make it a rule to take them two or three times a week, by which they remove the cause that produce disease, preserve their health, and keep off the infirmities of age, retaining, in a surprising degree, all the energy, vigour, vivacity, and cheerfulness of their youthful days. They should be kept in every family as a remedy in cases of sudden illness, for, by their prompt administration, choleric morbus, cramps, spasms, fevers, apoplexy, and other alarming complaints, which too often prove fatal, may be speedily cured or prevented.—Prepared only by J. W. STIRLING, Chemist, 86, High Street, Whitechapel, in Boxes at 13½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each, and may be had of all the principal Medicine Venders in the kingdom.

CAUTION.—It having been represented to Messrs. DELCROIX and Co. Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, that frequent disappointments were occurring to the Nobility and Gentry, in purchasing from shops having the appearance of respectability, counterfeit articles bearing not only similar labels to their own, but even their name and address, Messrs. Delcroix and Co. have taken necessary steps to enable them to expose the parties so [illegible] and they have the pleasure of informing their patrons and friends that [illegible] Injunctions have been granted by the above Court against Messrs. THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Hlsenits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose,) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use: in Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 22A, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and Retail, by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1835, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Steaks, Ragouts, Broiled, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. The only remains of wisdom pertains against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no fancies, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. Sold in bottles, London by S. Hickson, 71, Welbeck-street; Burtsall and Mason, Bishopsgate; and Sam Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand; Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Extract from a letter from a Naval Officer:—"I can with justice say that there was no such convenient piece of furniture on board any ship, being, from its construction, doubly useful in quality of a standing couch by day, and a swinging cot in bad or lurching weather; it moreover occupies less space in a cabin than the ordinary bed-sofas, and, being exceedingly light and portable, is easy to be handled in shifting or taking on shore. My daughter's answered extremely well in travelling after her arrival in India: to fine, it is the best constructed thing of the sort I have ever met with." PORTSMOUTH, April 18.—(From our own Correspondent.) Beacon received orders on Sunday to proceed to the Orkneys for volunteer seamen, and sailed on Monday. Lieut. Block landed in charge of the astronomical and surveying instruments, and has proceeded with them to the Admiralty. Carron, st., Lieut. Dow, arrived on Monday with new raised men. She had some alterations in her machinery and boilers, and on Thursday took a run of 3 or 4 hours to try the effect, and found her speed increased. Lieuts. Castien and Savage, with a detachment of marine artillery, embarked in the afternoon, and the Carron proceeded with them to St. Sebastian. She is to call in at Plymouth. Bellerophon was undocked on Monday, and Pembroke taken in. Bellerophon's marines embarked on Tuesday. Pantaloon returned from Cork on Thursday with 45 volunteer seamen; 26 for general service and 19 for the Hercules. Britannia's tender Gossamer is to take them round to Chatham. Seaflower's tender Cracker, in charge of Mr. Motley, Mate, has seized a vessel of 30 tons, 4 men, and several bales of tobacco, value about 1600*l*. Vanguard, Pembroke, and Bellerophon have entered a considerable number of men, and the weather being moderate, the officers have been able to get on with fitting the ships. Their topmasts are pointed, the cape and crosstrees of the Vanguard over the masts, and some of the lower rigging up to stretch. The Bellerophon is in the most forward state, her lower and topmast rigging having been previously up. She already victuals nearly 400 people. Nearly 700 Marines have been embarked from this division within the last month, and, in consequence, some of the guard houses in the garrison have been shut up. Two steamers are expected from Woolwich to take on board every marine left fit for duty (they amount to 52) and proceed with them to the coast of Spain. Capt. Garmston, Lieuts. Stevens and Parke, are under orders to accompany them. The four divisions are about 500 short of complement, and must send out recruiting parties if the reliefs are to be regular. Capt. C. Scott, R.M., has been surveyed and found unfit for active service. The 7th Fusiliers being only two companies short of their full strength, have been moved from Gosport to Portsmouth, and the 97th depot sent instead. The 7th, 59th, 61st, 68th, and 70th depots are now in Portsmouth, the 97th and 99th depots at Gosport. Ships in port—Britannia, Vanguard, Bellerophon, Pembroke, Excellent, Royal George yacht.

WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD (April 15th)—It is reported to be the intention to build what is termed a "spring chimney," to the new dock, which has hitherto defied the efforts of the first practical men of the day. Although this will be attended with some expence, after the sum expended upon this dock, the utility of the undertaking must be coincided in. On Friday night, the Carron st.-v., Lt. Dow, hauled out of the basin, and dropped alongside the hulk to ship stores, and sailed the next day for the Barbadoes station. On Monday morning, sudden orders were given to rig the Rhadamanthus, which, under the able superintendance of Sir Samuel Warren, was accomplished before twelve o'clock, and the remainder of the day was occupied in getting her ready for immediate service. On Tuesday morning, 7, A.M., Lt. Blount, of the Hermes, hoisted a pennant as her Commander, taking on board with him the officers of the Hermes and men, excepting Mr. Rutley, Mid., the second Engineer of the Pluto (Loveday), and the second of the Hermes (Barber), joining the Rhadamanthus, as also six riggers from the Dock-yard: a Capt. one Subaltern, one serjt., and twenty-five rank and file of Marines. However short the crew for such a vessel, she hauled out of the basin on Wednesday, alongside the hulk in the river, to take in hammocks, &c., and proceed to sea on Thursday morning. There are various reports current; one is, she is going to the North to bring up seamen for the different ships; there is another of her taking 300 men for the north of Spain, and that she will ship more hands at Chatham—the latter is considered most probable. A pennant is still flying on board the Hermes, she being under the command of Mr. Rutley (Mid.), who, however, is going on leave, so that the charge of her will devolve on Mr. Forster, the chief Engineer. In the absence of the hands, a small party of Marines has been sent on board. A number of hands are employed on the Pluto, for re-commissioning; and the Swift, Lieut. Walsh, is getting up her rigging for service. The Fairy, Com. Hewett (b), is all ready for sea, excepting a few hands wanting; she expects hourly orders to get under weigh. The Sovereign transport is discharging Naval stores from Malta; and the Arab transport has dropped down from Deptford, and is now lying off the Yard. Ships in the Port—William and Mary yacht, Fairy sloop, Investigator brig, Firebrand st.-vessel, and Sovereign and Arab transports. In the Basin: Ships in Commission—Hermes st.-v., and Swift brig. Not in Commission—Salamander, Blazer, and Pluto. In Dock—Firefly.

PLYMOUTH, April 14.—At 6 p. m. yesterday H.M. brig Delight anchored in the Sound from Halifax, via Falmouth, where she landed the mail. She had a quick passage out and home; the former but 27 days and the latter 17. Remaining in Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, Talavera, Cornwallis, Minden, Star packet, Tartarus, and Comet st. v., Diligence naval transport.

Several of the Greenwich Pensioners of Greenwich Hospital have volunteered for the Hercules, Sheerness, and were sent there in a steamer on Tuesday.

The Monarch, 4, has proceeded to Pembroke, Liverpool and Forts adjacent, to collect newly-raised seamen.

Lieut. Young, of the Coast Guard Service, at Fort Cumberland, picked up last week, floating into Langstone Harbour, 26 tubs of brandy, with 620 fathoms of line attached, on which were nearly 20 pieces of cork, painted of a leaden colour; to each tub about 7 lbs. of lead were attached, to make it sink to a certain depth.

The Seaflower cutter, Lieut. Roche, has captured the Diana smuggling vessel, with about 200 bales of tobacco (and four men on board), which have been lodged in the Jersey Custom-house.

ROYAL MARINES. (Woolwich Division).—A Captain, one Subaltern, Lieutenant Blair, and twenty-five men, embarked on board the Rhadamanthus, on Tuesday morning last. A serjeant and party were sent on board the Hermes on Wednesday.

"One of the finest 80-gun ships, now building, is actually from the waste sheets of a morning's lecture awey from the studio of Dr. Inman. She is called the Silistria, is building at Nicholaistadt in the Black Sea, is 196 feet long and 53 feet beam."—Hampshire Telegraph.—[The Russians need not have availed themselves of Dr. Inman's labours in this respect, the above being precisely the dimensions of the Bombay and Calcutta of 84 guns, built in India, on the lines of Canopus, and now in ordinary in Hamoaze. The proportions are, however, very different from those of Actæon, the last production of the school of which Dr. Inman was the head. A facetious correspondent suggests, that if Dr. Inman's principle was adopted upon ships intended for stations where there existed no convenience for docking, much expence would be saved as they may be turned keel out without much difficulty afloat. The Actæon, for instance, on leaving Portsmouth harbour, notwithstanding she swam 1 ft. 3 in. deeper than her constructed line (how happened this, so scientifical), heeled over some fifteen degrees, in a top-gallant breeze, and would probably have capsized had not every thing been let fly. Why is it, then, we hear nothing of the performances of this, the crowning effort of the school?—Ed.].

"Independent of the Bellerophon, 80; Pembroke, 80, and Vanguard, 80, being commissioned, there is the Britannia, 120; Ganges, 80; St. Vincent, 120; and Princess Charlotte, 120, all ready at a very short notice, provided men could be obtained. This seems the difficulty, and you would be surprised to see the landsmen, or rather countrymen, that are taken on board men-of-war.—Correspondent of the Courier.—[We have before observed, that the publication of such paragraphs as the above, wholly devoid of truth, are calculated to do considerable mischief. We can confidently assure our readers, that a positive order exists against entering landsmen, or even ordinary seamen, and that many hundreds of them have been rejected within the last fortnight. If any one is incredulous on this point, he has but to satisfy himself by sending a landsman to offer on board the Perseus, off the Tower; we have made the experiment within these forty-eight hours, in favour of a young man, whom we wished to get into the service, without success,—we can therefore speak positively on the subject; and if this is the case in the London tender, it is equally likely that the officers of the ships fitting will receive such men as are described above.—Ed.].

The Cygnet, colonial vessel, has recently sailed for the new settlement, South Australia. Lieut. Field, R.N., took passage in her, and will have the command when she reaches her destination and fixes a harbour.

The Scylla, 16, Com. Carpenter, was paid off on Tuesday, at Sheerness, and in a state of such perfect discipline, cleanliness, and good order, as reflects the highest credit on the officers and crew of this complete man-of-war.

The Nemo, transport, Lieut. Howe, Agent, has sailed this week from Deptford and Woolwich for the Mediterranean, with artillery embarked at the latter place.

The Alonte, transport, at Deptford, when fitted, will proceed on service to Gibraltar.

CAVALRY.

Dragoon Guards—Col. Sir Maxwell Wallace and the ther officers of the 5th Dragoon Guards stationed at iershill, gave a splendid ball and supper in the Edinburgh Assembly Rooms last week, to the nobility and entry of Scotland.

Hussars—The first division march from Hounslow for Dublin, on 12th May. They are expected to arrive on 4th, and be quartered in the Royal barracks.

Lancers—Have marched from Coventry and Northampon, for Edinburgh, to replace the 5th Dr. Guards.

Hussars—Commenced their march on Monday, from Glasgow for Newcastle and York.

Lancers—Have moved from Dorchester, Weymouth, and Christchurch, for Coventry head-quarters. The remaining three troops are at Northampton.

14th Lt. Dragoons—From Dundalk, relieve the 10th Hussars at Glasgow and Hamilton.

15th Hussars—Wednesday week, W. Smith, Esq., Sub-Sheriff, with the aid of Capt. Peel's comp., 94th regt., and a detachment of the King's Hussars, proceeded to the lands of Ballinagreane, to levy an execution for tithes, due the Rev. W. Scott, by a comfortable farmer of the name of Carroll. When approaching the scene, a multitude of country people collected by signal in the fields at either side of the road, and threatened the military if they advanced. The Hussars promptly extended their files, and repulsed the crowd in double quick, but, without coming in personal contact with their assailants, whose numbers augmented every instant, and hence-forward, in their route, every farm-house was observed shut up and closely barricaded. One barn, or cow-house, on the land, was strongly fortified, and full of armed men, whose guns were pointed out through loop-holes in the walls at the Sheriff and his party, but that officer not having information to satisfy him that the building covered any of defendant's property, did not proceed to extremities, in forcing possession, which could not be accomplished without great loss of blood, and, perhaps, of human life. An awkward casualty occurred in their route, by which one of the Hussars' horses received a severe wound. A young gentlemen who accompanied the Sheriff, on the part of Mr. Scott, was pelted with stones by the crowd, one of which struck him, and he resented the attack by presenting a pistol, at half-cock, to deter them, but the shot unfortunately went off, and the ball entered the flank of a cavalry horse; the poor animal, however, brought his rider home, although the ball is not yet extracted.

INFANTRY.

77th—The whole of the reg. are now in Mullingar barracks, under the command of Maj. Wilson; they embarked on the 25th ult., and were obliged to land the following day from the tempestuous state of the weather, and the greater part were ordered into billets, and on Sunday evening they re-embarked and arrived in Dublin on Monday the 28th. The left wing under Maj. Ramsay proceeded the same day on route to Mullingar, and the head-quarters and right wing the following day. The latter were marched to the Royal barracks and inspected by Maj.-Gen. Sir E. Blakeney, and afterwards put into billets. The following officers are on leave of absence:—Lieut.-Col. Bradshaw; Capts. Barry, Raines, Clerke, Fyler. Lieut. Bell left sick at Wigan. A comp. will proceed to Tullamore to relieve a company of the 91st. We have by accident just heard that Captain Raines, in some correspondence, has made reference to this paper. We are perfectly independent of any other journal, and in our notice of the recent Court-Martial in this regiment we were guided by what we consider the facts of the case.

78th depot—1 Sub., 1 Serj., and 30 r. and f., marched from Galway on the 5th for Cork.

85th—Tuesday the Waterloo steamer, Capt. Cotter, left Cork, with a strong detachment of this reg., under the command of Maj. Maunsell, for the purpose of searching for arms and ammunition, plundered from the wreck of the Magnificent schooner. The troops were landed at three different points, where they were met by the magistrates and a body of police, commanded by Capt. Percy; they divided into six parties, and commenced the search under a heavy fall of rain, notwithstanding which they continued their work till 6 o'clock next evening, when they succeeded in seizing a number of muskets, three barrels of powder, some sabres, and in one house 500 rounds of ball cartridges. Lieut. Wynyard is nominated to London rec. dist., vice Lieut. Mayne, 1st.

Middlemore, the new Governor of St. Helena, arrived at that island on the 22nd Feb. last, all well, after a passage of twelve weeks from Cork.

95th—The comp. at Golden moved on the 13th for Birr, to arrive on 16th. The detachment at New Inn to arrive at Birr on 15th.

98th—The transports which took out the 27th were to bring the 98th home, but the ships were found unseaworthy, and have come back empty, and the Governor has thought fit to keep the 98th for some time longer, and there is no certain account of their having yet left the Cape.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—Head Quarters, Woolwich.—Gunner Kelly has been tried by a Regimental Court-Martial arising out of the following circumstances. On Sunday last, Capt. Tomkins, whilst walking on Shooter's Hill, perceived the above-named men wrestling with two civilians, the whole being in a state of intoxication; he thereupon ordered Gunner Bryant, who was on the spot, to take Kelly to the Guard-house, when one of the civilians, named Isaac Goodall (whose companion, John Pasden, as well as himself, are wholesale linen-drapers in Wood-street, Cheapside) interfered, and swore he would hit Capt. T., at the same time thrusting his fist in the Captain's face. He then went to Bryant, and forcibly released Kelly, who ran away. Corporals Watkin and M'Bean pursued and overtook him, when a scuffle ensued with Kelly, at the instigation of the civilians, which induced the man to resist with his bayonet, from which weapon Corporal Watkins received a wound in his hand. A detachment of the Barrack Guard opportunely arrived, Capt. Tomkins having in the interim sent Bryant for their assistance. The civilians, on perceiving them, called out to the mob assembled to rescue the man Kelly, "as the soldiers had served long enough under their military tyrants, and were men like themselves," at the same time giving Kelly five shillings each. A murmur resounded through the crowd, and the military were compelled to clear the passage with fixed bayonets to secure their prisoner. At this juncture Mr. Gibbons, a magistrate resident at Vauxhall, jumped out of his gig, and said, "I authorise you to take those two men also," and they were accordingly marched down to the cells at Woolwich and there detained until the following morning, when they were taken before a bench of magistrates on the charge, preferred by Capt. Tomkins, of the civilians interfering with the military, and exciting the soldiers to mutinous conduct, in addition to the assault committed on himself, when Corporals Watkins and M'Lean, Gunner Bryant, and the detachment of the Barrack Guard deposed to the above facts. The magistrates remarked on this flagrant conduct with much emphasis, and remanded Goodall and Pasden until Friday, to procure the attendance of Mr. Gibbons, the magistrate. The affair has created much sensation in the garrison. Major King's company embarked on board a transport lying off the Arsenal on Wednesday last, preceded by the band of the Rl. Art. for Corfu. The transport will proceed to Dublin, and take on board Capt. Thornhike's company for Gibraltar.—Mr. Alex. M'Key, formerly of the Irish Artillery, and many years the respected Librarian of the Officers' Library at Woolwich, died on Tuesday last at a very advanced age. This gifted individual gave private tuition to the gentlemen Cadets during their vacations. Lieut. Sheppard has embarked for Newfoundland.

ROYAL ENGINEERS—Maj. Dixon has replaced Lieut. Renwick at Jamaica.

A General Order has been issued to the army in Ireland, to discontinue the weekly marches into the country.

Alterations in the Barrack department:—Lieut. Nicoll, of Weedon and Northampton, to Guernsey, Maj. Marly to Glasgow and Hamilton, vice R. Collier; Lieut. Dowling, of Coventry, to St. James's Park, Horse Guards, and George's Barracks, London, vice F. Walker; Sunderland, J. Hay, is attached to Tynemouth, vice T. Downie; Capt. Jefferys is appointed to Coventry.

Lieut. Cooper, Royal reg., and Lieut. Cockburn, 79th, have entered the Royal Military College.

The stoppages of pay for rations to non-commissioned officers and soldiers at Jamaica, which was lower than upon other stations, is assimilated from the 1st of this month.

Gen. Lord Hill held a levee on Thursday, at his office in the Horse Guards, which was attended by Gen. the Duke of Gordon, Lieut.-Gen. the Earl of Cork, Lieut.-Gen. Sir W. Hutchinson, Lieut.-Gen. Sir J. Slade, Lieut.-Gen. Clay, Lieut.-Gen. Meade, Lieut.-Gen. Mitchell, Maj.-Gen. Lord Harris, Maj.-Gen. Evatt, Col. Bursley, Col. Morrison, Col. Shadforth, and several other officers.

The following Depots have received orders of readiness to move towards Cork, for embarkation to England:—27th at Nenagh, 29th at Tralee, 30th at Limerick, 43d at Clonmel, and 60th at Clere-Castle.

The review, which was to have taken place this day at Windsor, is put off in consequence of the very wet and heavy state of the ground.

Maj.-Gen. Lord Fitzroy Somerset, as Military Secretary to Gen. Lord Hill, held a levee on Tuesday at his office in the Horse Guards.

Military Punishments.—A writer in on evening paper, under the signature of Ex Miles, observes, "having served for several years as a private soldier, the subject of corporal punishment too often forced itself on my notice; but I am decidedly of opinion that it would be injurious to the King's service if the power of inflicting it were abolished. There are in every regiment some twelve to twenty blackguards, who spend their time in guard-rooms, black-holes, at extra drill, &c., and this is the squad that supplies the men for the triangles. To discharge them would be bounty to misconduct; they would enlist in another corps, and their places would besides be filled up: indeed, no soldier should be drummed out—transportation is far more operative. These men must be retained, and they must be punished; and, although flogging has not sufficient influence on them, it powerfully checks an increase to their number. It is quite true, that a man who is once flogged is never afterwards the same in mind or body; he carries the marks of disgrace on him to his grave; and, however smart a soldier, he does not look upon himself, nor is he looked upon by others, in the same creditable light as before. I confess also having witnessed this punishment resorted to unnecessarily by officers who regarded it as a standing cure for every serious irregularity, instead of being a dernier resort, like execution. Public opinion is, however, a mighty check on Military Courts and Commanders, but it is none on the soldier; he has lost all self-esteem; he has become a reckless refractory blackguard—the pest of his comrades and disgrace of his corps: yet he must be borne with; and when drill, stoppages, and imprisonment lose their force, there is no other alternative in dealing with him than flogging once and again. I should wish to see this punishment confined to offences of a seriously mutinous tendency; desertion or selling necessaries are evils, but they are not so dangerous as striking a superior officer, gross disobedience, or getting drunk under arms, and this latter offence could be greatly prevented if officers and non-commissioned officers on guard kept a vigilant eye on their men while on sentry or off. One very great evil, occasioned by the existence of corporal punishment, is the bullying disposition it gives to young officers who are desirous of early acquiring the character of being strict. Abusing, swearing, and threatening two or three hundred lashes is a favourite way of talking, with many young gentlemen, on the most trivial occasions; little do they think how deeply such irritating expressions sink, and how injurious to the service it is to see a boy of 16 years insulting, by his manner and language, men who were soldiers before he was born. No officer should sit on a Court-Martial, either regimental or district, until he is 20 years of age, or have served three years at least. The composition of our army is undergoing much change. The political and commercial vicissitudes of the last few years are throwing into the ranks men far superior in education and connexion to the class formerly enlisted; and in the management of the army this change should not be overlooked, for it is calculated to be highly beneficial, or much the reverse. Praiseworthy attention is given to the soldiers messing; a comfortable breakfast and dinner are provided at a small expense, and I would particularly recommend a tea or coffee mess in the evening. This would lessen the means and inducement of drinking, keep the men in barracks, and add much to sociality. I hope the day is at hand when the Government will put down their canteen system, and no longer sanction an infamous public-house in every barrack. Worthless characters can never be kept out of the service, and such men render absolutely necessary the power of inflicting corporal punishment, at home or abroad, in war or in peace. The maximum is fixed, and if only certain offences were punishable by flogging, no man acquainted with the army could complain. Although now in the civil employ of the Government, I feel so deeply interested as to have been led into too long a detail. I rejoice that the subject is in the hands of Lord John Russell, for under his auspices we may expect that every concession will be made to humanity which is compatible with the discipline of the English army."

East India Intelligence.

We understand that it has been decided to give Lieut.-Gen. Sir Peregrine Maitland the appointment of Commander-in-Chief at Madras. Colonel J. S. Fraser, now Resident at Mysore, is to be appointed to the Residency of Travancore, and Capt. Stokes, 4th Madras N.I., to succeed Col. Fraser at Mysore.

Madras papers state that the war against the Rajah of Goomsur was still carried on with vigour, and the strongholds captured by the troops sent against him had been shipped for Calcutta. It was, however, expected that the war would end in the submission of the Goomsur district, although proceedings on the part of the Company's troops were rendered very difficult from the nature of the jungles, and influence of the climate upon them.

Sir Charles Metcalfe was expected to return to England as soon as he could receive intelligence of the appointment of a new Governor-General.

We learn that in the Lahore District the Ulemler portion of the Rajah's troops, had shown some disposition to mutiny, the cause of which was the non-payment of their arrears; they were, however, satisfied on receiving the amount due to them.

His Majesty's 38th regt. will embark for England in a fortnight. The Herefordshire is one of the vessels engaged to take the troops.

Hansi still continues in a most unhealthy state, both European and native inhabitants experiencing the baneful effects of the climate. The order for the removal of the 21st N.I. to Kurnaul is a judicious measure, as it must have proved extremely satisfactory to that brave and distinguished corps.

Several fatal cases of cholera have occurred in H.M. 9th regt., now encamped on the Plain south of Fort William, in consequence of which Government have given orders to expedite the works at Chinsurah, the removal of that regiment having been delayed until the repairs of the barracks at that place are completed.

It is rumoured that H.M.'s 13th Light Dragoons, the 3d Light Cavalry, two brigades of guns, H.M.'s 53d Foot, and the 31st Light Infantry, are required to be ready at seven days' notice, for some especial purpose at Kurnaul.

An order has passed Council for the immediate erection of a jetty opposite the Custom-house, to extend several feet beyond the cranes now used in landing heavy merchandise, and to go to a draught of water sufficient to admit of ships of 500 tons lying alongside of it to discharge cargo. Its construction is entrusted to Capt. Fitzgerald, at an estimated cost of 5 lacs of rupees.

Among the orders in the Gazette of Dec. 10, was one that Lord W. Bentinck's rule of qualification for Staff Appointments in the Army has been cancelled by the Court of Directors, and that the more rational and less restrictive rule laid down by the Court, which his Lordship superseded, has been revived.

The rule restricting Majors from commanding any but their own corps is about to be annulled, and officers of that rank may hereafter be appointed to the command of a regiment.

In the General Orders of 18th Nov., the Commander-in-Chief passes some severe strictures on the dress of officers in the Indian army. He observes, "that he cannot pass the public drives about the city, without observing military caps worn with citizen's plain blue frock coats, the capes of jackets turned down in a most unsoldierly and slovenly manner; at the theatre, officers in undress jackets, without sash or sword, or anything to indicate that they belong to the Army; and he has seen more than one officer in the morning with sash and sword on, and shoes with bows of ribbon."

THE INVENTION AND IMPROVEMENTS OF ARTILLERY.

(Translated from the French.)

EVERY country has had its epochs in the improvement of its artillery; and as regards the improvement of the manufacture of gunpowder, the making of fire-arms in general, and of military tactics, military men cannot too thoroughly be acquainted with the works of Berthollet, Monge, Gribeauval, Hassenfratz, La Martilliere, Gassendi, Scharnhorst, Hoyer, Lespinasse, Unterberger, Morld, &c. &c. To this series of writers upon the science of artillery, we yet must add the name of Moritz, a native of Switzerland, who invented, in the commencement of the 16th century, a machine for casting cannon, which was able to run them whole, rendering them more solid.

In earlier times, when artillery had not arrived at any degree of perfection, and when it was considered that the greater size of the piece should be its chief merit, in many countries, cannons of the most enormous calibre were made, as that at Malaga,* 24-pounder, whose report broke the windowe; the great gun of Milon† which carried 9000 paces; that of Marseilles, 100-pounder, and for which it required 60 man to remove it from its carriage; the cannon of San-Giago in Portugal, which was tried before King Don Sebastian in 1571. This was a 90 pounder and carried 1600 paces; also many others; but the difficulty of using and transporting them from one place to another made them soon abandon these gionts of guns, whose only service was that they were subjects of curiosity.

The first cannons were made of wood, surrounded with cloth and rings of iron, and extended in a conic form towards the mouth of the gun. It was not till later they received the cylindrical form, and were made of bars of iron. Towards the end of the 14th century, they made use of copper and pewter, and afterwards of other metals. A founder of Lyons, of the name of Eymery, contrived a double cannon. They were 4 pounders, five feet four inches long, cast together, and with one touch-hole for the two. One Fentry, a lawyer, of Lyons, invented also a cannon of bronze, which could be separated and divided into a number of pieces, and by this means easy of being moved from one place to another. Gustavus Adolphus used pieces of tanned leather, which invention is attributed to a Baron Melchior de Wurmband. The following is the description which Archenholtz gives of it in his history of Gus. Adol. "The entire machine," says he, "consisted of a large pipe of copper, beaten very thin; the chamber was of the same metal; and it was strengthened by four strong iron bands and thick cables and cords as far as needful, and to keep the machine in the form of a cannon. The whole was covered with hides or any leather coloured according to fancy, and oftentimes decorated with gilding. It could be discharged repeatedly without requiring to be cooled or washed out;‡ besides, it was mounted on a carriage so light that the whole might be drawn by two men wherever they required it." The Swedes, however, only made use of it during 3 years, from 1628 to 1631.

The invention of cannon is also lost in the annals of antiquity. Some give it to the Chinese; others to Albert the Great, Bishop of Ratisbon. He possessed such profound learning in mechanics and natural philosophy that his contemporaries took him for a sorcerer. Pope Alexander XIV. gave him the bishopric, and after having held it during 2 years he took refuge in a convent at Cologne, where he devoted himself entirely to the sciences, and died in 1280. As this epoch, however, does not coincide with the first discovery of Roger Bacon's of the detonation of sulphur, nitre and charcoal, and appears to be before the time that Berthold Schwartz had made such improvements in the invention, ons is in the right to consider this supposition as hypothetical. But admitting, from the records the most authentic we have been able to obtain, that the invention of cannon did take place in the 14th century, and that they were employed in breaching walls; it appears it was a considerable time before they were used as a deadly weapon against man. General Servan tells us§ "that in 1380 the celebrated Carlo Zeno returning from Constantinople and commanding for the Venetians, having used cannon against the Genoese, in a battle near the town of Chiozza (Tossa, Claudia) all Italy cried out against this, what they called a manifest infraction of the laws of brave warfare."

The invention of cannon also has undergone, like all productions of the human imagination, changes; and it was not until after a considerable time, and with a slow pace, that perfection approached this branch of the service, and that it was used with judgment and advantage.

The number of pieces employed on the day of battle has been a subject of great variation also. At the battle of Fornoue, which Charles VIII. gained over Francis de Gonzague, Duke of Mantua, the King had taken with him so much artillery that he was much embarrassed when he wished to pass over the Alps;* losing all hopes of the power of transporting them, he wished to spike them to make them unserviceable to the enemy; but not to deprive the army of their principal force, the Swiss offered to convey them by their own strength over those places where the horses were not able to drag them, which they performed with success.

At the battle of Gravelines which the Count D'Egmont, commanding the army of Phillip II., gained over the French commanded by the Marshal de Thermes; the Spaniards had, on the contrary, only 17 pieces of cannon. At that of Ivry, the French Army, which was 8000 infantry and 2000 cavalry, had only four pieces of cannon and two culverins. That of the League was 12,000 foot soldiers and 4,000 horse, and had only four pieces. Gustavus Adolphus had, before Francfort, upon the Oder, a train of 200 pieces of cannon, great and small. At the battle of Breikenfeld, he had 100, and at the Camp of Nuremberg 300 cannon.

Later armies have become more powerful, the trains of artillery increasing according to the number of troops; and we see the quantity of cannon employed carried to an enormous extent. In 1812 Napoleon entered Russia with a train of artillery of 1372 pieces,† and consequently more than two to every 1000 men on active duty. In fact, the improvements made in cannon were the means of attaching a greater number of the army; for in diminishing the hitherto enormous weight of guns and their wheel-work, it facilitated the transporting of artillery; and the pieces having become more moveable, can be more easily used, and also upon more difficult ground.

* In the work it is called La Serpentine, and it is translated a Serpent; but Serpentine is a kind of marble. I presume it is the name of some place, and the gun christened after it; but as I have no books of reference to assist me, I have written it as above.

† Same as above; it is called La Pimentalle.

‡ Francheville, on the contrary, in his history of the last campaigns of Gust. Adolp., tells us, page 218, "The greatest merit of these cannons was their being able to be moved easily about on the day of battle; as for the rest, they had the inconvenience of heating too quickly, in such a manner, that after 10 or 12 rounds they were obliged to be left to cool.

HONORARY DISTINCTIONS—THE ROYAL GUELPHIC ORDER.

SIR,—In one of your numbers, a few weeks ago, I observed a letter on the subject of the recent nomination to the Royal Guelphic Order, in which it was stated that the writer had been unable to trace the public services of some of the Naval officers who had recently obtained it. If this be the fact, the situation of those persons will not be to be envied whenever they may put on the insignia, for of all the painful mystifications to which an officer can be subject, I know of none equal to that of appearing in honours which his conscience must tell him that all who behold them know that he has never merited, and that, consequently, he must have acquired them through some unjust representations which had been made to the FOUNTAIN of HONOUR by some over-zealous but most unwise friend.

Amidst those, however, whom I am sure the whole service will admit to have deserved the distinctions, though they have not yet received them, you have, I am glad to find, again alluded to the name of the Captain of the Banterer, who with so much address, skill, and courage too, executed the delicate and important duties entrusted to him by Lord Exmouth previous to the Battle of Algiers. In addition to this officer's name, I could add that of the gallant Commander of our squadron within the Bar of Oporto during the siege of that city, who displayed on every occasion during the long period of his holding that highly responsible situation, a zeal, tact, and temper, united to the coolest bravery in constant scenes of danger, which might have been equalled, but I am confident never was surpassed. And lastly (for where numerous names might be found whom the Gazette Letters of various Commanders-in-Chief show to have so well merited this mark of their Sovereign's favour it may appear almost invidious to particularise two or three only), I must include that of the late Commandor of the Dartmouth and the Rose, who, if any Captains at the Battle of Navarino were entitled to the honours of the Guelphic Order, these had, indisputably, a high claim to this distinction. As regards the letter, the memorable words of his Commander-in-Chief upon a public occasion soon after that battle must be fresh in the minds of all his professional brethren. When alluding to the extraordinary acts of gallantry shown by the Commander of the Rose, Sir Edward Codrington observed, "I only lamented that the age of CHIVALRY had passed away, and that I had not the power of knighting him on the field of battle!" Testimony like this must impress every one with the merits of the officer who called it forth, and I am well convinced, from my knowledge of the justice of our beloved King, that it only requires that services similar to those to which I have before alluded should be brought to his Majesty's notice, in order to ensure to the gallant men who have performed them that reward which is looked to as the highest that a subject can receive, the marked approbation of a gracious Sovereign.

‡ Guichardin, in his History of the Wars of Italy, tells us, when Charles VIII. crossed the Alps, the strength of his army was 18,000 men and 140 pieces of cannon.

† History of the Expedition of Russia, by the Marquis of Chambray.

Having offered my opinions on the high claims of the out officers referred to, it may be right that I should declare hat two of them I have not even the most distant personal equaintance with, and that the other two I have not seen r above fourteen years:—the same I may add of a fifth stinguished officer, now an Admiral of the Blue, who, ough he commanded a line-of-battle ship in the Battle of openhagen, and gained the most flattering commendations Lord Nelson, is not yet even a K.C.B.! That this ust have arisen from accident alone I cannot but believe, e modesty of the gallant Admiral having most likely pre-nted his urging his universally acknowledged pretensions this honour, from his considering, in all probability, that e regulations which were formerly rigidly observed in one the Continental Courts, I believe ie that of Prussia, under e great Frederick, are (or ought to be) in force in every lier, and that, if any officer used any private influence hatever, to obtain a military distinction, that he was for er excluded from receiving it!

That we may yet see this salutary regulation established all countries, whereby military insignia will no longer e at so low a discount, is the sincere wish of your very bedient servant,

AN ADMIRER OF HEROIC DEEDS, AND A WARM FRIEND TO THEIR HEAD JUSTLY REWARDED.

ON THE MANNING OF OUR SHIPS, THE ADVANTAGES OF A REGULAR PAYMENT OF ALLOTMENTS, AND ALSO THAT OF THE SEAMEN'S PENSIONS TO THEIR FAMILIES.

SIR,—It has been with great concern that I have learnt hat our Seamen do not come forward, as it was confidently oped they would have done, to complete the complements f the ships recently commissioned. That there must be a ause for this unwillingness I fear is too true. It becomes, en, the duty of those who wish well to the Navy, and to eir country, to endeavour to discover this cause. As a ose observer of passing events, my belief is, that one of the incipal reasons that our seamen, who have families, do ot like to enter on board our ships of war, arises from the ar that by doing so their wives and children will for many onths be compelled to seek relief from their parishes, ecause their allotments, instead of being made payable mediately, as they ought to be, are not paid for a long riod. I recollect, Sir, that you most laudably and most ly called attention to this important subject, about a year r two ago, and I think you particularised the cases of the Canopus and Forte. I hope that you will again offer some bservations on the still objectionable regulation regarding llotments, and that you will further advise the payment of e pension, likewise, of those seamen who are entitled to ese rewards, by at least quarterly, if possible by monthly, stalments, to their wives and families; for the knowledge at those who are dependent upon them for support are com-rtably provided for in their absence, will, I am assured, ove the strongest incentive towards causing our gallant ilors to re-enter our Navy. I would humbly suggest, en, that the enlistment bills should be headed with these tisfactory assurances:—"PENSIONS PAID TO THE WIVES D FAMILIES, IF DESIRED, EVERY QUARTER AT FURTHEST, D ALLOTMENTS DULY PAID EVERY MONTH."

31*st March*, 1836. CHRISTUS.

[We have elsewhere offered a few comments on this tter, but our correspondent is in error in imagining there such hesitation with our seamen in coming forward. We ree, however, with Corineus that every reasonable inducement should not only be provided, but made more generally own, and the placards are hardly sufficiently explicit for e purpose.—Ed.]

COAST GUARD SERVICE.—(LETTER VIII.)

SIR,—It is difficult to say to whose immediate organisation cutters have been left since their transfer from the Admiralty, but we can scarcely suppose that a sailor or sailors s ur have had anything to do with it; and, as regards the tablishment of stores for each of them, the stretch of sagacity displayed in forming it is singular indeed. Can it e credited that a cutter is not allowed a studding sail, although it must or ought to be known by these wiseacres hat there are only two particular points of sailing upon which she principally excels other vessels, and the best of those points should, of course, be always made, viz. by the wind, and directly before it; nor is she (I speak from known instances) allowed those essentially necessary spare ropes or canvas upon which her very safety often depends, as well as the lives of all on board; they are not, for instance, allowed spare jib sheets, nor rope to make them; and if, in case of emergency, the Commander was to cut up a hawser, his only alternative, the probabilities are his accounts would be stopped, or the amount of it charged against his pay. With respect to spare canvas, too, when a sail requires repair, (which, in a cruising cutter, is frequently the case after bad weather,) she has to run into port, and is there detained for days perhaps in order to have an estimate approved of for a tradesmen to do that which, if the spare canvas was allowed, might be effected in an hour or two at sea, as there is generally, if not always, an expert sail-maker on board; but Captain Bowles has not, I believe, anything to do with the stores, which are left exclusively to the Surveyor of sloops; and this power in his hands, and the mode of supplying them, are two of the greatest evils which exist in this Service, in so far as regards unnecessary expense and delay; but more on this subject anon.

I will now annex a copy of the form of the sailor-like log-books ordered to be kept on board the Revenue cruisers, and you must, I think, in candour admit that it is an improvement upon that of those kept on board ships and vessels of war, and adopted by the Admiralty:—

| Winds. | Stations or Cruisers communicated with | Whether by Signal or otherwise. | Bearing and Distance at Day-light. | Bearings and Distance at Noon | Bearings and Distance at Sun-set. | Time. A.M. | Time. P.M. | REMARKS. |

You talk, Sir, of revenue cutters being signal beacons, but you now see, from the description of logs directed by the Board to be kept, that, if they venture for any considerable distance out of sight of land, they are lost, as in a fog. As to where they are, if running from the land in chase, or driven off it by stress of weather, must be all guess-work; there is no column to mark the distance run, nothing to indicate the course steered, and, certainly, if, by some bungling, a cutter be stranded, from an improper course steered or distance run by the officer of the watch, or through the direction of the Commander, there is no record to show on whose shoulders the blame should rest, and his Majesty's Revenue cruisers may be lost and many of his liege subjects drowned with impunity; for no person or persons can go into a reckoning where there is no data to judge from nor tangible evidence to go into, every bearing and distance at day-light, noon, and sunset, when out of sight of land, must be fixed by calculation or guess, a very loose method it must be admitted, but there is no other alternative. Should a cutter be ordered, on a case of emergency, without delay, to Lisbon, the Mediterranean, or West Indies, God only knows how she would find her way thither, or when arrive, because all the guessers on board would certainly be puzzled, after being out of sight of land for a week; the Commander would, of course, have to resort to his own ingenuity and resources, and to keep a log and a reckoning of a little more seaman-like and scientific description.

I have already stated my belief that the Comptroller-General of the Coast Guard has nothing to do with the supplying of stores; nor can he, I am inclined to think, controul the delays which are constantly occurring in forwarding them to the different out-ports and stations as required. It will naturally be inferred that the quantity of stores required in a service of the magnitude of the Coast Guard, including cruisers, tenders, and stations is immense, and the cost very serious to the country. Hence, Sir, it becomes a very important consideration to supply the best and cheapest, and in such a manner as that the operations of the Service shall be in no way retarded, but the stores from time to time received as they are wanted, good and efficient in kind, suited in all respects to the purposes for which they are demanded, and with a sufficient check upon the contractors to compel them to exchange instanter such of a contrary description as they might, and often do, attempt to supply. This can only be effected by entirely changing the present mode of supplying stores to stations and cruisers for every officer in the Service, particularly such as have anything to do with cruisers, must allow that stores of a very inferior description are, in a manner, palmed upon them; that the delay which too frequently occurs betwixt the demand and receipt of these stores sometimes forces him, especially in the case of cruisers, wh the Commander, in his praiseworthy zeal for the Servi in accelerating the departure of his vessel from port, to alternative which would probably subject him to transpo ation; that the operations of the Service are checked, a the Crown made to suffer considerably thereby.

But to make good my argument, I must first state that greater proportion of the stores required for the Co Guard is contracted for in London, and are supplied no the superintendence of the Surveyor of sloops; these st have, therefore, to be forwarded thence, generally by wat ned it is an unusual circumstance for some of them not be received for months after they have been demanded. believe the contract is given to the London tradesmen, cause their prices are a shade lower than those of country; but the crown benefits nothing by this system, it is most certain that the stores are frequently, if not ge rally, proportionably inferior in quality; and it is no taken into account that cruisers may be detained in harb for weeks waiting their arrival, they being of such a descr tion as cannot be done without. The process of procuri stores is this:—demands in triplicate are forwarded to t Coast Guard office; these then go to the Surveyor of Sloo office for his sanction, and afterwards to the Board of C toms, whence, after being mislaid or lost for some ti amongst their Honours' immense accumulation of pape an order goes to the tradesmen to forward them. Now tradesmen's convenience is to be consulted;—there may, there may not be, a coaster on the spot ready to sail; that is considered of little importance at head-quarters, tradesmen, therefore, ship them when it suits their pleasure and convenience, and after, perhaps, a protract voyage, they at last come to hand, at times, too, a little worse for the treatment they have, ad interim, received, dependently of their doubtful quality in the first instan I have stated that three demands are sent: one of these returned, and when the supply of the stores is complete the Inspecting Commander of the district, the Commande of a cruiser, and one of his deputed officers, in the case cruisers, and the Inspecting Commander and Chief Offic in the case of stations, have to certify "that they are, every respect, good in kind, and perfectly fit for the Co Guard Service, or otherwise, as the case may be." No Sir, how stands the case? Simply thus; these officers never refuse the stores without the probability, nay, c tainty, of involving themselves in a tedious and troublero correspondence, and most likely, after all, a decision gi against their judgment; and the fact is, if they do consci tiously refuse a certificate, they will find that the tradesm have sufficient influence somewhere to pass their bills wi out it, thereby turning so wholesome and necessary a che upon fraud into a complete farce. But, Sir, this is not worst part of it as regards officers in command of cruise You are perfectly aware that in the Navy every officer from his boyhood, taught never to make difficulties when services are required; so, in the case of a cruiser, the Co mander would be set down as a sort of easy, happy-lucky, jog-trot sort of fellow, who would not resort to ex dients, and at whatever risk, too, in order to make up the Board's and its dependants' delays, rather than lie i by. The consequence is, some of the most active a zealous are induced to anticipate the supply of stores fr London, by going to tradesmen on the spot, and gett such of them as are absolutely required to go on with equipment of their vessels, with the understanding th when their stores were received from town, these tradesm should be repaid in kind. You will readily allow, S that it is a sorry alternative for an officer to be reduc to such shifts, and a somewhat dangerous one, t for however praiseworthy might be the inducement th to barter the King's stores, he would come badly of of such a transaction, should an instance of it be pro cuted against him; and, were a little malignity thro into the scale, and the worst made of the case, his zeal the service, or his desire to get promptly to sea, would, fear, in this service avail him little. I could adduce an stance where a cutter under her annual refit did not rece the whole of her present use stores, i. e. those stores absolutely required to go on with, until six weeks after had gone to sea; and instances are on record of cruis being detained in harbour for weeks for a few fathoms rope.

There are, certainly, depots at the various rendezvous cruisers, but they in course of time become exhausted, the fresh supplies to them from London are just as tard forwarded as are those to the cruisers and stations.

Now, Sir, to keep to my text, I will give you a proof the all-powerful influence of tradesmen in the sacred head-quarters in obtaining a decision against officers. must state that a spar was sent to one of the outports, when it was necessary to convert it to its intended purp it was found defective. A survey was, as is necessary such cases, held upon it, and it was, of course, condemn Off went the report of this survey to London, and the re was, the spar was ordered thither, where a second sur was held upon it, and by whom?—why, by London trad men, who pronounced it good, and thus was issue joine London [illegible] Naval [illegible] ner, however, to a certain extent prevailed, inasmuch as latter's report of survey was sent down to them to re-. Revise, indeed! revise what they had declared they e ready to attest on oath! No, no, Mr. Editor, this was er too much to be expected of them as men of principle honour, and they positively refused to alter either their ion or their report; the spar was, however, I have been rned, actually paid for, and the cruiser detained in port ng the contest, and until another spar could be supplied ieu thereof.

could advance another instance where a particular de-ption of stores was sent to a cruiser, which, on receipt, found defective, and, consequently, no certificate signed it. This brought on a sort of angry correspondence, and n expedients were tried to fix the blame of the defect some party through whose hands it had passed by the veyor of Sloops, that it would almost induce a belief that ud a personal interest in it. However, no person out London could be found to father the fault upon, and the le in question had to be sent back to the person that plied it, but not to remain quietly with him, nor yet to another sent in lieu. No, faith! the same identical the Government was compelled to take, for it was fled up and returned to the outport. Suffice it, in con-lon, to say, it was afterwards used but once, when its inal defect again broke out, which tendered it totally rviceable, and it was subsequently quietly condemned he annual survey of the cruiser's stores, and no more about it, for it would have been perfectly useless on the of the officers to attempt taking any further steps in the ter. I am credibly informed no joint certificate was given for it. I calculate these would be nice nuts for to crack, Mr. Hume.

s regards the stores for stations, it is truly absurd to see ires of cartridge paper sent from London, at, probably, ying of a penny, when the Board has, in most instances, y twopence or threepence to have it conveyed by a car-s cart from the port where it arrives at to the particular en it is destined for; this is economy with a vengeance! Why are not general contracts entered into at the out-s to supply the necessary stores without delay or unneces-additional expense? Were this mode adopted, there ld be no occasion for an accumulation of stores in depot ne of which frequently lie rotting there for years); the ntity required could thus always be readily obtained, and e found defective promptly rejected.

MANNING THE NAVY.

SIR,—The die then is cast, and we are now actually at R! so says at least Lord John Hay's letter. It is , the old formula of "Declaration" has been dispensed ; but this change of system is perhaps in the spirit of rm; whether or not, we have thus stolen a march on continental neighbours, or, in the [illegible] nautical phrase, n them "Scarbro' warning" only, and it now remains e seen what part of the forthcoming tragedy Russia, tria, Prussia, and even France herself will perform in grand spectacle. No matter, the first act is allotted to kind we must show ourselves alert in filling up the com-ment of performers on board our recently commissioned s. This, as yet, is being but slowly effected; first, ause there is no great surplus of seamen at home beyond demand of the Merchant Navy; secondly, the merchants, ive to individual interests, have increased the monthly of seamen, and now pay, I understand, 3*l.* or 4*l.* a th; and, thirdly, the old man-of-war's men, who would the individuals most likely to abet the King's service, mostly worn out; and twenty years' peace has produced w race, who only know the Royal Navy by report of t it was in its most objectionable days, and are there-bited in a measure by prejudices which only the know-e of what the service really is can overcome. And, y, this is the season when our merchant vessels are ting England for the distant colonies, consequently the and for seamen will increase daily. These difficulties, o way of manning our ships of war, must be met and ercome; the talisman for which is "Bounty," and a bounty, too, as will insure the services of what fair men are still available. In this scale of inducement the ilor should be classed with the mechanic; the ordinaries labourers, and landsmen with novices; to the first a ty of 3*l.* or 10*l.*; to the second, 6*l.* or 6*l.*; and to the 6*l.* or 4*l.* on entering, or in each like proportions, for n able seaman is worthy of a higher rate of remune-tion than an ordinary or landsman, and they should be e to know that such appreciation of worth does actually at head-quarters. Without some such inducement, it vain to open rendezvous at the sundry outports, as the at race of seamen will not enter the Royal in prefer-to the Merchant Navy; for with all our ameliorations your service, still the restrictions incident to a man-r will have an influence in directing the choice of those not fully to appreciate the superior advantages h the latter service tenders to men of their class over [illegible] carried from the Civil service. [illegible] before them restriction to fulfil ships for five years certain, whether they tire of their officers or station, long absence from home, confinement on board, and indispensible discipline. On the other hand, constant change of ship and climate, short voyages, or at all events limited, more than enough of shore, and a lax system of government, prevalent on board merchant vessels, which puts little or no curb upon insubordination, and makes the subordinates insolently independent of their officers. With these reflections of present gratification, men of the volatile character natural to seamen must have something more than future advantages to induce a voluntary surrender of self-control for even the limited term of five years, especially after seeing that there is no security in the promises of future reward, as exemplified in annulling the pensions of Warrant Officers' widows; for it is from among the crews of our ships that selections are made for the station of petty officers, and from among them again the most deserving are advanced to the rank of warrant officers, wherefore confidence must be restored, and that boon of futurity which the fatal Order in Council of 1830 alienated from the widows of warrant officers must be re-established; that pension was the pole-star of merit, and your warrant officers are the staff of the Navy. Meritorious seamen look as naturally for advancement to the stations of petty officers, as Midshipmen and Lieutenants do for promotion; and the petty officer again, seeks as the reward for continued good conduct to become Boatswain, Gunner, or Carpenter, as the case may be, according to his station on board. And this is highly proper and judicious: any daviation from the system, even among Gunners* (as I have heard it whispered) will prove immeasurably detrimental to the well-being of the service; and if, on attaining this their ultimate rank, they shall have no other than the temporary advantage afforded by good health, for so long as it lasts, to be afterwards discarded in decrepitude, on an inadequate stipend, deprived of the consolation of there being in store for the widow, whereby to support the children, that pension which the service has for ages hitherto allotted, how can we hope for the services of superior men? Let us then shake off the trammels of parsimony, and assume the garb of liberality; for the blindness of fatality, if persevered in, will assuredly lay prostrate the hitherto matchless Navy of England. Men must be had, and the cost of pounds, shillings, and pence, will be found infinitely cheaper than the ill-blood of compulsory service, which must be resorted to as the substitute; and these are no times for the invasion of Civil liberty. Break a warrant officer, and what does he lose? The Merchant Service will pay him full as well, or better, and he has no widows' pension to lose.

10th April, 1836. AN OLD SAILOR.

[The observations of our respected Correspondent are, as usual, excellent. He appears to have been led away, however, by the fallacious reports which have been so industriously circulated, as to the indisposition on the part of seamen to come forward, which statements we have elsewhere confuted. Bounties do not appear to be called for on the present occasion; and this being the case, it is prudent to reserve them and other inducements for more pressing conquences.—ED.]

THE ENTERING OF SEAMEN FOR OUR NAVY.

SIR,—As the columns of the Naval and Military Gazette are those in which the public look for TRUTH and for FAIR on every subject on which it treats, may I beg to ask of you the EXACT state of the case as to the willingness or unwillingness of our seamen at this period, to enter our ships of war. The immediately opposite statements which have just appeared on this subject, lead me to put this question. The Globe of last week represented that out of the 2,500 men required, above 1,500 had already entered! whilst a Portsmouth paper of about the same date, the 2nd of April, declares that the entry of seamen for the three line-of-battle ships commissioned at this port, goes on so slowly, that it is expected Government will be obliged to have recourse to the efficient Greenwich out-pensioners to complete the complement of the whole eight sail of the line." From Plymouth also, I learn, that the same scarcity of sailors exists, and that the ships are stated in the principal journal of that town, "to be getting manned but slowly;" and, further, that a vessel that was sent to the out-ports for men, only brought four seamen from Milford. If this difficulty be found to man but EIGHT sail of the line, what will it be when we have to man SIXTY-EIGHT and more? 'Tis time, then, to look about us and discover the real causes of this evil, if such does exist, as I am grieved to fear is too truly the case, and, without a days' delay, to apply the remedy. A member of the House of Commons has told me that he will, at the earliest opportunity, move for a return of the number of men actually belonging to each ship on the very day month after such ship was commissioned, in order to ascertain positively the important fact which I seek to learn, and which is of vast national moment, as we shall find whenever a war begins. A LOVER OF FACTS.

[We again repeat that we can vouch for the truth of what we have asserted. The ships might have been manned ere this, had not the officers been strictly ordered to observe great caution and circumspection in receiving such men as present themselves. Not a landsmen is admitted. The paragraphs which have appeared regarding the difficulty said to exist, are without any foundation, and we are at a loss to conceive the motives which could have produced them, or to account for the mistrust of our esteemed correspondent in our statements, which have never misled him. Spite of the increased wages and the competition of ship-owners, in fitting out the spring fleet, together with the advance which has simultaneously taken place in every thing, the seamen, particularly those who have tried both, prefer the King's to the Merchants' service, and enlist as fast as they arrive in our ports.—ED.]

THE EXPECTED BREVET.

SIR,—It has been for some time past confidently rumoured that a Brevet on a limited scale may take place during the present year, in both Services. It is also said that an equalisation will be made regarding the rank of Colonel and Lieut.-Colonel, many of the latter having served 20 years, and some even 22 years in that rank. There are at present in the Army List but two hundred and seven full Colonels;—in the Navy there are seven hundred and twenty-two Post Captains holding the rank of full Colonels. AN OLD OFFICER.

AUTHOR OF "TOM CRINGLE'S LOG."

SIR,—In a note at p. 204 of the United Service Journal for February, 1836, the writer of a valuable paper, begs the question as to whether Capt. Hall is not the author of the "Tom Cringle's Log," in Blackwood. This, and the "Cruise of the Midge," by the same hand, have been attributed to Professor Wilson, who, admirable in his way, cannot seriously be thought likely to pen such bonâ fide Naval sketches. But the real author of both these works bears a name of wizard power, i. e. MICHAEL SCOTT; and this I know from some West Indian friends, to whom he has presented his last work, "The Cruise of the Midge," and who, showing me the volumes, told me the name of the writer, their friend, and mentioned the mistakes of the public concerning the author of these Naval and W. Indian romances. B.

PRIZE MONEY AND NAVAL APPRENTICES.

SIR,—I perceive by No. 160 of the Naval and Military Gazette that on the 3rd ult. his Majesty was graciously pleased in council to settle the distribution of prize money for the different grades employed in any of his Majesty's vessels. There has occurred a very great omission in a very important branch of the future defence of this kingdom, which, from your usual perspicuity, I cannot attribute to yourself, but from an oversight in the department drawing out the relative rank for the approval of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, previous to submitting them to the King. Now, Sir, it appears very clear that, according to the regulations, we cannot have Naval Engineers without their first being apprentices, three years of which time they serve on board, and one year in the yard, and if on examination, at the expiration of four years, they are found competent, they are made "Junior Engineers." This being the case, I cannot for a moment contemplate that during their initiating into "the mystery and practice of the craft," they are to be excluded from every participation in that bounty which his Majesty bestows on the gallant defenders of the country. And I am the more confirmed in this opinion from the circumstance attending their "order" in obtaining their rank, dress, and emolument, arising from the Court-Martial on Capt. Pigot by Lieut. Walker, which elicited the disagreeable position in which these then civilians were placed, which induced Sir Edward Perrott, Bart., to call Lord Auckland's attention to it, suggesting their present rank, classification for prize money, &c. Their wearing a uniform particularly specifying "The Apprentices," to be classed in such distribution with boys of "the first class." His Lordship approved of the whole measure, conveyed his thanks to the proposer, and adopted it. These are facts well known at the Admiralty; therefore I cannot imagine how this omission has occurred which you will allow is very essential to "the boys," and should be rectified. Therefore I claim your interest in their behalf, nor will the favour of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty be ill bestowed on them, for their conduct has been approved of generally throughout the service, and, with a just pride, they consider themselves of such hereafter importance to this new branch of national defence, that they hold no intercourse with the men before the mast (several of the apprentices are the sons of old and meritorious officers). I shall conclude with the hope that although "the Stoker" has been considered entitled to prize money for animating the fire, still the "apprentice," who is to direct the energy of the steam is not to be unrewarded for the hazard of being "blown up, or scalded to death!" ## To Readers and Correspondents.

We have not lost sight of "An Old Naval Officer," but we consider it a great failing among Naval men that they will continually contrast their positions with those of the Army. We admit most freely that many ranks in the Navy are shamefully ill paid; but we do not know one in the Army to be overpaid—quite the contrary. We have taken the best course to meet the views of "Belisarius," from whom we hope to hear further.—We have the narrative on "Military Punishments, &c." under consideration. The case to which "Vindex" calls our attention is a monstrous one certainly, but many such were rife at the time. A ship originally built in a King's Yard for 21,000*l. to cost* 3,000*l. for repairing in a Private Yard, appears on the face of it very like a job. We shall make further inquiry, but cannot publish "Vindex's" letter, which is too personal to an honourable member, who could have had little or nothing to do with matters of this kind* 30 *years ago, when he was, we believe, a Clerk, and not a Shipwright's Apprentice, in the aforesaid Yard.—We are obliged to "T." and will avail ourselves of his communication next week.—Capt. # Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, APRIL 16, 1836.

The letter of An Admirer of Heroic Deeds, which will be found in another part of this day's impression, renders it necessary that we should offer a few additional remarks on the distribution of Honorary Distinctions. That our excellent King has the earnest desire to render strict justice to all we are most perfectly satisfied; but, as our correspondent infers, it is the fault of the responsible Advisers of the Crown when the distinguished and universally admitted services of officers are not brought under the Royal notice, for were they so, there cannot be a doubt but that they would at once meet their well deserved rewards. The case of the gallant Flag Officer, alluded to by the writer in question, is one particularly in point; in referring to the different data, to which we at this moment have access, we think Admiral John Ayford is the officer meant, who, if we mistake not, did command a line-of-battle ship in the memorable action of Copenhagen, and consequently must, we humbly deem, be well entitled to some mark of his Sovereign's approbation, the more especially so, as we believe he is the only Flag Officer upon the list who commanded a ship in a General action that has not received some honourary distinction. With the Admirer of Heroic Deeds we perfectly coincur, that it is only when Military decorations are conferred on men who have really and truly deserved them, that these insignia become valuable, either to the possessors themselves or in the eyes of the public,—separate the associations of gallant achievements from those "outward and visible signs" of merit, and what do they remain, merely so much tinsel and silk! It is that these emblems carry with them the proofs, as it were, that the officer thus honoured has signalised himself in his country's service, or in the service of the crowned head that has conferred these insignia for gallant deeds in war, that they command respect and regard:—remove this impression, and let it but be believed that our own or foreign insignia are no longer confined to men who have been distinguished in actions with the enemy, in the field, or on the deck, but that the very same Military orders of merit, of other states, have been given as a reward for entertaining a Sovereign at dinner, or a breakfast, or for some other equally insignificant cause*, and the true value of all such honours are at an end. There was a regulation made, we have heard, at the close of the last war, by which it was established that no foreign order would be allowed to be worn by an officer, unless it had been conferred for actual services against the enemy. Why, or wherefore, this rule was departed from we have never seen explained. It has been told us, that its being discontinued, by which so many foreign orders have made their appearance since the peace, was the original cause of the present absurd fashion of officers seldom or never wearing their decorations of merit but at Court, instead of as formerly, and as is still done by all foreigners, their wearing them on all occasions when in full dress. If we might be permitted to offer our humble advice on this question, we would say, that those who feel and know that they have well and truly won the honours they possess, should at once revive the good old custom, and no longer appear ashamed, as it were, to put on, on all proper occasions, that which they have so gloriously gained by gallant deeds against the enemies of their country; indeed, it might almost be said to be regarded as an insult to the Royal hand which had bestowed these honours, that of those on whom they had been conferred, omitting to wear these insignia when they ought to be put on.

This fashion appears to us the more extraordinary when followed by persons, many of whom we ourselves know have for weeks, and months, and even for years been using their every influence and every effort to obtain these distinctions, and yet, after they possess them, they affect to set no value on the prize which they have gained. It is time that this affectation should be overcome, for affectation after all it evidently must be; and we hope these remarks may have an influence in effecting this object; the more so, when we repeat, that we are sure the truly gallant and deserving officer will no longer be ashamed to wear the honours which a Gracious Monarch has bestowed upon him, as a token of his Royal sense of that officer's merits; and we are sure that every officer will feel tenfold pride in doing this, if the old Prussian rule be adopted with us, and that no private influence, or interest, be ever suffered to recommend for Military distinctions.

We earnestly hope to see the two professions always closely assimilated in every way, in the distribution of all those marks of Royal favour, and thus to put an end to every invidious feeling which even but a seeming preference to either must be sure to create.

In the intelligence from India, referred to in our last number, in regard to a Regiment refusing to allow Corporal Punishment to be carried into effect, be true, that state of things has come to pass there which every reflecting person saw at once must undoubtedly result from that most extraordinary Order of the late Governor-General of India, which, by partially abolishing Corporal Punishment in the Indian Army, created a distinction the most invidious and mortifying to the British soldier. The sleeping Lion has been at length aroused, and the Europeans are awakened to a sense of their own degradation, and to those feelings that must necessarily spring from the consideration that,—whilst the Native troops (over whom they, of course, look down), who are employed with themselves on the same stations, on the same duties, are paid by the same employers, are exempted from the lash,—the British soldier is still liable to that infliction. Is this a distinction of which a Briton can or should boast? or rather does it not make the punishment more odious than ever? Can any one be surprised that British soldiers, so placed, should come forward and declare that they would not be subjected to a punishment that is considered too cruel or too degrading for Natives? If the following statement be correct, what must be the state of mind of the European soldiers in India, how often must this matter have been discussed among them, how deep must the sense of injustice have sunk into the minds, before a corps, remarkable for its steadiness and discipline, should have taken the step reported, a step that is, in point of fact, a direct and substantive act of mutiny; no consideration of the mode of doing it, however outwardly respectful, can divest it of that character:—

"A soldier of the 13th Dragoons, stationed at Bangalore, being about to be tried for an offence which was known would subject him to corporal punishment, the privates of H.M. 39th regt. of Foot, sent an intimation, through their Serjeant-Major, to Major-General Hawker, commanding the Mysore division, to the effect that, should the sentence be corporal punishment, they would not allow the man to be flogged,—alleging, as a reason, that Lord William Bentinck had abolished flogging in the Native Army. General Hawker permitted the trial to proceed, and has forwarded the sentence to England for consideration."

A Regiment of soldiers constitute their Serjeant-Major their spokesman, and send him to the General Officer commanding the Division, to signify to him their determination to interrupt the course of justice in a neighbouring corps; for such, to all intents and purposes, was the case of their communication. We are told of the course of proceeding adopted by that General Officer, in those circumstances; but, without offering any opinion on that course, we may remark that there are Officers of that rank who, in place would have conceived it right to act very differently; who, whatever they might have thought of the abstract justice of the demand to abrogate so disgraceful a distinction, would have resented it, so put, to the last; would have insisted on the common course of proceeding, whatever it might have been, going on in regard to the case occasioning that movement; who would have confirmed the punishment, if awarded; would have insisted on its execution; would have made the remonstrating Regiment witness it; and who would have laid dead at his feet the first man who dared to interfere with, and oppose him in the lawful exercise of his duty. And had such been the case, on whom would have been the blame, and to whom would the blood, so shed, have been justly imputable?

The Duke of Wellington, in his clear and straightforward answers to the Parliamentary Committee on the question of Corporal Punishment, (replies which must be the admiration of every soldier, and must be convincing to every man of common sense,) speaks of the position of the

* We remember to have heard of an instance of an English officer carrying back to a foreign sovereign the insignia of an order, which had been conferred by that monarch on a relative of the officer in question, and who had recently died; when the royal personage at once bestowed the same military order upon the bearer! although he had never rendered the slightest service to that crown, in any shape or form; and, to add to the absurdity, permission was obtained, through some channel, for the officer alluded to, to wear this insignia in this country. So much for the value of foreign Military Orders of Merit! at least that of the one in question, and which was formerly prized by our military heroes of the Peninsula, who had been distinguished in countless fights.

een soldier in India as be remembered it thirty rs ago. Very different, however, is that posi- now! the mistaken and mischievous policy congregating large masses of Native troops at ad-Quarter stations, where one, or as at Banga- , two European Regiments are stationed, is a y different state of things from that described his Grace. Add to this, the different state of the as it now exists in that country—formerly, ry measure of authority passed sub silentio, no dared to question their propriety or doubt ir justice; now, everything is openly discussed the public papers, and commented upon fre- ntly in no very measured language. These ers are furnished to every canteen, and read or in every soldier in it; there is no lawyer required to awaken them to a sense of an ust or an injurious Order.

The Duke of Wellington told the Committee, told them truly, that Corporal Punishment is considered by British soldiers as in itself dis- eeful or degrading, whilst he showed clearly it it cannot be dispensed with. What, then, ll we say of the policy of that legislator who, ble as he was to appoint, but unwilling, as by own answers he has shown, to abrogate this ishment in the European body of his Army, contrived to make its continuance more than harily disgusting and odious, and to give it t character of disgrace and degradation that it till then been free from in the minds of those oxious to its infliction. But if the Order was tself most unjustifiable, what shall be said of mode and time of issuing it. The local Com- nders-in-Chief at the subordinate Presidencies e fully aware of the danger with which it was ught; every Officer of any experience saw it; opinions of the former were disregarded, those the latter not asked; and, as nearly the last of his power, the Governor-General and Com- der-in-Chief sowed, with a reckless hand, the ds of discontent, leaving his successors to reap deal with the harvest of mutiny they were tain to produce.

His Lordship had formerly witnessed one tiny in India, the result of misrule; he there- wisely resolved not to abide a second storm his own brewing. On that occasion he was ng and inexperienced, and he acted in concert h, and in deference to, the opinions of his mili- y coadjutor in Council, the Commander-in- ief; in the present, he was determined there uld be no sharer with him in the harvest of ar applause, to which alone he looked,—a ry desire to be held forth (as in the fulsome guage of Asiatic adulation he has, at public tings, been so praised) as a man whose liberal d was far in advance of even this liberal age, need him easily to put forth (while he himself safe from its consequences) a decree replete h injustice in its essence, and with danger and iculty in its operation; it is not likely that his rdship will be suffered again to misgovern any our distant territories, if indeed, after all he done, we shall long have to govern that country ich he has lately ruled; he may be exonerated m all responsibility for what he has done, but et he not be always held morally responsible the anarchy, the mischief, and even the pro- ble bloodshed his last act was so strongly calcu- d to produce.

f the feeling said to be felt in the Thirty-ninth against that Order does exist, we may be assured it exists equally in all the European corps in India. What, then, will be the position of authority there? must it do that which the Legislature here hesitates in doing? can it do so in direct defiance of the Articles of War, and Acts of Parliament on which those Articles are founded? and ought it, putting these considerations aside, to do so at the demand of the Soldiery? Yet, if it does not so yield, how can it enforce the punishment that is still the law for the Europeans? They will not lend their aid to its infliction, nay, we see they threaten to interpose and prevent it among each other. Shall we call on the Natives to see it enforced? Shall we army them against the Europeans? God forbid! that attempt, whatsoever its results, would be destructive; if ineffectual, what contempt would reflect on baffled authority; and if effectual, would they not learn a lesson they ought never to be allowed even to think possible; in either case, interminable hatred and bloodshed must be the result. The question is one of equal importance and difficulty. The matter cannot remain on its present footing; even although the report may not be altogether true, yet the mere chance, to say nothing of the likelihood, of such an occurrence happening, is too dangerous to risk. Yet how is the remedy to be applied! Can the boon be taken from the Native? or is the British soldier in India to be placed in a position that is denied to his brethren in England? or must that point be at once yielded, in defiance of the opinion of the greatest military authority that it is absolutely necessary for the preservation of order and discipline?

The question which has been so long under discussion, respecting the Admeasurement of Tonnage, in conformance with the act lately passed, has now assumed a strange aspect. Our intelligent correspondent A. C. informs us, that the Committee, appointed to report upon the feasibility of ascertaining a ship's tonnage, had no intention of establishing a rule either to give her true capacity or displacement, but one which should preserve the relative value of the comparative index, which pointed to the increase or decrease of our trade. In other words, that they should still adhere to a false mode of admeasurement, in order that calculations made upon the reputed number of departures and arrivals within the year, may not be interrupted. This is a curious admission, and accounts for the pertinacity with which the Committee adhered to the term "Tonnage," as if every article which formed a ship's cargo, did not vary in weight, presuming it to occupy the same bulk or space.

The examples of ten vessels measured in the port of Dartmouth, stated in our paper of the 3rd instant, are sufficient to show that both the old and the new mode of admeasurement differ considerably from the true burthen of the vessel, and we have always thought that the new plan was little better than the one so ostentatiously superseded. Why we should, for any purpose of estimating trade, go on calculating upon false premises, and even enact new rules to maintain such fallacy, is incomprehensible to us. It is nearly twelvemonths since, in commenting upon this very subject, we laid down a plain rule, applicable to general purposes, for estimating a ship's capacity, and that none ascertained, and registered, with the dues fixed accordingly, a cargo, composed of any material (assuming the weight of every commodity to be known) could easily be arranged. This we proposed effecting by disregarding the arbitrary term tonnage, or, indeed, any other term describing weight, and substituting a term representing capacity. The vessel would then be taxed according to her capability of stowage, and the builder would be at liberty to construct his ship according to the form best suited for the purpose for which she was intended. We recollect reading some letters shortly afterwards, complimenting us upon our disinterestedness in giving publicity to so obvious and unobjectionable a mode of measurement; but our only object was, and still is, to point out the utility and indeed the necessity of framing and adopting some fair mode of estimating a ship's burden, that should secure a just contribution to the taxes levied thereon, and at the same time leave the builder at liberty to avail himself of the best form which was judged proper for the trade the vessel was intended to be engaged in. Such is the desideratum required, and it appears we have made but little progress in attaining it by the adoption of the new law.

We are glad to find that, in the debate in the House of Commons on Monday last, an officer, General Sharpe, boldly put the question as to the appointment of a Retired East India Captain to the rank of Major-General, and that he followed up the opinion, thrown out in this Paper, that the appointment was an insult to the old officers of the service, and that, at all events, the rank should have been confined to Persia. In looking over the list of officers of the United Service, who have got into Parliament, we can scarcely describe our feelings at the apathy they exhibit on all subjects that affect the general interests of their brother officers:—they are ever ready to come forward in matters that personally concern themselves, or those who have Parliamentary influence, but in all other cases the pretenders are silent, or conveniently absent. Indeed, we are much inclined to think that the interest of the United Service would be in a better position if nine-tenths of the Naval and Military men, now holding seats in Parliament, were ejected, as their secret connivance at injustice to their brother officers is a blind to independent members, who, in many cases, might advocate a different policy. An analysis of the proceedings of every Naval and Military Member during the two last Parliaments, would, we should think, be an exposure productive of much future benefit. General Sharpe should press his inquiry, though this subject does not suit those who tell us they are always advocating, in the House of Commons, the interests of the Army, but who we know, whether Tory or Whig, have not the honest courage to step forward in support of any oppressed individual. The whole tenor of their Parliamentary career is the proof of our assertion, and upon this point there is no mistake.

In the House of Commons on Thursday last, Lord W. Bentinck stated, "that our empire in India depended upon the support of a Native Army! the allegiance and attachment of that army was not what it has been." If any proof be wanting to confirm the statements so repeatedly made of the certain consequences of neglecting any longer the Indian Native Army, it is here furnished. We are to suppose that the injudicious curtailments of the few advantages of the officers and men, which have created such universal disgust, arose morom the instructions from home, than the personal cliuntion and approbation of the Governor-Ge-eral:—at oll events, his Lordship has recorded s opinion, which completely bears out what we ve repeotedly odvanced; aod it now remains for to see whether the Government of England, the oard of Control, and the Court of Directors will inely allow the most important Colony to be, to l intents oud purposes and for ever, sacri-ed. That n general disgust exists throughout Indinn Army is the fact, and Lord William entinck ndmits, and voluntnrily states, that the legiance is not what it was. He took upon himself aholish flogging for the purpuse of conciliating e mon, but had his Lordship also recommended system of reward, of pensiou, and an order of merit

r gnod conduct to the private,—had he so far m depriving the officers of their few advantages ntrasted with the civil service, stated that re-nchment was necessary, but that, in carrying it o effect, a complete recision would take place nongst all ranks of Civil or Military Servants of e Company, taking into consideration that the k, the services, and pay of the latter had hitherto rne no proportion to the former, he would have xcited a feeling of gratitude and attachment roughout the Army; whereas officers and men e alike disspirited and dissatisfied,—what must the result?

The honourable Member for Tynemouth seems des-ed to experience nothing but mortification this Ses-n; his Parliamentary tactics have been bad, and he is aking considerable leeway in the estimation of the use. Last night, after a long incubation, he brought rth his observations respecting Capt. Symonds's ships, l received such a setting down from Mr. C. Wood, e Secretary to the Admiralty, Adm. Sir C. Adam, and her Naval Officers, as must have been anything but reeable. Mr. Wood very properly told him that per-ns who were far more competent to form an opinion an the subject had expressed themselves in terms of gh commendation upon Captain Symonds's principle, d in favour of his ships; and thereby gently insinuated t it would be well for the honourable Member to cone himself to such matters as he understood. Mr. ung has the reputation of being a ship-builder, but if ch be the case, no ship-builder that ever we heard of sesses, or professes to possess, such varied talents, we believe there is no subject brought before the use, upon the merits of which the hon. Member is not epared to give a decided and unqualified opinion. The servation of Sir G. Clerk struck us as strangely incon-tent, for if a Naval Officer of acknowledged talent ld be found, gifted also with a knowledge of the art ship-building which, whatever may be said, is proved be superior to any hitherto made apparent, his profesn should rather be considered an inducement to select n, than be held up to his prejudice. It will be seen by e debate, that our statements respecting the volunteer-for the Navy are most fully confirmed.

Our Naval readers will be pleased to find, that the vernment of a Colony has been at length bestowed on a Naval officer, and that in the person of the ecmed Sir John Franklin, than whom, a more amia-e and highly-gifted individual does not exist; every velope the resources of the important settlement of an Diemen's Land, where he will supersede Colonel rthur, who retires after ten years' command.

We have much pleasure in announcing the promotion three old and deserving Mates in this day's Gazette.
Mr. Melreux, of the Royal Adelaide, who has passed even years; Mr. Young, of the Talbot (son of the te highly esteemed Admiral) passed eight years; and Mr. Booth, late Mate of the Challenger, who, by his pirited and gallant conduct in swimming through a heavy surf with the lead line, was the means of saving the lives f the whole of the crew of that vessel, when wrecked the Pacific. These are all highly creditable to Lord minot. Hon. Mr. Eden's promotion is the haul down va-ncy of Sir Thomas Williams, and not the act of the irst Lord.

The letter signed Corineus, which appears in another rt of our impression, we deem well to merit the attenion of their Lordships of the Admiralty. About eighteen months or more ago, as our correspondent reminds us, we offered some observations on the subject of the allotments, and we think we at that time particularly alluded to those belonging to two ships which had sailed from Plymouth—the Canopus and Forte.
Until we saw this question revived, with great spirit in the Plymouth Journal, we thought that the evil complained of had been remedied; but we find, that as yet this is not the case. The present Board of Admiralty will, however, we are satisfied, upon being shown the facts, cause the necessary amendments to be made without delay, as they cannot but see the strict justice of the demand; and as regards those assurances which Corineus suggests should be given to our seamen, we perfectly concur with him in the opinions he has expressed, and we would therefore earnestly submit to the consideration of their Lordships that the Enlistment Bill should at once be headed, as our able correspondent advises, with the imposing words —"Allotments, and pensions also, when due, will be regularly paid at the end of every month, to the wives and families of the seamen: and, moreover, faith regarding all pensions, will, henceforward, ever be rigidly and sacredly kept." Let this be but tried, and we confidently foretel its complete success.

Our Portsmouth correspondent reported last week the probability of Captain J. N. Taylor, C. B., being the next for the Ordinary at that port, on the faith of a rumour which prevailed. We should be glad to hear it confirmed; for we recollect this officer serving, with great distinction, upon the north coast of Spain, during the last war, most gallantly cooperating with the Duke of Wellington's army; and he was severely wounded, by the bursting of a shell, at the siege of St. Sebastian, whilst serving on shore in one of the breaching batteries. Indeed, his recovery, which was a tedious one, was considered miraculous at the time. We do not think this officer has been employed since, although repeatedly promised; and the nature of the late appointments, where the majority consist of officers who have no other claim than their services during the war, must naturally lead claimants of similar pretensions to indulge in the hope that their turns may arrive next. Of these, we know of few, who are able to serve, whose appointments would do more credit to the First Lord's or the Admiralty's discrimination, than that of Captain Taylor; and we hope the expectation, which the rumour must have excited amongst the gallant officer's friends, may be realized.

An order was issued from the Admiralty a short time ago, directing that all officers on surveys should have their names erased from the ships' books upon which they had been entered as supernumeraries, and put upon half-pay.
Amongst the few exceptions to this order one was in favour of Lieutenant William Allen, who was appointed to assist Captain Bullock in the survey of the Thames and Medway. It will be remembered, that Lieutenant Allen was sent by the Admiralty, in Lander's last and fatal expedition to the Niger, and as a reward for his severe privations and sufferings, and the ability with which he discharged an arduous duty under such trying and unfavourable circumstances, he was ordered to be promoted to the rank of Commander, to qualify him for which he was appointed to Captain Bullock's survey, his time not having reckoned while in Africa. Lieuteant Allen's chart of the Niger, upon a reduced scale, is now in the hands of the Admiralty engraver, and will shortly be published, but we have not heard any probable time fixed for the publication of his journal, which is still under restriction.

Letters were received in Edinburgh so late as Friday evening from the noble veteran, who continues to reside at the family seat in the vicinity of Paisley. His Lord

Chapel, Glasgow, on Sunday last. The penny-a-liners who have copied from our publications the services o his Lordship have therefore been paid in advance by tha portion of the press countenancing such dishonesty. I is really time that the stamped, as well as the unstampe press should be put under restrictions.

British Auxiliary Legion.—"Head-Quarters, Aranguez, March 29.—Two two men, convicted of seducing some soldiers of the Legion to desert to the enemy, paid the forfeit of their crime yesterday on the scaffold. Cordova having expressed a wish that the troops of the Legion should be present at the execution, the flank companies of every regt. of inf. and the two regts. of Lancers were ordered for that duty. By ten in the morning they moved from their cantonments, under the command of the Adjut.-Gen., Le Marchant, who was accompanied by some of the staff. On reaching the city the troops piled arms in the Plaza Nueva. At half-past three they were formed in hollow square in the Plaza Veiga, and shortly afterwards the muffled drums announced that the culprits were approaching that 'bourne from whence no traveller returns.' Escorted by a company of the Urban Guard, they moved towards the fatal spot between two Carmelites. The fatal scene was soon over. As each man was launched into eternity the assembled multitude shouted 'Viva Isabel Segundo'—'Merran los traidores!' The English troops preserved a death-like silence. Death was instantaneous; and, notwithstanding the multitude present, there were but few women. The conduct of the priests, who administered the last consolations to the culprits, was marked by the most disgraceful levity. With the exception of the troops of the Legion, there was only one company of Spanish infantry present. The policy of this may well be questioned; but it was the order of the General-in-Chief, Cordova.

Vittoria, 1st April.—This day the Lancers were reviewed: their appearance was good. Cordova reviews the whole Legion to-morrow. ## Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, 12th April.—Lord Duncannon moved the second reading of the Constabulary Force (Ireland) Bill. The Bill, he said, was nearly the same as the one introduced last session. The Earl of Haddington denied that this Bill was in any way similar to that of last session. Lord Harrington contended that although the details were somewhat different, the principle in both was the same. The Duke of Wellington remarked, that the expense would be nearly 200,000*l.* a-year more than under the existing system. He also objected to the amount of patronage with which the Bill would invest the Government. The Earl of Wicklow would propose one or two amendments in committee. The Earl of Winchilsea expressed his determination to oppose the 10th clause in committee. The Marquis of Londonderry should feel it his duty, unless great amendments were made, to oppose the Bill on the third reading. Lord Lansdowne urged the propriety of depriving the constabulary force of their votes. Lord Melbourne was hostile to such an exclusion. With respect to the expense of the proposed system, he did not think it would exceed the amount at present incurred. The Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed on Tuesday next.

Thursday, 14th April.—Several petitions were presented against the Irish Municipal Reform Bill.—In answer to a question from the Marquis of Londonderry, who inquired whether the order issued by Lord J. Hay, dated Santander, March 24, was issued with the sanction of Government, Lord Melbourne said that instructions had been given upon it, and that he had no objection to their being laid before the House.—The Marquis of Londonderry alluded to the destruction of the statue of King William, and complained that Ministers had not exhibited a proper feeling of indignation on the subject. Lord Melbourne stated that the most prompt measures had been taken to discover the perpetrators.—The Earl of Haddington moved for certain returns connected with the constabulary force in Ireland for the year 1834.

Friday, 15th April.—The Marquis of Londonderry moved for a copy of the instructions from the Admiralty to Lord J. Hay. Viscount Melbourne thought the motion directly inconsistent with every notion of public confidence. The Marquis of Londonderry wanted to know to what extent this country was pledged with respect to the war in Spain. Lord Melbourne hoped the House would not co-operate with Don Carlos by insisting upon the production of these instructions. There was no doubt but the country had pursued the strict line of neutrality. The Government felt, that upon every consideration they were bound to put an end to the war as soon as possible. The Marquis of Londonderry wished to ask whether France was a party to the new arrangements? Lord Melbourne said, having refused the instructions, he would not give the contents of them.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 11th April.—Several petitions were presented among them one from Woolwich praying for the abolition of corporal punishment in the Army.—Sir A. L. Hay brought forward the Ordnance Estimates. When compared with those of last year they exhibit a diminution of 52,610*l.* The whole of the resolutions were agreed to without opposition.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer informed the House that on the 29th inst. he hoped to bring forward his financial statement for the year.—Mr. Robinson said it was his intention to move a reduction of the marine stamp duties.—Sir G. Strickland amused the House by inquiring what course the Government meant to take in consequence of the outrage committed in Dublin on the statue of the Monarch of "glorious, pious, and immortal memory?" Lord Morpeth had received no official details on the subject.—Mr. Hume inquired what progress had been made by the Commissioners appointed last year to inquire into the civil establishment of the Ordnance? Lord Howick hoped before the end of the session to lay the report on the table of the House.—The House then went into committee on the Army Estimates. On the motion that 106,211*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* be granted to defray the charge of the volunteer corps, Mr. Hume opposed it, on the ground that these corps were used for party purposes. The House divided—ayes, 53; noes, 9. After some conversation, the rest of the resolutions were agreed to.—General Shaw wished to know from the Noble Lord whether e statement in the Gazette, some time in Feb. last, th respect to the appointment of a retired Captain of e Company's service to the local rank of Major-eneral in Asia was correct. If so, it was an appoint-nt which greatly outraged the feelings of old officers the service. He hoped the statement was a mistake, d that it should have been Asia Minor or Persia. rd Howick hoped, as he was not acquainted with the o, that the hon. and gallant gentleman would put the estion to the President of the Board of Controul.—o House resumed.

TUESDAY, 12th April.—Mr. TULK asked whether y orders had been forwarded to India for restricting or ally abolishing the liberty of the press? and was in-med by Sir J. C. HOBHOUSE that no such orders had n given.—Mr. P. THOMSON, in answer to a question m Mr. G. F. Young, stated that it was proposed to tpone the measure regarding pilotage until next year. Lord J. RUSSELL was not prepared with a reply at moment as to whether Capt. Sartorius would be tored to his rank in the Navy. The matter would, wever, be taken into consideration.—Mr. EWART ved to bring in a Bill that (in cases of intestacy, and the absence of any settlement to the contrary) landed perty should, like personal property, be equally divided ong the children or other next of kin of the deceased. s object was twofold; first, to assert the principle , when the deceased had been silent as to the distri-ion of his landed property, the law should not injustly, is (Mr. Ewart's) opinion, even cruelly, presume in our of unequal distribution. The next was, to make extend the channel for the conveyance of rents be ow of personal property. Mr. HUME seconded the tion. Mr. TOOKE strenuously opposed, at this time, principle of the Bill, and after some discussion the lery was cleared for a division—for the motion, 29; inst it, 45.—On the motion of Sir W. MOLESWORTH, eral papers relative to the removal of Lord Bradenell n the 15th Hussars were ordered to be laid upon the le. He gave notice that he would call the attention the House to the subject on the 3rd May.—Mr. ME, in pursuance of his notice, moved for a return of expense of the Metropolitan and City of London lice for the last year. After some observations from T. Freemantle, Mr. C. Ross, and Col. Sibthorpe, motion was agreed to.—On the bringing up of the ort of the committee of supply, Mr. HUME protested erally against the whole system of the Ordnance esta-hment, and went into a detail of the various items of enditure, contending that all, or nearly all of them ght be very materially reduced. Sir A. L. HAY ught Mr. Hume's recommendations, if adopted, would only be injurious to the service, but in the end lead reat additional expense. Some further observations e made by Col. Anson and Sir T. Freemantle, r which the several resolutions were agreed to, and report received.

WEDNESDAY, 13th April.—A multitude of petitions e presented upon different subjects.—Mr. HUME in-red if there was any truth in the report that Colonel hur had been relieved in his duties as Governor of n Diemen's Land, and was informed by Sir GEORGE EY that Colonel Arthur was about to be recalled, and a successor had been appointed in the person of Sir n Franklin.—The House resolved itself into a com-tee on the Mutiny Bill, and Major FANCOURT availed self of the opportunity of bringing forward his motion the total abolition of flogging in the army. Captain NERO seconded the motion. The proposition was osed by Mr. C. FERGUSSON, who contended that as h had been done towards the abolition of the practice ogging in the army, by restricting the punishment to s of absolute necessity, it would be unwise to take the authorities the power of inflicting it at all. He d that, although the power of inflicting corporal ishment had been much limited already, it was the ntion of government to limit it still further; but as rded its total abolition they were opposed to it, and in opinion they were supported by almost all the offi-who gave evidence upon the subject before the com-tee. Mr. POULTER and Col. P. THOMPSON sup-ed the motion. The latter made a singular admission is early respect for the law. He mentioned that on ressing, some years ago, the infliction of a military ishment, he checked his feelings just in time to avoid ting the men under his command to mutiny. Lord NDON spoke against Major Fancourt's resolution, and followed by Mr. HUME, who supported it. Lord wick, Sir H. Hardinge, Sir E. Codrington, Sir R. guson, Col. Thomas, and Col. Sibthorpe, also spoke inst the resolution. The House divided—for Major ncourt's resolution, 95; against it, 212; majority, 117.

THURSDAY, 14th April.—Sir C. B. VERE moved the ond reading of the Eastern Counties Railway Bill, ch was opposed by Mr. BONHAM. On the division re appeared—For the second reading, 99; against it, —The Sheffield and Rotherham Railway Bill was d a second time and passed.—Mr. G. ROBINSON moved "That a select committee be appointed to consider under what regulations and restrictions foreign corn and flour in bond might be admitted to entry for manufacture, and exported without prejudice to the revenue, or to the interests of agriculture."—Sir E. CODRINGTON supported the motion. Mr. P. THOMSON opposed it. After a long discussion, the House divided—for the motion, 40; against it, 77.—A supplementary debate on the subject of flogging in the Army took place, on the bringing up of the report on the Mutiny Bill, when Mr. LENNARD moved "that no Court-Martial held in the United Kingdom shall, except in time of war, be authorised to award the infliction of corporal punishment." Lord Howick thought it would be unfair to take the decision of so thin a House as the present, after the discussion and vote of the previous night. Mr. O'CONNELL entered his protest against the practice of flogging. Mr. Pemberton and Mr. C. Berkeley opposed the motion, and Lord W. Bentinck, Mr. Sergeant Talfourd, and Mr. Wakley supported it. Mr. T. DUNCOMBE stated that, since the last order, reducing the amount of punishment, there were Commanding Officers who contrived to evade the intended leniency by occupying a longer time in the infliction of the punishment. Sir R. Ferguson, Sir H. Hardinge, and Lord Howick, were astonished at the statement, and thought that the Hon. Member ought to denounce the officer who had been guilty of the conduct described. Mr. T. DUNCOMBE was not prepared to name the officer, but declared that he had made the statement on authority on which he relied. Sir C. DALBIAC said the stigma would remain on every officer in command of a regt. until the charge was refuted. The House divided—for the clause, 62; against it, 135.

FRIDAY, 15th April.—Sir E. KNATCHBULL moved the third reading of the Dover Harbour Bill. After a long long debate, the House divided—for the motion, 46; against it, 58.—The Cheltenham and Great Western Railway Bill was read a third time and passed.—Mr. DUNCOMBE, in allusion to the debate on military flogging last night, read that part of his speech which charges some Colonel with inflicting the lash at minute or half-minute time. When called upon he declined giving the name of the officer, because he had no opportunity of communicating with the party from whom he derived his information. The name of the officer was Col. Arthur, and the person on whom the punishment was inflicted was Ingram, a gunner in the Artillery. Sir H. HARDINGE, though he had no personal knowledge of Col. Arthur, yet from what he had known of his character as an officer, was sure that he would not allow an hour to elapse, after he had heard of these charges, before he came forward to rebut them.—The Mutiny Bill and the Marine Mutiny Bill were read a third time and passed; as was the Abolition of Slavery (Jamaica) Bill.—Mr. C. WOOD moved the remaining Navy Estimates. He stated, in answer to inquiry from Mr. Buckingham, that so ready were men to enter the Service, that fishermen and boatmen who used to run away on the appearance of a press-gang, now came forward and willingly entered the Service.—Mr. G. F. YOUNG deprecated the lavish expenditure of naval stores occasioned by Captain Symonds in his endeavours to carry into effect his fanciful theories respecting Naval Architecture. Mr. C. WOOD replied that persons who were more competent than the Hon. Member to form an opinion on the subject, had expressed themselves in terms of the highest approbation with regard to the principle acted upon by Capt. Symonds in ship building. Sir C. ADAM spoke in confirmation of the statement of Mr. Wood. Sir G. CLERK admitted the merits of Capt. Symonds' plan, but contended that the Surveyor of the Navy should be a person instructed in, and conversant with naval architecture. Sir C. ADAM contended that the superiority of Capt. Symonds's ships had been proved by experiments, particularly in the case of the Vernon and Barham. Sir E. CODRINGTON also maintained the superior qualities of the Vernon as compared with the Barham.—On the motion that 99,250*l.* be granted for conveying convicts to New South Wales, Mr. GAULBURN said that very great loss of life had occurred in two vessels lately, the George the Third and the Neva, and inquired whether any inquiry had taken place with regard to those circumstances. Mr. C. WOOD said that inquiries had been made, and it was found that the loss of neither could be ascribed to any unfitness of the vessels for the sea. Mr. THORNLEY was informed that the Neva was 30 years old. Sir T. TROUBRIDGE said that the Neva had arrived at her destination without suffering the least injury, or showing any defects on the voyage. Mr. C. WOOD read an extract from the report transmitted to the Admiralty, showing that the Captain was a careful and experienced commander.—In answer to a question from Capt. Berkeley, whether the Inspector of Marines, with a salary of 1,000*l.* a-year, was to be discontinued? Mr. C. Wood said he was not aware of any such intention. Mr. WAKLEY gave notice that he would make a motion on the subject when the report was brought up. The House then resumed.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The trial of the Neuilly conspirators has terminated in the conviction of five of them, who have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. A spirited debate occurred on the presentation of a petition for the revocation of the existing law of banishment against the family of Napoleon. The prayer was opposed by M. Thiers, who contended that the time for repealing the law of exclusion against the late imperial family had not yet arrived. The petition was supported by Gen. Pelet and others, but ultimately rejected. The prayer of another petition, for the removal of the remains of Napoleon to France, was assented to by as large a majority as that which had opposed the former petition, and it was referred to the Council of Ministers to adopt measures for carrying it into effect.

SPAIN.—The Carlists are pressing the siege of San Sebastian, and the besieged defend themselves with equal spirit. The Carlist army retains its position near Vittoria, in which Cordova remains quietly shut up. Every day almost brings some false report of victories gained on either side, but no movement of any note has been made.

RUSSIA.—The Empress will go to Germany in the summer to visit the baths at Ems, and will also pass some time there with her family.—The Grand Duchess Anna Michnilowna, daughter of the Grand Duke Michael, died on the 22d ult. in the second year of her age. The Russian government contemplates a pretty extensive change in its ministers and ambassadors at foreign courts.

GREECE.—King Otho has renounced his eventual right of succession to the throne of Bavaria, and has deposited the act of renunciation in his father's hands. This intelligence has given great satisfaction to the Greeks.

ROME, MARCH 26.—The failure of the Neapolitan firm of Falconnet has made a deep sensation. Its creditors have scarcely any thing to expect from the liquidation.

TURKEY.—We learn from Semlin, that Prince Milosch had called into active duty all the disposable troops of Servia, whom he has armed and organised in the European manner. It is supposed that this movement has been made at the suggestion of Russia, who is now very busy in Turkish affairs.

Theatres.

KING'S THEATRE.—On Tuesday evening La Straniera was performed, when Signor Tamburini sustained the part of Valdeburgh, which was well supported at the commencement of the season by Cartagenova. The part of Valdeburgh is, we believe, a favourite of Tamburini's, at which we are surprised, for there is little in it worthy the notice of this most accomplished artiste. The aria (a short one) at the commencement of the first act, is a very delicious morceau, and was delightfully given by Tamburini: it was rapturously encored. The other parts in the opera were sustained as before. Colleoni Corti was in better voice, and improves upon acquaintance: her happiest effort was the prayer in the second act. We are glad to find that something like attention was paid to the chorusses; some of them were very fairly executed. The opera was followed by the pleasing ballet La Rossignol, in which Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi, cousin to the celebrated chanteur, made a most successful debut. Carlotta Grisi is rather taller than her cousin; her figure is perfect; her face what we should call pretty; her limbs are finely formed, and in good proportion; her action is graceful and impassioned, and her style of dancing perfectly new, which of itself is a powerful recommendation. She possesses considerable flexibility of limb, and is easy and graceful in all her movements. This clever artiste is not quite sixteen, yet we are of opinion she will create quite a sensation at the King's theatre. She was greatly and deservedly applauded for her exertions, particularly for her revolving motion in bounding across the stage, which was a wonderful and pleasing effort. Mons. Perrot never danced in finer style. To offer anything in the shape of criticism on the dancing of this "Prince of Pirouette" would be useless. Mdlle. St. Romain was honoured with considerable applause for the finished neatness with which she executed her part in a pas de deux with Mons. Coustou, who is also entitled to praise. The house was well attended, better, indeed, than the manager had a right to expect, for La Straniera is not an opera to attract.

COVENT GARDEN.—The Hunchback was played on Monday evening, when Mr. Dale appeared in the character of Sir Thomas Clifford; a part we think ill-suited to this actor's talent. It was throughout a very tame performance; quite the opposite to Mr. G. Bennett's Master Walter, which was a spirited and energetic piece of acting, although, at times, bordering on the rant. We wish Mr. Bennett would rid himself of the vile habit he has acquired of drawling out some of his words to such an unmerciful length, we should then like him much better; there is a great deal of fire in his acting, and he always appears in downright earnest with what he has to do. A lady of the name of Beverly made her first appearance here, in the part of Helen, and acquitted herself tolerably well; but with Miss Taylor and Miss Wyndham in the theatre, we think she was unwise in making choice of this character for her début. The house was not well attended until half-price.

LYCEUM.—We are glad to be able to state that this theatre has been extremely well attended during the week, and that the novelties produced last week have rather increased than diminished in attraction. The amusing interlude of Is He Jealous? has been added to the performances, in order to afford an opportunity for Mrs. Nisbett to display her talent in the character of Harriet, a part in which she is inimitable. Her welcome to this theatre was highly flattering, and will, we trust, induce the Committee of Management to secure her services for the season. Mrs. Nisbett was ably supported by Wrench, as Mr. Belmour, and Mrs. F. Matthews, in the part of Rose. The sooner Mr. Keeley returns to this house the better,—we cannot afford to be without him. A good opportunity now offers for performing the amusing little comedy of Is She a Woman? in which Mrs. Nisbett and little Oxberry are inimitable.

Literary Notices.

Seymour of Sudley; or the Last of the Franciscans. By Hannah D. Burdon. Three vols. post 8vo. Richard Bentley.

THE reign of Edward the Sixth is happily chosen by the authoress for the historical novel before us. The numerous plots, religious and political, which agitated that period, afford every facility for the development of rapid incident and strongly-contrasted character. The haughty Protector, the Duke of Somerset, the intriguing Lord Seymour, the Princess Elizabeth, afterwards Queen, Ascham, her tutor, Lyndsey, the last of the Franciscans, the rash adventurer Arundel, Agnes, his innocent and devoted wife, Mrs. Clifford, the seductress, the Earl of Warwick, and others stand out in bold relief, and impart gorgeous and animated effect to the tale. It is a great merit in the present work that the interest never for a moment flags, and that while the truth of history is not violated, the imaginary details invest the story in the richest hues of romance. We have met with but few passages more spirit-stirring, more picturesque, or which more powerfully arrest attention and stimulate curiosity than the description, in the very first chapter of the book, of the two Oxford students in their frail boat, driving fearfully on the waves of a flooded river, before the wind in a mighty storm. It is in the same earnest spirit, and intensity of purpose, that Miss Burdon accomplishes her task, and demonstrates the genius which has led her to pursue the paths of fiction; but though her imagination is full of the passionate impulse of poetry, she does not disdain the laborious research of the historian, as is evidenced by the strict accuracy of her allusions, and her entire familiarity with the annals of the time, the costume, manners, and modes of speech. Miss Burdon's debut in literature is a brilliant one. She is destined, in our opinion, to assume a high rank among the female writers of England.

The Library of Fiction, or Family Story Teller, No. 1.—The Posthumous Papers of the Pickwick Club, No. 1. Edited by Boz. Chapman and Hall.

BOTH these new periodicals are well deserving of notice:—the "Library" contains Original Tales, with Selections and Translations, and, as well as the "Posthumous Papers," exhibits some very clever and spirited cuts. The latter publication is rich in playful satire, and if the talent in this number can be kept up, the "Pickwick Club" must flourish. On account of its affinity to speeches elsewhere, we will give the President's opening oration:—

"Mr. Pickwick observed that fame was dear to the heart of every man. Portia fame was dear to the heart of his friend Snodgrass; the fame of conquest was equally dear to his friend Tupman; and the desire of earning fame in the sports of the field, the air, and the water, was uppermost in the breast of his friend Winkle. He (Mr. Pickwick) would not deny that he was influenced by human passions and human feelings (cheers), possibly by human weaknesses (loud cries of 'No!'); but this he would say, that if ever the fire of self-importance broke out in his bosom, the desire to benefit the human race in preference effectually quenched it. The praise of mankind was his Safety—philanthropy was his insurance office (vehement cheering). He had felt some pride—he acknowledged it freely, and let his enemies make the most of it—he had felt some pride when he presented his Tittlebatist Theory to the world, and it might be celebrated, or it might not (a cry of 'It is,' and great cheering). He would take the assertion of that honourable Pickwickian (whose voice he had just heard—it was celebrated; but if the fame of that treatise were to extend to the farthest confines of the known world, the pride with which he should reflect on the authorship of that production would be as nothing compared with the pride with which he looked around him, on this, the proudest moment of his existence (cheers). He was a humble individual, (No, no.) Still he could not but feel that they had selected him for a service of great honour, and of some danger. Travelling was in a troubled state, and the minds of coachmen were unsettled. Let them look abroad, and contemplate the scenes which were enacting around them. Stage-coaches were upsetting in all directions, horses were bolting, boats were overturning, and boilers were bursting. (Cheers—a voice, 'No.') No! (Cheers.) Let that honourable Pickwickian who cried 'No' so loudly, come forward and deny it, if he could. (Cheers.) Who was it that cried 'No?' (Enthusiastic cheering.) Was it some vain and disappointed man—he would not say haberdasher—(loud cheers)—who, jealous of the praise that had been, perhaps undeservedly, bestowed on his (Mr. Pickwick's) researches, and smarting under the censure which had been heaped upon his own feeble attempts at rivalry, now took this vile and calumnious mode of——' Mr. Blotton (of Aldgate) rose to order. 'Did the honourable Pickwickian allude to him?' (Cries of 'Order,' 'Chair,' 'Yes,' 'No,' 'Go on,' 'Leave off,' &c.)—'Mr. Pickwick would not be put up to be putdown by clamour. He had alluded to the hon. gentleman.' (Great excitement.)—'Mr. Blotton would only say, then, that he repelled the hon. gent.'s false and scurrilous accusation with profound contempt. (Great cheering.) The hon. gent. was a humbug.' (Immense confusion, and loud cries of 'chair' and 'order.')—'Mr. A. Snodgrass rose to order. He threw himself upon the chair. (Hear.) He wished to know whether this disgraceful contest between two members of that club should be allowed to continue.' (Hear, hear.)—'The Chairman was quite sure the hon. Pickwickian would withdraw the expression he had just made use of.'—'Mr. Blotton, with all possible respect for the chair, was quite sure he would not.'—'The Chairman felt it his imperative duty to demand of the honourable gentleman whether he had used the expression which had just escaped him in a common sense?'—'Mr. Blotton had no hesitation in saying that he had not; he had used the word in its Pickwickian sense. (Hear, hear.) He was bound to acknowledge that, personally, he entertained the highest regard and esteem for the honourable gentleman; he had merely considered him a humbug in a Pickwickian point of view.' (Hear, hear.)—'Mr. Pickwick felt much gratified by the fair, candid, and full explanation of his honourable friend. He begged it to be at once understood, that his own observations had been merely intended to bear a Pickwickian construction.' (Cheers.)"

Illustrations of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. Fisher and Co.

WE have here one of the most chaste and beautiful publications of the season—the Allegory of Bunyan's celebrated work, splendidly illustrated, with descriptions of the Plates by Bernard Barton, and a Biographical Sketch of Bunyan and his writings, by Josiah Conder. "Bunyan wrote for all," and there are few who do not admire his writings, and who will not take delight in the attempt of the artist to give to the eye the picture that the perusal has afforded to the imagination.

A Tour round Ireland, through the Sea-Coast Counties, in the Autumn of 1835. By JOHN BARROW, Esq. John Murray.

A VOLUME of party prejudice, folly, and ignorance; to these defects we must add singular misrepresentations. Mr. Barrow has no knowledge of the character and condition of the people, or the history of Ireland; he indulges in levity, which he mistakes for wit, but we hope he will undeceive himself before he favours the public with another periodical "Tour."

Lowenstein, King of the Forests. A Tale, by Jane Roberts. 2 vols. Whittaker and Co.

A KIND and gentle spirit distinguishes these volumes. The tale is of considerable interest, and very agreeably written. It will well repay a perusal, which is more than we can say of the generality of "Tales."

The White Man's Grave; a Visit to Sierra Leone in 1834. By F. Harrison Rankin. Two Vols. post 8vo. Richard Bentley.

MR. RANKIN is a lively amusing writer, gifted with much industry of research, acuteness of observation, an eye for the picturesque, and a merry heart, inclined to extract a joke even from a dull incident. He is the very reverse of the poet Jaques, who could suck melancholy out of a song as a weazel sucks an egg. These qualities in the writer render his book very pleasant reading, and if the occasional eccentricity of his style savours a little of affectation, it cannot be denied that he has brought together a considerable fund of solid information respecting Sierra Leone, which must be looked for in vain in any other work on the subject. He has demonstrated, we think successfully, the fallacy of considering the climate of this African settlement as pestilential and deadly; and, on this account alone, if on no other, the present volumes deserve to be perused with earnest and grave attention. There is, perhaps, no town on the face of the globe where the population is made up of such various and incongruous parts as that of Free-Town, the capital of Sierra Leone. Between the European settlers, the Maroons, the Foulahs, and Mendingoes, the Kroomen, and the Negroes, there is scarcely one point of analogy, either in religion, colour, or manners and customs. Christians, Mahometans, and Pagans are strangely jumbled together in one small space, and the author has abundant opportunity for the exercise of his descriptive powers, his wit, and his philosophy. The various dialects of these heterogeneous races are given with a humour which might raise envy in Mrs. Trollope, while his sketches of their amusements, particularly of Negro singing and dancing, are at once farcical and true to nature. We should be tempted to run all risks of contagion in Sierra Leone (especially as our author tells us that the place is by no means so insalubrious as is reported), if only to be present at one of the "dignity balls," so ludicrously described by Mr. Rankin.

Instigated by a love of adventure, and by an irrepressible curiosity, our traveller visited the country of the Timmanees, of which his account is, to the last degree, graphic and interesting. This nation is extensive and powerful, but the habits of the people are simple and primitive, and their disposition friendly. Like other savage races, the Timmanees are prone to superstition, and their religious faith exhibits at once "a reverence for a Supreme Being, a respect for Satan, and a blind confidence in obeah and sorcery." We extract the following pithy account of the law of debtor and creditor in the Timmanee country, and would point especially to the touching example of solace afforded to distress by woman, who, even in this savage land, as in every other part of the world, is never-failing in her sweet ministrations and constancy to the wretched.

"At Royel I experienced a most hospitable reception. The little cluster of huts, and the open palaver-house with its lanky or rice-loft, defied detection of the European origin of the Head-man. Beneath the shelter of the palaver-house sat a debtor, in the miserable bondage due to his poverty or dishonesty. The Timmanee creditor thrusts the debtor's leg through a hole in a heavy log of plum-wood, and secures it with an iron* bolt. The foot would be crushed but for a rope tied to the end of the log, and held by the hands. Walking is scarcely possible, and confinement to one spot becomes as complete as if ensured by walls. This man's wife * constantly tended him, soothing him and providing him with food. An unmarried man, totally unable to assist himself, might perish under this novel species of durance."

UNQUESTIONABLY this is one of the best of the cheap publications of the day. The descriptions of the plates, by the learned and reverend Editor, are concise and most appropriate.

MILITARY TRANSMISSIONS.—INDIAN ARMY.

RECENT events must have convinced every person interested in military affairs that there has been something radically wrong in a portion of the head quarter staff of the Indian Army. One day, complaints of every description fostered,—received with open arms; the next, even the common claims of old officers to be heard in their defence rejected or left unanswered. Who has been to blame? A very short time must show if the late responsible head of the Army was the person who introduced or matured the capricious system; if so, now that he has left that post, his measures must be rescinded; if, on the other hand, the irresponsible advisers of his Excellency were permitted to usurp a power not properly belonging to them, it is not improbable some fresh arbitrary act will soon point them out.

Previous to the embarkation of the late Commander-in-Chief, three Captains of the Bengal Army were removed from their situations in a summary manner, viz. Capt. Mackinlay, Assist. Adjt.-Gen. Cawnpore Division; and Capts. G. N. Campbell and Johnson, of the Horse Artillery; the two latter officers by the exercise of his Lordship's prerogative, as Commander-in-Chief; the former by Lord William Bentinck, Governor-General of India, on account of disrespect to Lord William Bentinck the Commander-in-Chief, which disrespect consisted in Captain Mackinlay appealing to the Government of the country when he considered himself aggrieved.

Captain Johnson's case is one of peculiar interest; he is declared to have been guilty "of most violent and op*pressive* conduct, in gagging one man and bringing to trial him and many others;" now taking into consideration that the men were found guilty of the charges exhibited against them, we are at a loss to discover wherein consisted the violence or oppression, unless these epithets are intended to refer solely to the gagging, an act which can scarcely be said to be either one or the other. If his Excellency had served in the junior branch of the Army in Europe, he would have found "chewing the drumstick" not a very uncommon practice, and moreover one that has saved many an old soldier from the halberds. But the more envious part of the General Order removing Capt. Johnson is that wherein "it is considered no small aggravation of Capt. Johnson's offence, that even after the first ebullition of his resentment towards those who were the objects of his displeasure may be supposed to have subsided, he had not the generosity to intercede with the Commanding Officer of the station in behalf of the unfortunate individuals, to avert the disgrace and oppression of a corporal infliction for irregularities which his own improper conduct had led to." Here is a gratuitous assumption of Captain Johnson being actuated by personal motives, ebullitions of resentment, the deficiency of generosity, and, through these, inflicting disgrace and oppression. One thing is certain, the men were heard on their defence. Has equal justice been shown to Capt. Johnson? To every military man it must be self-evident that once Captain Johnson had confined the men and sent in charges against them, he (Capt. Johnson) had no more to do with them than the man in the moon.

* Her voice was singularly melodious and plaintive; most touchingly so. On noticing its exquisite sweetness, I was informed that it resulted from a peculiar disease in the throat to which women are subject, and which always causes this remarkable and soft tone."

The cause of Capt. Campbell's removal has never been published to the Army; indeed it would have rather puzzled the ingenuity of a head-quarter scribe to make one out. Capt. Campbell is declared by the authorities to have been guilty of "insubordinate conduct:" what the meaning of the word INSUBORDINATE is, I defy the military authorities, from the highest to the lowest, to show; the word belongs to no known language; neither will it bear a derivation from any known word in any known language; nor can the term be found in any Military Dictionary or the Articles of War; let me therefore explain in what the insubordinate conduct of Capt. G. N. Campbell consisted, viz. refusing to deviate from the Government Order of 1st Feb. 1828, when Major Gowan, his Commanding Officer, wished him to violate the pay regulations, by not drawing extra for Surgeon Baddeley; so that, in this case, insubordinate conduct means obeying the regulations of Government. This code also involves some questions of Military Law, and without questioning the justice of the Commander-in-Chief in removing an officer for obedience to the pay regulations of the Bengal Government, let me ask—How far is a subordinate officer commanding a troop justified (in deference to his Commanding Officer's opinion) in omitting to draw batta for a native soldier entitled to the same, because a private payment equivalent to that extra batta has been made by the troop medical officer? How far a troop officer is amenable to be tried by a Military Court for falsely attesting the pay acquittance roll, as paid in his presence, when the extra batta was paid in his absence? How far a Commanding Officer is justified in attempting to influence a subordinate to violate the orders? How far a distinct refusal to deviate from a General Order can be a military offence?*—East India United Service Journal.

* The Articles of War distinctly state that an officer is only to obey legal orders. Is it legal in a Commanding Officer to set aside the orders of the Government?

Gold is the only material with which decoyed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result; the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them. Greig Thomson, 25, New Bond-street, has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 134, Oxford-street, near Holles-street, established in 1830, than through the adoption of any other method whatever; as Domestics, with good characters, are in waiting to be hired from 10 to 6 o'clock.

Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for Hiring Servants; but if the Servant possess a good character, it certainly is perfect nonsense to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a Situation.

N.B. It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

UNITED KINGDOM LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY, No. 8, WATERLOO PLACE, PALL MALL, LONDON, and No. 2, Charlotte Row, Mansion House. (Established by Act of Parliament.)—This Company affords the most perfect security from an ample, active, and large Subscribed Capital, with great inducements, in the very moderate amount of the Premiums to be paid, in nearly any way to suit the convenience of parties in every situation of life. When Insurances made on the regular scale, for the whole period of life, half Premium may remain unpaid for five years, at Interest, to be deducted eventually from the Policy, or paid off at convenience.—Tradesmen very often lose large sums by Young Noblemen or Gentlemen dying previous to the parties whose estates or property they would inherit; such losses may be easily avoided by Insuring the Younger Life against the older, at a trifling cost. For instance, the Premium to be paid, if 20 predeceases 60 would only be £1 1s. 4d. per cent.—20 against 70, £1 6s. 7d. per cent, and in the like proportion for the different ages.—Insurances from the Country may be effected by application to the Resident Director, Edward Boyd, Esq., No. 8, Waterloo Place, Pall Mall, London, or to any of the Company's Agents.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

"40, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Brensby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. Green Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success.

"New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From WILLIAM HENTSCH, Esq., No. 3, Furnivel's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of; the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, (Signed) "WILLIAM HENTSCH.

PIANO-FORTES BY BROADWOOD.

MR. BROWNE begs to announce to his Friends and the Public, that he has an extensive assortment of superior SECOND-HAND PIANO-FORTES by BROADWOOD, of every description. To those who may not have visited this establishment, Mr. Browne begs to state that the Piano-forte Repository, 27, Soho-square, was established expressly for the sale of genuine Instruments by that highly-esteemed maker, and that a greater number of Broadwood's Piano-fortes may be inspected here than at any other MUSICAL ESTABLISHMENT.

ANGLING.—J. CHEEK, Fishing-Rod and Tackle Maker, No. 52, Strand, begs leave most respectfully to acquaint the Nobility, Gentry, and Anglers generally, that he has the largest assortment in London of the very best articles in trout, salmon, and other rods; patent fly and trolling-lines, winches, tackle-cases, &c.; 200 gross of superior trout and salmon flies, from 2s. 4d. per dozen. Bait constantly kept. Lists of prices of upwards of one hundred articles forwarded, on applying, if by letter post paid. Orders from the country, with references in town, attended to with punctuality and despatch, and any article exchanged if not approved of. Country dealers supplied. Golden Perch, 52, Strand.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"Sir,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them in no way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I find you are the Proprietor; after using it two days, I could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this one I suffered more in particular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, and since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended this SOLVENT to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, D. EMDEN, Surgeon Dentist."

1, Southampton-street, Strand,

18th March, 1836."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous. It is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 85, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Vendors.

STIRLING REES' ESSENCE.—Its vast and increasing sale, from the recommendation of the highest Medical characters, as well as those who have experienced its salubrious and beneficial effects, proves its great success and superiority over every other preparation, in being the most safe and effectual remedy ever discovered for the Cure of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Seminal Weakness, Strictures, Fluor Albus, or Whites, Pains in the Loins, Kidneys, Lumbago, Gravel, Irritation of the Bladder, Urethra, and every Disease incident to the Sexual and Urinary Organs, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short space of three or four days. It contains, in a concentrated state, all the efficacious parts of the Cubeb, chemically combined with Sarsaparilla and other choice alteratives, which renders it invaluable to those afflicted with secondary Syphilitic Symptoms, Pains of the Bones, Ulcers, Pimples, Blotches, Scorbutic Eruptions, Glandular Swellings, and all diseases arising from a tainted and impure state of the blood. In cases of Debility, Want of Power, both Local and General, Tabes Dorsalis, Diabetes, Wasting Impotence, and Nervous Depression of Spirits it has been taken with the most decided benefit. A regular perseverance in its use has invariably been found to improve the appetite, assist the digestive powers, and give muscular strength, energy, and vigorous health to the whole system. The most delicate female may take it with perfect safety. It is an excellent restorative after the constitution has been weakened or injured by mercurial or from any other cause.

Prepared only by the Proprietor, J. W. STIRLING, 86, High-street, Whitechapel, from whom it can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London (carriage free), in Bottles, at 1s. 6d., 10s., and 20s. each.

MOST IMPORTANT INFORMATION.

BY HIS MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

G. MINTER begs to inform the Nobility, Gentry, &c., that he has invented an EASY CHAIR that will recline and elevate, of itself, into an innumerable variety of positions, without the least trouble or difficulty to the occupier; and there being no machinery, rack, catch, or spring, it is only for a person sitting in the chair merely to wish to recline or elevate themselves, and the seat and back take any desired inclination, without requiring the least assistance or exertion whatever, owing to the weight on the seat acting as a counterbalance to the pressure against the back by the application of a self-adjusting leverage; and for which he has obtained His Majesty's Letters Patent. G. M. particularly recommends this invention to invalids, or to those who may have lost the use of their hands or legs, as they are by it enabled to vary their position without requiring the use of either to obtain that change of position, from its endless variety, so necessary for the relief and comfort of the afflicted.

The Chair is made by the Inventor only, at his Wholesale Cabinet and Upholstery Manufactory, 33, Gerrard-street, Soho. G. M. is confident an inspection only is required to be convinced of its superiority over all others.

Merlin, Bath, Brighton, and every other description of Garden Wheel Chairs, much improved by G. Minter, with his self-acting reclining backs, so as to enable an invalid to lie at full length. Spinal Carriages, Portable Carriage Chairs, Water Beds, and every article for the comfort of the Invalid.

A MOST IMPORTANT NOTICE.

G. Minter having tried the validity of his Patent, both in the Court of [illegible] Baron Alderson, and in the Court of King's Bench, before Lord Denman, and Special Juries each [illegible] a handsome Reward to any person giving [illegible] any Chair, where the seat and back act as a [illegible] sold, made, or even in use, that has not the [illegible] on the top of the legs, and the words "Patent, G. Minter, 33, Gerrard-street, Soho," &c.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,

Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of his disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unpolluted with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

FISTULÆ, PILES, ABSCESSES, TUMOURS, STRICTURES, &c.—Mr. S. J. VAN BUTCHELL, Accoucheur and Surgeon, for the cure of the above complaints, without cutting, caustic, or confinement in the most dangerous cases, exemplified in a long practice, offers his professional aid to those who may be afflicted, with the fullest confidence of speedily restoring them to health, by his peculiarly successful and expeditious method of eradicating these disorders, even where the usual mode of treatment has failed of remedy or alleviation. Consulted till one daily at his residence, No. 16, Percy-street, Bedford-square.—Persons afflicted may obtain a prospectus gratis, containing a few out of the many cures effected by him on applying to Mr. Cradock, Chemist and Druggist, No. 6, Store-street, Bedford-square.

32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, and No. 10, Ludgate-hill.

MONSIEUR MALLAN and SONS, Surgeon Dentists, respectfully acquaint their Friends and the Public, that for the better convenience of their City connexion they have OPENED an additional ESTABLISHMENT, at No. 10, LUDGATE HILL, City (opposite the Bell Sauvage Inn), where one of the above firm may be consulted daily, and at their Old Established residence, 32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, where they continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated MINERAL SUCCEDANEUM, so universally recommended by the Faculty in London and Paris. The operation of Filling Teeth is performed in a few seconds, without the slightest pain, heat, or pressure. They also FASTEN LOOSE TEETH, in a manner singularly efficacious, and SUPPLY WHOLE or PARTIAL SETS of TEETH, INCORRODIBLE ARTIFICIAL, or NATURAL TEETH, from one to a complete set, fixed, without wire or other ligatures—guaranteed to answer every purpose for mastication and articulation.

CHARGES AS IN PARIS.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1835, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Soulis, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Evans, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c. is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

Maj.-Gen. Lord Fitzroy Somerset held a levee at the Horse Guards on Tuesday, which was attended by several distinguished military officers.

The Field Officer at whose bis soldiers fired their batteries on parade, for introducing vexatious minor punishments, and alluded to by the Duke of Wellington in his evidence before the Military Commission, was Major R. …ortsmouth, April 22.—(From our own Correspondent.) …he steam-frigate Phœnix arrived on Monday night, to …ours from Santander, with Brig.-Gen. Evans and other …assengers; Com. Henderson, proceeded to London with his …espatches. The Marines which the Phœnix carried out …e put on board the Castor, and immediately moved up …Bilbao in the Isabella steamer. Phœnix brought an …ount of the capture by the Carlists of the town of Le…nito; on her passage to England she stood close under it …reconnoitre it, and had a volley of musketry fired at her …one of the batteries. She discharged about 20 shot …shells in return. On Thursday orders arrived for the …ix to hold herself in readiness to return to the coast, …Capt. Germaton, Lieut. Shepherd, and 54 non-com…issioned officers and privates, marines, Lieut. Parke, 8 …non-commissioned officers, and 12 gunners of marine artil…having embarked, she proceeded at 4 o'clock, with di…rections to call in at Plymouth for Maj. Owen, K.H., and …few more marines from that division. The Castor had …left Plymouth, and sailed from thence on Saturday last. …brig called the Flirt arrived from Santander this morning …with some wounded men of the British Legion, and about …widows of those killed or dead from sickness. They …were soon put on board the Swiftsure. The Flirt quitted …Bilbao the week before the Phœnix, consequently has not any news. …The officers of the Phœnix report that the British Legion …on the march from Vittoria. Pontalodn sailed on …Monday to Sheerness with men for the Hercules and Asia. …She is ordered to Leith for some seamen that have volun…teered for the navy. Lieut. Boyle of the Britannia was to …depot no shore at Hastings to open a rendezvous. Ships …in port—Britannia, Vanguard, Bellerophon, Pembroke, …Excellent, Royal George yacht.

…Milford Haven, April 20th.—(From our own Correspondent.) An Officer and nine shipwrights came down to …the quarantine establishment here on Monday last, to the …Hecker cutter, to finish the repairs of the lazarettes. Last …Sunday week the Messenger steamer arrived at this port …for any man that may have entered for the line-of-battle …ships fitting at Plymouth and Portsmouth, but there was …not one for her to take away. Wednesday she left for Liver…pool and Dublin on a similar service. She returned on …Sunday, having obtained eighty men at these large sea…ports. Still no entry had taken place here during her …absence. The Goodwill lighter was sent from Pembroke …Dock to Bristol to fetch such sailors as may have entered at that …place. Lieut. Barnes, R.M., arrived at Pembroke on …Monday last from the Plymouth division, to supply the …vacancy at the former place, caused by the promotion of …Lieut. (now Captain) Mallard. It is rumoured that the …detachment at Pembroke will not be relieved at the usual …period this year from the want of men at the different …quarters. The detachment then, of both men and Officers, …will remain there another year. Before the expiration of …that period, it is more than probable the present command…ing officer, Major Bailie, will obtain his promotion, still re…taining the command. If this should be the case, the depôt …will in future be under the directions of a Lieut.-Colonel. …Sir James Cockburn decide not to relieve the detach…ment, the vacancies of drummers, privates, &c., caused by …death and other casualties, will, of course, be filled from …the division forthwith. The Diligence naval transport, Mr. …[illegible] arrived at Pembroke on Monday last with …Mr. [illegible] Superintending Master, and a party of men …from [illegible], to navigate the Harlequin brig, lately …launched from the dockyard at this haven, to Sheerness. …[illegible] Sir Charles Pillen, Captain-Superintendent, she was more than half-rigged before the arrival …of the men belonging to the Royal Arsenal. …It is thus only a little more to do than to bend sails, which …has accordingly been accomplished, and she now only waits …a wind round East. The Messenger is ordered to Cork for …passengers, but requires awaiting the arrival of the Goodwill …from Bristol. On visiting the dock yard last week I …was surprised to see the Mariner Officer on duty …there meant quard to an arms post. At the …other Naval Arsenals I have always observed the Officer …thus in charge of the Royal Guard—which I say—the …Kingis Guard—in full uniform and sword. Is this intended …to be accounted for? Perhaps it was an indulgence granted …by the Superintendent on account of the weather. The next …time I address you, I shall be better able to decide, and …will not fail to let you know. The Gibraltar 74, is ordered …from off our quarantine ground, in order to her being taken …to pieces at Pembroke. She is found far too defective to be …repaired. Directions have been received at the dockyard, in …common with those at other places, to cease working the …extra half day in the week. This is an unaccountable …arrangement, as it is not more than three months since the …said boon was conferred on the workmen of those establish…ments. One good will, however, result from it; it will, no …doubt, be the means of bringing into operation Mr. Burd…wood's plan of improving the shipwrights, apprentices, and …others in the different branches of professional education. …Mr. Burdwood deserves well of his country for the excel…lent method he has suggested of, thus employing them on …the idle day, Saturday. Report says, that Mr. Hawkes, …Master Shipwright; Mr. Jones, Surgeon, and the Master …Blacksmith, at Pembroke, are to be promoted to other …yards, in consequence of supernumeraries about to take place …at Chatham.

Woolwich Dockyard, April 22nd.—(From our own Correspondent.)—On Friday night at 9 P.M., orders were suddenly given to set up the rigging of the Salamander steam vessel (4), which was accomplished with the most seaman-like promptitude by Captain Sir Samuel Warren; and, before 4 A.M., Lieut. Duffill, late of the Pluto, hoisted his pennant; the praiseworthy alacrity of the dock-yard people in every way worthy of eulogium. On Saturday she was floated out of the basin alongside the hulk to get in her stores. A detachment of 160 marines will be embarked this day (Friday), and she will take her departure for Chatham and Portsmouth, at each of which divisions she will take on board Officers and men to complete 500 men, with whom she will proceed to the coast of Spain. Hermes steam vessel, Lieut. Blount (Mr. Ruffey, Mid. in charge), hauled out of the basin on Saturday for dry dock where she is shipping her wheels so as to be ready for service on the return of Lieut. Blount from the North, whither he has proceeded with the Rhadamanthus to bring up volunteer seamen.

Plymouth, April 21.—The Star, after being under the immediate superintendance of Mr. Spiller, refitted and masted as a brig, and was undocked on Friday. Hope and Magnet brigs were docked on Monday. Delight packet, Lieut. Moore, sailed for Falmouth on Saturday. Carron st.-vessel arrived from Woolwich on Friday, and started the following day for Falmouth. Diligence transport sailed for Pembroke on Saturday, with Mr. Walker, Assist. Master Attendant of this Dock-yard, and a party of seamen, for the purpose of navigating the Harlequin, which has been lately launched from that yard, to Sheerness. Beacon, late, surv.-vessel, lay-to off the Break-water on Saturday morning, but did not come in; she is bound to the northward for seamen for the newly commissioned men-of-war. Tartarus st. towed the Foudroyant down the harbour on Monday, to have her masts taken out for the Implacable. The steamer started again the same evening for Falmouth. A ship of the line is to be fitted here for a lazarette, and sent to Pembroke in the place of the Old Gibraltar, which is now there very much decayed. The Mulgrave, or Stirling Castle, is named as likely to be so fitted. Ships in the harbour—Royal Adelaide 110, Cornwallis 74, Minden 74, Talavera 74, Star packet, and Comet steamer. In the Sound—Pondora. Fitted and ready—Impregnable 114, Stag 46, Donegal 74, Imogene 28, Partridge 10. Fitting—Belleisle and Implacable.

Pluto st. v. is being proceeded upon with all possible dispatch, and is expected to be re-commissioned by Lieut. Duffill on his return from the coast of Spain.

Fairy surveying sloop, Commander Hewitt, is only waiting for hands to proceed to her station.

Swift brig will sail in a few days for Falmouth for the packet service.

Regulus transport is taking in naval stores at the basin for Malta, and the Elisa, of Perth, collier brig, is discharging coals at the same place for the use of the steamers.

Vessels in port in commission—William and Mary yacht—Fairy sloop, Swift brig, and Salamander and Hermes st. v. In the basin not in commission—Blazer and Pluto.

The Master of the Hope sch. arrived at Milford Haven from Alexandria reports that he spoke H.M.S. Melville on the 3rd inst., in lat. 42 deg. 30 min. N., long. 12 deg. 15 min. W. She had lost a boat and topsail-yard from the ebbing, and it was feared that the boat might drift on shore on the coast of France, and cause a report of the loss of the ship.

The line-of-battle ships fitting at Sheerness, this port, and Plymouth, are making much quicker progress than was anticipated, and though men enter more readily both at Plymouth and Sheerness, yet the ships here are picking up very good crews. Bellerophon has only been ten days in commission, and she victuals to-day 355, marines included. Talavera and Hercules will beat Spithead in three weeks.—Hampshire Telegraph.

It will be remembered that, about three months since, orders were received to employ the mechanics and labourers in the Dock-Yards on the half day of Saturday, in addition to the five previous whole days of the week; instructions were issued last week to confine their employment again to the five days, which will be acted upon in future. The extra labourers are to be discharged.

Thirty shipwrights proceeded on Tuesday from Woolwich to Deptford, to fit the Prince Regent yacht.

Purification of Sea Water.—We are happy to observe that the differences which have existed among the share-holders and Directors of the Patent Purifying Sea-water Company are at length amicably adjusted, and that, by the formation of a new company, the public will very soon de-rive the advantage of using a means of distilling sea-water, at once simple, effective, and cheap. If we are rightly in-formed the improved machine will be founded partly on the patent possessed by Mr. Wells, and partly on the more recent invention of Mr. Stothert; the result of which will be—as amply tested by experiments at sea—the production of as much pure water as will be necessary for the full con-sumption of passengers and crew, by a distillation carried on entirely by the fire used in cooking for the same number of persons. The original shareholders receiving their advances in full, or shares in the new concern to a corresponding amount, the new company will carry on its operations with the goodwill of all; and we look towards them as of equal importance, in their results, to the maritime interests of the whole world, as the effect of any other among the most im-portant inventions of modern days. To the gentlemen who have persevered in the consummation of their arduous duties, through circumstances of much unpleasantry, who have triumphed over every difficulty, and disconcerted every species of opposition, the utmost praise is due. We thank them in the name of the shipowners and merchants of the United Kingdom.—Public Ledger.

A general meeting of the Shareholders of the Patent Pu-rifying Sea-water Company was held on Wednesday, at Radley's Hotel, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, to take into con-sideration the Reports of the Directors and Committee, and to determine on the adoption of such measures as the Share-holders might resolve upon. Sir John Philippart, the Chairman, having read the plan for a New Company, it was deemed desirable to introduce various alterations for com-pleting the objects for which the Company was originally formed, and a series of resolutions were proposed and car-ried unanimously. A Committee was formed, with the Chair-man at their head, for the purpose of securing to such of the original shareholders, as within fourteen days from that date shall notify their wish to receive the full amount of the sub-scriptions paid on their shares; and also for making the necessary arrangements for carrying on the Company. The thanks of the meeting were then voted to the Chairman for his able and courteous conduct on all occasions, and to Mr. Stothert, the patentee, for having placed the Company in its present favourable position. This undertaking promises to be of the greatest importance to the saving of human life, it being well known that more of our sailors perish through a scarcity of water during the late war than by the hands of the enemy. To shareholders it holds out the brightest prospects.—Court Journal.

Barbadoes.—A new arrangement has been made with regard to the packets and other conveyances for the mails in these colonies. Instead of the Packet from Falmouth sailing from Barbadoes on her way to St. Thomas, the duty after her arrival, as formerly, that duty will be performed by a mail-boat, which is to return direct—the packet remain-ing in this harbour, to be made available for the transmis-sion of mails in like manner as by the eight-day boat heretofore, and to receive from the Post Office here return bags from the islands. A steamer will proceed as usual to Jamaica, immediately after the arrival of the packets, as directed, on her return from St. Thomas, to call at every island. The packet is always to wait at St. Thomas's until her mails from all the colonies are complete.—West Indian, Feb. 8.

The Wanstead is taking in stores at Deptford for Sierra Leone.

There is a vacancy in the out-pension list of Greenwich for a Captain, in the room of Capt. Rason, deceased.

There is also a vacancy for a Commander's out-pension list of Greenwich Hospital, by the death of Commander Deacon, the oldest Commandant, 1787, in the navy, and one, if not the last, of Admiral Byng's officers, and who witnessed the unfortunate Admiral's execution.

One hundred and fifty privates and a proportion of Officers embarked, under the command of Captain Leyt for the coast of Spain. A party of the guards have arrived at Woolwich to assist in the duty of the dockyard, on account of the paucity of men from the embarkations which have taken place.

The Carron st. v., Lieut. Dow, took from the Eastward last week, 70 more volunteers who had entered for the at Portsmouth and Plymouth.

Two Turks recently arrived in this country, are to be entered in the Royal Naval College, Portsmouth, to be instructed in those branches common to this establishment, and two others have proceeded to Woolwich for the pur-pose of making themselves familiar with machinery. They are not ignorant of the English language.

A contemporary attacks the appointment of Capt. Dun-das, member for Devizes, to the flag-ship at Portsmouth. If Capt. D. be responsible for any neglect of his duty in parliament, it is to his constituents, not to the Admiralty. The act of Queen Anne specially exempts officers of the army and navy from vacating their seats in the House receiving appointments from the crown in their respective services. While Sir J. Beresford held the command at the Nore in 1831 and 1832, his flag-Capt., the Hon. Mr. Doocombe, who sat in Parliament for Yorkshire, voted constantly against the then administration. Both Lord Exmouth and Capt. Pellew, who had seats in Parliament while in the Plymouth command, retained both without cavil. Adm. Fleming sat in two Parliaments for Orkney while he held a flag command, as did also Adm. Honeyman. Neither is it the fact that the present Board of Admiralty enforced the regulation of Sir J. Graham, which they have never adopted, against Sir P. Durham.—Globe.

We have letters from Barbadoes, dated 6th March. The Pointbow was then lying in Carlisle Bay. The Vestal had arrived the day before, after an unprecedented passage of only twenty-three days from the Lizard, having beat down Channel from Spithead to that point, against a heavy S.W. gale, when the wind favoured her, and for the last ten days of her passage, she run more than 200 miles a-day under royals and steering sails. The crews of both ships were in good health, and the vessel after remaining at anchor a few hours, had proceeded to Grenada.

Two packets are ordered to be built at Pembroke, to be called Penguin and Petrel; and two cutters for tenders, are also ordered to be built at Sheerness and Chatham, to be called Gipsy and Mercury.

The Ordinaries will be paid off when a line of battle ship is ready to receive the establishment. A carpenter will be placed in each ship in ordinary of the line, and one carpenter will be attached to three frigates, three sloops, &c.

The Albion was docked on Monday at Deptford, to be finally broken up; the Scarborough, 74, will follow, with several others, whose extensive repairs, dimensions, &c. render them unfit for commissioning.

By a new regulation, all characters and discharges of seamen are to be given on parchment forms, and tin cases to keep them dry and safe, will be issued to the crews.

It is generally supposed the Earl Cadogan, Capt. R.N., will succeed the late Capt. Rainer, as permanent Naval Aide-de-Camp to his Majesty.

A party of shipwrights and other artificers came daily from Woolwich to Deptford dockyard to fit the Prince Regent yacht for the Imaum of Muscat.

The Prince Regent and Formella transports remain at Deptford, and will speedily sail for Cork, to take troops to the Mediterranean.

Court Martial.—A court martial assembled on the 15th on board H.M.S. Royal Adelaide, consisting of the following Officers.—Capt. Ross, C.B., Capts. Sharpe, Sullivan, Falcon, and Festing, to try Mr. Lynn, gunner of H.M. brig Delight, on charges preferred against him by Lieut. A. Moore, his commander, for being drunk on the 12th and 13th December last, and of general intoxication whilst on the voyage to and from Lisbon. J. E. Elwortby, Esq. Solicitor, appeared for the defence. The Court declared the charges proved in part, and sentenced him to be dismissed the ship and admonished.

East India Intelligence.

On Wednesday, a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Lieut.-Gen. Sir T. P. Maitland, K.C.B., was unanimously appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Company's Forces on the Fort St. George Establishment.

The Bombay Papers mention that the Tigris had arrived out with the mail from Alexandria, which brought intelligence from the Red Sea, that the Pacha of Egypt was determined to carry on the war against the Arabians, notwithstanding his recent reverese. When the Tigris left Suez, 12,000 troops were waiting to be transmitted to Jidda, and 4020 at Cossier to be conveyed to the same destination.

It is rumoured that the Deputy Military Secretaryship has been offered to Capt. Coffin, now Paymaster in Mysore, and, failing his acceptance, will be conferred on Capt. Thorpe, who, in the opposite event, will succeed to the Paymastership.

A proposition is in circulation in the Madras army, to purchase a piece of plate, value 1000 guineas, to be presented to Sir C. Metcalfe, as a token for his liberality in furnishing Mr. Curnin with the means of going to England, in order to secure to the Military Service of the Company the benefit of the retiring Fund.

The Madras Courier gives an account of the proceedings of the Court Martial assembled at Bangalore for the trial of Soobroyah, late head writer in the Commissariat Department at that station. This trial has excited very great interest at the other Presidency, chiefly in consequence of a writ of habeas corpus having been issued from the Supreme Court, for the purpose of bringing him before that tribunal; which writ, it is believed, the Government intend to resist, for the sittings of the Court Martial did not commence till after the arrival of this writ at Bangalore. Its proceedings have been suspended, to give time for a reference to the Presidency as to the legality of an objection by the prisoner against the court's taking cognizance of any alleged offence committed more than three years ago. The Sudder, it seems, was consulted upon this point, in anticipation of this objection, and the opinion of the Judges of that court was sent to Bangalore for the guidance of the members of the Court Martial.

The Hon. Mr. Elliott has applied to be relieved from the Office of Postmaster-General, on the 22d December, preparatory to his intended departure for Europe in the Lord Hungerford. Mr. Sidlons will for the third time assume charge of the Post-office.

An Act passed the legislative Department of Fort William, on the 7th of December, declaring the issue of a new copper coinage from the Bengal Mint, consisting of a Pie, weighing 33¼ grains Troy, and nearly corresponding to the peice of five Cash or one Pice of the Madras currency; a Pice, weighing 100 grains Troy, about 1¼ Doodie,; 15 Cash or quarter-Anna; a Double Pice, weighing 200 grains Troy, 30 cash 3 Doodies, or half-Anna. There is no allusion made in the act to the copper currency of the Madras or Bombay Presidencies; but it is provided that "no copper coin shall be a legal tender in any part of the Company's territory, except for the fractional part of a rupee."

Sir R. O'Callaghan, Com.-in-Chief, returned to the Presidency on December the 20th.

Report speaks favourably of the improvement in the health of Sir Frederick Adam since his arrival on the hills, but there is no reason to suppose that any improvement will lead to his return to Madras.

It is rumoured that instructions have been received from the Court of Directors, to reinstate Capt. Douglas in the Presidency of Tanjore.

The remarks on the Court Martial of Assist.-Surg. T. Hunter, evince on the part of the Commander-in-Chief, a determination against every species of partiality, and that the duty of the army shall be conducted regularly. The uncompromising penalty of total disapproval and instant dissolution which has accompanied this deviation from correct procedure, whether on the part of the General Officer or of the Court, will act as a warning to others.

THE ROYAL MARINES AND PRIZE-MONEY.

Sir,—In last week's number, your correspondent Tristram has been pleased to comment upon my letters on the subject of Prize Money; he has advanced nothing new, but only recapitulated the arguments urged by you to reply to my first letter; even the lowbred jests on the Royal Marines claim not the merit of originality, and I cannot but regret that one professing to be of rank in the Navy Service should have written in a style so devoid of that courtesy which should be the distinguishing characteristic both of the officer and the gentleman. But, without dwelling on the manner, I will remark, on the matter of his letter, that although he may undervalue the services of Field Officers of Marines when landed to storm batteries or works, previously cannonaded by the fleet, still that service is one of difficulty and danger, nor is the path to success always as smooth as he supposes. He advances an opinion that I should have abstained from writing until a declaration of war, as only slavers, pirates, or smugglers are taken in time of peace; but surely Tristram must have forgotten that the battle of Navarin was fought during the peace, and that the money voted by Parliament was issued as Prize Money to the persons engaged in that action.

Since the close of the last war, a mighty power has existed, which will probably enhance the value of maritime superiority. The late struggle for the Peninsular throne called into action the steam-engine for warlike purposes, and its use was not overlooked by one, of whose talents (both naval and military) his country may justly be proud. Without pledging myself to maintain the critical accuracy of my statements, I have every reason to believe that I am substantially correct when I assert that, while the Pedro squadron were resting at Lisbon, after the action which ssayed the naval power of Don Miguel, the Admiral, Count Cape Saint Vincent, quitted the Tegus in a steamer ith about 500 Portugoese Marines; he was joined off the ver Minho by a frigate and some small vessels, landed and ook Caminho, Valencia, Visna, and Villa do Conde; uring the whole of this time, the Marines were borne on he books of a ship, and would, according to our regula- ons (although some miles inland), have been subject to aval discipline. A Field Officer, if employed, would, by he present regulations, have shared less than a Commander, nd have had the additional mortification of knowing that is name being still upon the ship's book, and his rations rnished by the Naval Department, was the sole cause of is being deprived of those advantages to which, from his ong services and important duties, he would be justly en- tled. The department under which Marines may be laced in time of war would depend greatly on the natura f the services required; for the pay and rations of the en while embarked differ from those they receive while ubject to the military authorities, something under 4*d.* per ay being stopped in the former case for provisions, while d. is the stoppage agreeably to army regulation; these ifferent allowances would cause great inconvenience, if hen men in the habit of frequently disembarking for tem- rary service on shore, they were removed to a fresh de- artment, and the trouble attending such arrangement ould, while the system now pursued is continued, prevent eir discharge from the ship when their stay on shore was ot intended to be of long duration; but I cannot imagine at we ought in fairness to allow a state of things which, lthough very convenient to the Commissariat of both rvices, causes much fatigue and anxiety to the Command- g Marine Officer, to deprive him of a great portion of his rize-Money. A. C.

[We have a high respect for A. C.; on most occasions ave concurred in his opinions, and we therefore regret any mark of our friend Tristram which has the appearance f a want of courtesy. We know that a warmer advocate f the Naval Service than Tristram cannot be met with; nd his ability to judge on many important questions has en very generally acknowledged; but a man of buoyant pirits, and who has so frequently his pen in hand, must occa- sionally be "out of order," and we are certain that A. C. ould be the first to make due allowance for any trans- ression.—Ed.]

THE JUNIOR UNITED SERVICE CLUB.

Sir,—I wish through the medium of your valuable paper call the attention of the officers of the Army and Navy nerally, and of such of them particularly as are candidates r admission into the Junior United Service Club, to the ate of things relative to that institution as regards them- lves. I will state the facts. There are at this moment wards of 3000 officers whose names are entered on the books candidates for that Club; of whom about 150 may cal- late upon being selected annually. Say a few more, but I elieve this to be the average. What, may I ask, are the opes of the 2000 at the lower end of the list? My object writing this is to suggest, as one of the sufferers, the for- ation of another Club on the same, or, if possible, improved rinciples. Funds cannot be wanting, for even supposing nly half of the expectants (1500) were to be admitted at nce, at the rate of 20*l.* each (it is 30*l.*, I believe, to the resent Club), a sum of 30,000*l.* would be immediately vailable, which we will presume to be amply sufficient for e establishment of a most splendid club. Instead, how- ver, of 1500 members, I have no doubt that considerably ore than 2000 would gladly come forward, were the thing roperly taken up and proposed in a specific form.

May I call your attention, and that of your numerous aders to this interesting subject. "A man of no Club" an object of pity in these gregarious times; and however ey it may be, comparatively, to obtain admission into un- rofessional institutions of that nature, yet there can be no oubt that the general feeling among us is in favour of be- nging to a club composed of members of the United ser- ca. I should mention that having been proposed four ars ago, I have still upwards of 900 before me.

London, 15th April. An Officer of the Line.

[There can be no doubt of the success of an attempt to rm a supplementary United Service Club, if the parties ojecting it, say half-a-dozen, are men of high respectabili- y, well-known to the service, and who will devote to it eir best energies. We hope it will be attempted; such en might command any assistance in our power.—Ed.]

CASE OF LIEUTENANT DORNFORD, R.N.

[At the request of Commander Deare we give insertion the following letter. We have in another column offered few remarks on the subject.—Ed.]

Coast Guard Office, 14th April, 1836.

Sir,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of aturday's date, No. 120, referring me to the article which e appeared in a paragraph of the Naval and Military Gazette of the 2nd inst., in which you complain that a state- ent to the prejudice of your character has been circulated the subject of the Court of Inquiry recently held at Freshwater, upon charges preferred by you against Lieut. Dornford and the crew of that station. I have to inform you in reply, that not having seen the publication to which you refer, I am unable to judge what assertions may have been made in it, but I take with pleasure this opportunity of assuring you that I am perfectly satisfied with your con- duct, and most fully convinced that you were actuated by the best and most honourable motives on the occasion in question. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Wm. Bowles.

Capt. Deare, R.N., &c., &c., Cowes.

PROMOTION OF OLD PASSED MATES.

Sir,—The Navy will have seen with great satisfaction the announcement in your last paper of the promotion of three old Mates to the rank of Lieutenant. This, I trust, is an earnest of what the remaining 122 who have passed above five years may expect at the hands of the Earl of Minto, and particularly those whose names you have lately called attention to in your columns, including that of Mr. James Watson, as the peculiar claims of this young man to the protection of the First Lord of the Admiralty are almost precisely similar to those of Mr. Booth, the late Mate of the Challenger, who has so deservedly received a Lieutenant's commission. Marcus.

THE CAPTAIN-SUPERINTENDENTS OF DOCK-YARDS. QUERY—ARE THEY IN COMMISSION, EITHER DE FACTO OR DE JURE.

Sir,—We live in the days of anomalies, but though these events may pass for the instant unheeded, they may bring serious consequences hereafter. The Navy List for this month, published "by authority," places "the Ply- mouth yacht" out of commission. Notwithstanding this, I find it stated in this day's paper, that a Court-Martial has been held in Hamoaze during the past week, upon an officer of the Delight brig of war, and that Captain Ross, the Captain-Superintendent of the dockyard, was the president. If this be correct, I would beg to ask on board of what ship of his Majesty's navy was the gallant Captain's pendant legally flying? and further, I would inquire, how long is this extraordinary and highly objectionable system to be continued? Cato.

18th April, 1836.

[The yachts not having appeared as in commission for several quarters, we presume the pendant is flying on board some vessel in the Harbour.—Ed.]

COAST GUARD SERVICE.—(LETTER IX.)

Sir,—I have noticed, in the columns of your truly valu- able Gazette, several plans suggested for manning this Service; and the expedient has been for some time tried of appointing men-of-war's-men to it. I am, however, con- vinced it is not a proper service for such men, and I should indeed regret to see them generally so employed. The Coast Guard may be made a sort of Marine Police, or Sea Fencibles, useful in peace for the prevention of smuggling and the protection of property along the Coast, whether shipwrecked or not; and, in war, available for the purpose of manning batteries or protecting the villages and towns from the incursions of enemy's privateers' men. But I maintain it never can be made a service whence good sea- men may be drawn to man our ships of war in case of emergency; nor is it one to which the generality of tho- rough-bred sailors will ever become strongly attached.

A description of men, half fisherman and half labourers, of robust health and laborious habits, are physically best suited for its excessively arduous duties; and he is morally so; for, being a calculating person, knowing and feeling as he does the advantages of a fixed pay for himself and fa- mily, he becomes bound to the service by those ties of interest a man-of-war's-man is too reckless to take into account, he being too careering in his habits to keep stea- dily to the duties he is expected to perform, whatever be the sacrifice to himself.

I believe I am correct in stating that every Captain of a man-of-war regarded with a species of horror the several drafts of men they received from the late Blockade Service, although there were many valuable seamen amongst them; eventually good ones would but rarely enter, and the leaders were sent to Ireland to beat up for volunteers among the starving population of that country, whatever their previous habits of life, in order to keep up the number of men ne- cessary to guard the Coast.

So much for the prejudice of some of our best officers against anything like Custom-House duties for our seamen, and so much for the dislike of the seamen themselves to those duties when they know what they absolutely are. Whoever first proposed that good seamen from our ships of war, on being paid off, should be appointed to the Coast Guard, could have known but little of the active duties of it, or most certainly would have seen that the appointment of boatman was no boon to bestow on the honest and de- serving tar; and that the consequences which would result to him from his previous habits and peculiar character would be seriously injurious in many particulars.

The duty of a boatman of the Coast Guard is more ha- rassing than is supposed; for, on smuggling districts, it is no unusual thing for the men during the winter months to be on the beach from five at night (sometimes earlier) till nine next day (this is especially the case on the coasts of Kent, Sussex, Suffolk, and Norfolk) without any intermis- sion of rest, or any place to shelter under, however incle- ment the weather, and for fourteen or fifteen nights in suc- cession. They may then possibly have a respite of a night or so, but it is folly to talk of only having a small propor- tion of the crew out during moonlight nights, when the smugglers, who are the most ingenious fellows imaginable in their manœuvres, frequently sink contraband cargoes near the shore (particularly if the coast [illegible]da with situa- tions) that they may land them during light nights if there be but few men on the beach. [illegible] therefore, be seen that during the winter months the [illegible] out sixteen hours, sometimes more; but the remaining [illegible] of the four-and-twenty they have not exclusively [illegible]ves.: they are obliged to devote some part of their [illegible] cleaning their arms; have twice a-day to go [illegible] with their Lieutenant "sitter" to the watch-ho[illegible] A.M. and again P.M.—a ridiculously harassing duty—merely to sign their initials in the journal, however remote the watch- house may be from their residences, and simply because the Commanding Officer's word cannot be taken that his men are at their post, although he has to inspect them every night before they go out on duty. Then, again, they have to be drilled by their Lieutenant "sitter" at small arms and in the sword exercise, proficiency in which appearing to be the only test of the good discipline and efficiency of the stations, on occasions of the inspections by the Comp- troller-General or his deputy; and if the guard of honour I have already alluded to can only at such times go decently through their pretty bit of soldiering, then and there re- quired, all is considered right and the station in "crack" order; the nature or suppression of smuggling, and the facilities for it as to localities or other contingent circum- stances, being apparently considered as matters of minor in- stead of major import.

Talk of soldiering, indeed! common sense points out the absurdity of the farce enacted in this respect upon these so "state occasions," to use the phraseology of his Majesty's regulations with regard to the uniform directed to be worn by Naval Officers. Practising the men in the powder and ball exercise, by firing at a target, is of course proper and necessary in order to enable them effectually to act on the defensive in case of attack by armed smugglers; but with respect to the sword exercise, I can see no earthly use for it, except indeed it be for the pomp and parade exacted upon those "state occasions," and for this very simple rea- son it is not properly taught; the men can certainly draw up in a line and salute, go through the cuts and guards indifferently well, but I scarcely ever saw a man who knew anything of attack or defence. Cut one, and he will guard two; point quickly either 1st, 2d, or 3d, and he has quite as correct an idea of parrying properly as if he had never had a sword in his hand. The fact is, the men have not time, independently of their other duties, to be properly taught; the consequence is, they are only harassed to give them an imperfect knowledge of what they cannot beneficially avail themselves of. They have likewise to do whatever other day duties may be required of them. In the summer months the night duty is certainly not so harassing, but then the day duty is considerably increased, as some of them occasionally go on leave of absence; the duty conse- quently devolves on fewer hands.

The stations are generally from five to seven miles long; and upon an average (with the exception of the coasts of Kent and Sussex) there is one man to guard one mile of ground. The watch-house is sometimes in the centre, but just as frequently placed near either extreme.

And now, Sir, allow me to describe to you the Coast- Guardman equipped and sallying forth for the night. Around his body he wears a canvas belt, bearing a brace of pistols, and some two or three dozen rounds of ammunition. Buckled round his loins suspends a cutlas, whilst over his shoulders is slung a musket and fixed bayonet.* In addi- tion to these he carries a flushing coat to keep him warm, and over it an oiled canvas one to keep him dry, making altogether, with his beach clothing and some other little et ceteras I have not described, a dead weight of between forty and fifty pounds, which he has to sustain and drag with him night after night. He has, too, almost in all cases, but especially if he be the extreme man, to walk over some miles of ground (generally loose sand or shingle) before he gets on his post; and by the time he arrives you may natu- rally infer that this living armoury (for it must appear the Board of Customs would rather frighten the smugglers by the arms they send out, than the use one man can possibly make of them) is tired, incapable of active exertion for a time, and excessively over-heated. The consequence is, he throws himself on the ground to rest, where he suddenly cools, which induces acute rheumatism, and those affec- tions of the heart with which almost every Coast Guardman is afflicted after a few years' services.

The unhappy outcasts of Israel were never more strongly narked in physiognomy than the old stager of a Coast-Guardman in his gait, arising from that rigidity of muscle ccasioned by constant exposure to the sudden extremes of xcessive heat and cold. After a time he becomes, to a certain extent, limb-bound; his step is heavy; his pace slow and measured; nor can he, if he be a middle-aged man, be ut into any very active exertion, without a most painful ffort to himself.

Now, Sir, as a sincere friend to the Navy, do conceive he horrible monotony and tedium of being constituted to emain on the shore the number of hours I have described, ight after night, and then say whether such a life is consonant with the habits of a man-of-war Jack, his peculiar onius, or that recklessness of character which distinguishes im, and makes him, in enterprise, superior to any other raman under the sun. To every arduous duty there must e, with ordinary minds, strong inducements, and whether hey be calculations of profit, or anything else, it little natters; suffice it to say that there are inducements strong nough with the men I have previously described to a proper iscbarge of their duties; but it is the glorious characteristic of the British tar never to calculate nor think. Put him on enterprise, and he will neither fear death nor danger; but he is seldom actuated by self-interest, and herefore should never be exposed to temptation he cannot esist, or put out of his legitimate sphere of action.

Had Jack to go against a fighting party of smugglers very night he would glory in it, and do his work manfully; but place him on the beach to walk quietly for hours together, and tell him he will be fined a guinea if he does not, and then leave him but an hour or two, and you will on your eturn find him asleep: inaction is his greatest enemy, nor an you have a guarantee that he will ever keep his post, unarmed "a shot remains in the locker," and he can have a spree. Hence, Sir, he will always be in difficulties and stripped of a portion of his pay. There is a generosity, too, about him, that makes him less suspecting than most other men, and more likely to be tampered with. He understands, and therefore thinks, nothing about the moral turpitude of smuggling, no: that the revenue suffers by it: indeed, as he sees there is some risk in it, and it partakes of a species of enterprise, he would, I believe, in most instances, rather that the smugglers escaped than otherwise, for the mere lark of the thing.

But, admitting the character of the man becomes entirely changed, and that he is acted upon by self-interest, so contrary to his nature, or coerced into a steady discharge of his duty, what then do you effect? Why, Sir, simply this:—In a few years the activity of the men you so employ will be gone; they may afterwards be taken on board ships of war as waisters or after-guard, but they will no longer be found active, wiry topmen. Each change of weather will bring its paroxysm of rheumatism, and, what may still be found quite as bad, they will, from their altered habits, have formed associations with the shore which will render them inimical to everything pertaining to a ship, and impatient of the necessary constraint of one.

Naval Club, 23rd March, 1836. NUMA.

SIR,—The remarks contained in your note to the letter of Claudius, in the Naval and Military Gazette of the 26th inst., induce me to address to you a few observations on the subject, and the opinions you have therein expressed upon the Coast Guard service. You state, that as regards the expense of the establishment, you deem that no saving can be made, because the naval officers belonging to it already receive but a miserable pittance for the arduous duties that they perform. I fully admit that these officers are very inadequately paid, but I would contend, Sir, that the system can be vastly improved, and a considerable saving effected, together with an increased production to the revenue, by a total reorganization of this service in every part. First and foremost, I would make it wholly a Naval establishment, subject to the laws and discipline of the Naval service, and consequently under the sole direction of the Admiralty. Next, I would cause the "forty-three" revenue cruisers belonging to it to be fast-sailing and perfectly efficient vessels, and I would make them constantly keep at sea whenever the weather would allow, not hovering from creek to creek along our own shores, as they now do, but to cruise, and to lie disguised occasionally in the mid-channel, and beyond it, and to board and examine everything they saw that was suspicious; and as to the tender yachts, I would at once sell them all, and even were they burnt, the country would "gain by the loss."

If the returns be obtained in detail which a friend of mine has promised to move for, the public will, at length, have their eyes opened to the folly of maintaining the Coast Guard establishment as at present constituted. Can it be believed, Sir, I would ask, that smuggling is checked, when it is a positive fact that in all the southern counties, and eastern ones also, I believe, French brandy and Hollands gin can be purchased at from about eleven to twelve, or, at most, fourteen shillings per gallon? Is not this an indisputable proof of the inefficiency of the Preventive Service? and as to silk and other similar produce of France, the amount seized by the Coast Guard is not, I am assured, a millionth part of that which is brought into the United Kingdom. For example, in one year, as Parliamentary returns have shown, I think it was in 1832 or 1833, the total value of the quantity seized by the Preventive Service was under a hundred pounds, and, if I mistake not, it was stated at eighteen pounds only! whilst, in the very same year, I believe, the house of LEAF and Co. paid, as a compromise only, twenty-eight thousand pounds, for that which had safely passed the revenue officers, and had reached the warehouse of these silk mercers in London unobserved! So much, then, for the real utility of the costly Coast Guard establishment, in which, however, I readily admit that all do their best, but the thing itself is, in my humble judgment, a complete failure. The returns which have already been laid on the table of the House of Commons, show that whilst in the last two years, from 1st Jan., 1828, to 1st Jan., 1830, the cost of the Coast Guard service amounted to ABOVE TWO MILLIONS AND A HALF, that is to say, agreeably to the returns, 2,640,000*l.*, the total value of the seizures made by it, including those of the revenue cruisers, did not exceed 304,561*l.* 2*s.* 1*l.*! All further comments upon these facts would be superfluous. The country will now expect from Lord Minto and his colleagues an early and complete amendment of the existing system, and I am assured that the able and convincing letters of Numa must ensure this most necessary measure.

TRISTRAM'S TETE-A-TETE WITH THE SURVEYOR OF THE NAVY, ON THE MASTING OF SHIPS OF WAR.

FRIEND SYMONDS,—Most thou not recollect the social tête-à-tête which thou and I had together, in No. 86 of the Naval and Military Gazette, respecting the masting of the Barham and the Vernon? "Most certainly I do, my dear Tristram, for you are so entertaining in your agreeable company, you sing so cheerily, rhyme so satirically, (say the Field Officers of Marines and Assist.-Surgeons) and the young misses inquiring whether your waltz is not to be introduced at Almack's—that charming waltz, in which is "the figure which taketh away the speech of the belle," that it is quite impossible to forget a sentence which you have written, perhaps you have further remains to advance in support of your opinion upon the masting of these ships, so pray let me hear them."

With all my heart, friend Symonds, but first let me ask thee to read this extract from my letter—"Come, friend Symonds, if thou will mast the Barham for the experimental cruise, upon the principle of reason and tried experience, and give her (double-decked 80-gun ships' masts and yards (Salisbury's for instance), she will, under these appropriate masts, in any sea-way or wind (though perhaps not in a light breeze) beat the Vernon; but the Vernon shall beat the Barham after all, should thou—

'Trust not too much to thy own opinion,
Whilst thy vessel's under way,
Let good example bear dominion,
That's a compass will not stray.'"

What has been the result of the trial between these rival frigates? Why that the Barham beats the Vernon in light winds, but in a sea-way and strong winds goes to leeward, cannot carry sail—the Vernon boats her. It is obvious by the above extract that I fully anticipated this result, if both ships were masted as in 1834. Although the Barham's keel is much deepened, yet she must inevitably be crank, and go to leeward under her original 74's masts, yards, and sails, with deeper counter and heavier rigging, floating two feet less as a razé. Give the Barham or Alfred, as I have proposed, double-decked 50-gun ships' masts, yards, and sails, and extra ballast of the weight of the difference between the 50's and 74's equipment, thus keeping her present line of flotation. Can any seaman doubt that she will then be easier in a sea-way, stiff under sail, keep to windward, and sail better (being enabled to carry more sail) than now under her original masts, admitting the probability that she may not sail so fast in light winds? What a saving besides in "wear and tear" to thy country, friend Symonds!!!

Another extract I wish to offer for the last time to thy reconsideration. "The Vernon's foremast must not only be raked, but I submit she must be differently masted also: her mould impetuously demands it—a herring-bowed and herring-tailed ship or vessel, of whatever class or dimensions, must be eased in her leanest parts, the bow and the stern, a principle the Dutch act upon in their corvettes, which have the mainmast towering (in us apparently out of proportion) above the foremast; the Danes, also, in their frigates, the fleetest of the Fleet." Give her, then, a 64's bowsprit, foremast, and mizenmast, to ease the pitching and scuddling, and to prevent the bow being pressed into the sea* off the wind; but as a "turbot-beamed ship of 2,000 tons requires an immense mainmast, so let her have an 84's towering mainmast, topmast, yards, and sails, still spreading the same canvas as at present upon a wind; more sail off the wind when the head-sails do not draw. She will sail better in light winds, be an easier ship in bad weather, and at her anchors, and will beat the Barham, even when improved under a 60-gun ship's equipment.

* Vide No. 68—Observations on the loss of the 10-gun brig packets.

Thou hast not lost, friend Symonds, whenever thou hast attended to my well-meant observations. The whipping out of the mizen mast, so ably, of thy lovely Columbine, has since shown the error in the mantling of that graceful performer on the sea. Did I not say "that thou failedst by not giving that above board beautiful model a proportionable breadth in the bottom, under the mizen mast; that all thy error lay." Je prendrai la liberté de t'en parler une à l'heure; that time is come. I now take the liberté to tell thee that not a vessel of thy peculiar construction, under 450 tons, will carry safely, in all weathers, a mizen-mast, unless reduced with the foremast and bowsprit, to a rate below her own; but they make the finest and the safest brigs that ever swam. Since the Star's disaster, thou secst again the necessity of easing thy vessels forward and aft. I am rejoiced to see all the water-sprites, thy new packets, brig-rigged, with reduced and raking foremasts. Lastly, friend Symonds, let me ask, didst thou not rig the cutter Basilisk into a ketch as a compliment to my opinion? does she not sail inimitably well? and is she not a safer and a handier vessel in any sea or weather since her "transmogrification;" then why not transmogrify all the spar-sprigging cutters into ketches? A cutter, thou knowest, will not, in a gale and a heavy sea, as in the Bay of Biscay, keep to. Even in the North Sea, a cutter is, for her size, the most expensive vessel in the Navy. The Dwarf, in the war, carried away three bowsprits in a voyage from the Nore to the Downs. Let any King's cutter come in contact with an object—ship, rock, shore, or heavy sea; disaster of some kind is sure to follow; the jibing of the boom in a strong breeze is fatal either in boom, mast, or horse. The Cameleon was run down in a moment; the Swallow and Hound, in moderate weather, filled immediately on grounding on Weymouth Beach; and now the Quail, from a sea striking her on the quarter, (not keeping her bow to the sea when hove to,) lost her mast, was thrown on her beam ends, had sixteen souls washed overboard, the Surgeon drowned in his cabin, and was towed into Jersey a wreck. Had she been ketch rigged, would that sad accident have happened? The power of the lever in a cutter's mast, gaff, bowsprit, or boom, is lessened nearly one half when either spar is divided for a ketch; the saving would be immense, as many a spar would answer for a ketch and not for a cutter; besides, all our cutters of 160 tons, rotting in harbour, would be available for the suppression of the Slave Trade and for despatch vessels to Lisbon, or tenders to the Mediterranean fleet, and no more schooners or brigantines need be built until these vessels are run out.

Thou art truly unfortunate in thy ships having been on shore aground under various circumstances—the Vestal, Cleopatra, Pique, Snake, Racer, and Forester, have defied rugged shores and pointed rocks; but these accidents have proved the strength and superiority of their construction over that of thy predecessors.

In the mantling only of thy sea-nymphs hast thou lacked judgment, and given cause to thy traducers to spit and hiss so natural to the hoa tribe. Let them spit and hiss—still they cannot, thy fame is innoxious to their venom: reduce, friend Symonds, the bowsprits, foremasts, and mizenmasts of thy ships and corvettes, but increase the mainmasts of the ships only; the corvette's mainmasts touch not! brigs all under 450 tons; even the seventy-fours razéed double-decked fifties; ketch-rig all the large cutters;—then mayst defy the hatred of thy enemies, the envy of the School and self-interested pamphleteers, the malignity of that "Demon's Gazette," and the CAIN-quackery of "Doctor Faustus."

Then, whoever sees a ship or vessel of our Sailor-Surveyor's construction, whether the Vanguard, Vernon, Vestal, Columbine, Star, Harlequin, or Bonetta, behold a finished model of Naval Architecture!!! beauty, symmetry's, art's, perfection's self

On waves beneath her flowing."

Feel thy pulse, friend Symonds, after this tête-à-tête, and friendship throbs there for me, as mine here for thee, how happy will he the heart of thy faithful friend,

SALE OF SOLDIERS' NECESSARIES.

SIR,—In your Gazette of 3rd April, I read with pain and astonishment the letter signed Observator. Surely the writer could never have given himself one moment's time for consideration of the subject. It appears, according to his argument, that he would brand with the broad arrow and other marks, so as to be conspicuous, such articles of necessaries every soldier, whether of good or bad repute, whether a non-commissioned officer or otherwise, has in possession. All! all! are to be branded with no less degrading impress of infamy than a transported felon would receive on his being handed over to the governor of a convict hulk. Well then, indeed, may these last quoted unfortunate and miserable wretches exclaim in derision as they pass the soldier, "I would as soon almost be a soldier as what I am." All are doomed by Observator to the brand, whole battalions of Royal Artillery, divisions of Royal Marines, and regiments of cavalry and infantry, [illegible]

…uards not even excepted, all must suffer the same degra…tion. Doubtless the crime of a soldier selling his neces…ries (in a military point of view) is one of giant magni…de, and every reasonable expedient should be tried, to …deavour to put an end to such a system as your corre…ndent asserts exists to such an alarming extent in the …rrison of Woolwich, but then, by his reaching at the …ility, he is not to consign the well-conducted and deserv…g soldier to such a degradation, whereby he could not …gage in any amusement or recreation from his barracks …quarters, without the gaze of curiosity directed, or more …len the finger of scorn pointed at him. Surely Observator …treading wide of the path which the late Military Com…ission so strenuously recommends to the gracious consider…tion of our most beloved sovereign, as the means of ensuring more respectable class of recruits to enter the service.

Let us for a moment cast our attention to a portion of his …nishments that he would award for the crime of selling …cessaries, and which he so strongly recommends as a …eventative :—" If a delinquent should wilfully destroy or …ake away with his necessaries" (by the by, did he ever …er of a soldier destroying or making away with them …herwise), " he would subject him to a punishment of …2 months' imprisonment with hard labour," besides other …ther recommendations, much better in its way, I must …knowledge, than branding an old and faithful soldier. …ut let us look how will the young one's moral character …d ideas be improved and cultivated by his sojourn of 12 …onths' tread-mill in any his Majesty's gaols, for it is with …e young soldier that this crime solely exists. Will he be …nefitted by his 12 months' absence from his corps, or will …e be a terror to others? No; he is gone, but not even …issed or thought of by his comrades till his return. But …rely it has cured him of that and other evil propensities. …o, no; quite the contrary; he is initiated into every art …f swindling, robbery, and theft, and other crimes of a more …ep, and oft more deadly dye, and which before he never …reamt of, till at last he is thoroughly inured and hardened …it from repeated recitals of " hair breadth 'scapes," and …glorious deeds," related by those most atrocious, aban…oned, and worse than worthless characters, that when he …ins his regiment, instead of being in any degree reformed …om his evil habits, he is infinitely a worse soldier, and a …ore accomplished villain (being lost to all sense of shame) …an he was previous to committment. His sole delight is …rink and the worst of company, who sympathise with him …n his sufferings as long as any portion of what he has con…rived to save remains, and when that is gone, they are gone …en, and he again becomes a victim to his weakened and …ngenerated nature, chiefly brought on by the early contam…ination of a gaol, in companionship with thieves, rogues, …nd vagabonds, till, of necessity, he is then obliged to be …ansported from his native home, and having arrived by …is time to the years of discretion, he sees, when too late, …is folly.

In my most humble opinion, the military law, as at pre…ent constituted, and the existing regulations are sufficiently …rong, and in preference to the above, further I should …ecommend Observator to try what 120 hours' hard heavy …ack drill would effect; that is 20 days at six hours per …ay, under a good strict non-commissioned officer who will …ot play with them, nor let the grass grow under their feet, …o persevering in the American afloat system, by marching …hem at extended files of four paces distant from each other; …is with inspecting their necessaries twice in the six hours' …aily drill, with their parades, and giving them the benefit …f a dry room for meals and reflections, besides making them …o their duty in their regular turn, cannot fail to curing the …ost obdurate. It has also those advantages which Obser…ator's recommendations cannot have; the delinquent's …rvices are not lost to the regiment, nor are his comrades …ut to any additional duties by his absence. Likewise the …unishment, which is no joke, about 18 miles a-day in …eavy marching order, is for ever stating his would be accom…plices in the face. I have over and over again heard the …outest and most hardened declare they would rather take …00 lashes before breakfast, or three months' imprisonment, …han perform the above sentence. Another consideration, …is a truly military punishment for a military crime, and as …oon as the man has completed his sentence he is received …y his comrades with confidence, and not as the gaol bird, …hom a very good soldier endeavours to avoid.
